Dort, or Dordrecht, a city of South Holland on an island formed by the Meuse, which is here called the Merwe. The island was formed in 1421, in November of which year an inundation destroyed 72 villages and drowned 100,000 persons. In 1457 Dort was nearly destroyed by fire, and is further celebrated for an assembly of protestant clergy from all parts of Europe, in 1618—1619 called the synod of Dort, which condemned the tenets of Arminius. Here are several Lutheran and Calvinist churches, a fine council-house an excellent academy, and the mint of South Holland. It has a good harbour, and a great trade in corn, wine, and timber; of the latter immense rafts are floated hither from Andernach, in Germany. It was formerly the chief depository of Rhenish wines; but its commerce has much declined of late years, having been transferred to Rotterdam. The father of the celebrated De Witts was Burgomaster of Dort, and Vossius was once superintendent of its academy. The natural situation of Dort is such that it has never been taken by an enemy; but it surrendered to the French in 1795. It is 10 miles S. E. of Rotterdam. Long. 4. 45. E. lat. 51. 51. N. Pop. about 20,000.

Dortmund, a strong town of Westphalia, in a nook at the S. extremity of the upper bishopric of Munster. It was lately imperial, and is seated on the Emster, 15 m. S. W. of Ham, and 30 S. by W. of the city of Munster. Pop. about 4,000.

Doutekom, or Dentekom, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, with a foundery for bombs and cannon balls; seated south of the Yssel, 10 m. S. E. of Doesburg.

Douarenez, a town of France in the department of Finisterre, seated on a bay of the same name, at the entrance of the English channel, 8 m. N. W. of Quimper.

Douay, a city of France, formerly the capital of the department of Nord, with a fine arsenal, a foundery for cannon, a military school, a citadel, and three famous colleges; to which a great number of the catholic youths of England and Ireland are sent for education. It was taken by the Duke of Marlborough in 1710, and retaken by the French in 1712, after the suspension of arms. It is 110 miles N. by E. of Paris, 70 E. S. E. of Bologne, and 18 S. of Lisle, to which it is connected by a canal. It is the seat of a prefect, and in 1825 contained 18,854 inhabitants.

Doubs, a department of France, on the frontier of Neuchâtel in Switzerland. It comprises the eastern part of the late province of Franche Comte, and is watered by a river giving name to the department which falls into the Saône a little above Chalons. Doubs is a woody and mountainous district, interspersed with fertile vallies; the mountains yield a considerable supply of iron, the forests abundance of timber, whilst sheep and black cattle abound in the vallies, yielding a considerable supply of butter and cheese, the latter is celebrated by the name of gruyere; the vine is also cultivated with success, and to some extent; it has been proposed to unite the river Doubs with the Ille, falling into the Rhine, and thereby unite the waters of the north sea, with the Mediterranean. The department of Doubs is divided into four arrondissements; Besançon, 210 miles S. E. of Paris, is the capital; and the chief towns of the other three arrondissements are Baume, Pontarlier, and Montbelliard; there are two other considerable towns, viz. Quingey and Ornans.

Doue, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, with a considerable manufacture of druggets and tammies. Near it is a vast Roman amphitheatre, cut out of the solid rock. It is 9 miles S. W. of Saumur.

Dove, a river of Derbyshire, Eng. which rises in the Peak, near Buxton, parts the county from Staffordshire, and after a course of about 40 miles joins the Trent, 4 miles below Burton.

Dover, Straits of, between the S. E. point of England, and the N. W. extremity of France, leading from the Atlantic Ocean, through the English channel into the north sea; the narrowest part of the strait is about 20 English statute miles, and the two usual points of intercourse about 23 miles. Dover castle being in 1. 19. 7. and Calais lights in 1. 51. 1. of E. long. being a difference of 32 miles of long. which in the lat. of 51. is equal to 19 geographical or 23 English statute miles. The straits extend from the S. W. in a direction N. N. E. for about 44 m., intersected by the long. of 51. of N. lat.

Dover, Town of, which gives name to the preceding strait, is seated on the English coast, in the county of Kent, and is celebrated in every period of English history; by the ancient Britons it was called Dour; by the Romans Dubris, and by the Saxons Dorre; and the Romans regarded it as Clavis et refrugulum, totius regni—the lock and key of the whole realm. Dover may doubtless still be regarded as the great outlet and portal of the realm on the side of northern Europe, and from its peculiar local situation and advantages to be still entitled to high consideration. But as navigation has advanced towards perfection, and England advanced in her maritime ascendancy, in a relative sense, Dover has become an inconsiderable place, and in point of security and defence is very insignificant compared with either Portsmouth or Devonport; while Harwich, Southampton, ton and Falmouth vie with it, as points of egress and ingress to and from foreign parts, and since the application of steam to purposes of navigation, numerous visitors to and from France now proceed and arrive direct from and to the Thames at London, who used formerly to pass by way of Dover. Dover is, however, still (1831) the medium of conveyance for the mails, and of all messengers and travellers intent on despatch, between England and France, for whose accommodation packets proceed to and from Calais with every tide, and the intercourse is still very great, constituting the chief support of the town. It extends for near a mile along the shore, and is divided into two parts; the eastern part is called the town, at the extremity of which, on an eminence, is the castle, supposed to have been first founded by Julius Cæsar, the west part is called the pier, and is overhung by a range of chalk cliffs, which seem to threaten an immediate overwhelming of all below; the heights 300 to 350 feet, above the level of the sea, are fortified with trenches, subterraneous works and casements for the accommodation of 2,000 men, and in clear weather present fine prospects of the coast of France. Dover is one of the (five) cinque ports vested with peculiar privileges: by the 32 Hen. VIII. cap. 48. On condition of furnishing a number of ships equipped and manned for the national defence, one of the privileges was, each port returning two members to parliament, by the title of Barons of the Cinque Ports. Dover post office is 71 m. S. S. E. of London Bridge, by way of Canterbury, from which it is distant 16 miles. It is divided into two parishes, with two weekly markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The castle is a very extensive edifice, and interesting from its antiquity, and the historical events connected with it; besides the castle and two churches, the other public buildings are a town hall, theatre, military hospital, victualling office, and custom house: the business of the latter is confined almost exclusively to the inspecting the baggage of the passengers arriving by the packets. The harbour will admit ships of 500 tons burthen; but the town carries on little or no foreign trade. Pop. in 1811, 9,074, and in 1821, 10,327.

Dover, p.t. Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 1,042.

Dover, p.t. Strafford Co. N. H. 10 m. fr. Portsmouth on the falls of the Cochecho, a stream running into the Piscataqua. The falls have several pitches, one of which is 40 feet perpendicular, affording a vast water power, which has been applied to manufacturing purposes. The cotton manufactories produce 10,000 yards of shirting a week. The iron works roll and slit 1,000 tons of iron annually, and make 700 tons of nails. New establishments are also in progress, and the mill sites here are numerous. Dover is one of the oldest towns in the state. Pop. 5,449.

Dover, p.t. Norfolk Co. Mass. Pop. 407.

Dover, p.t. Dutchess Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,198.

Dover, p.t. Kent Co. Del., the capital of the state of Delaware. It is situated upon a small stream falling into the Delaware, and is handsomely laid out and built. The houses are mostly of brick and in the centre of the town is a spacious square surrounded by the State House and public offices.

* * There are six other towns called Dover in the United States, viz. in Monmouth Co. N. J., York Co. Pa., Cuyahoga, Athens and Tuscarawas Cos. Ohio and Stuart Co. Ten.

Douglas, a village of Lanarkshire, Scotland, seated on a river of the same name, falling into the Clyde, 29 m. S. S. E. of Glasgow on the road to Carlisle. Pop. in 1821, 2,195.

Douglas, the chief town of the Isle of Man, seated at the mouth of two united streams, on the E. side of the island, in the lat. of 54. 4. N. and 4. 36. of W. long. Pop. in 1821, 6,054. See Man.

Douglas, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. Pop. 1,742

Douglas, Cape, a promontory on the W. coast of America, the W. point of the entrance to Cook's Inlet. Its summit forms two very high mountains. Long. 153. 30. W. lat. 58. 56. N.

Doullaincourt, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne, 10 m. S. W. of Joinville.

Doullens, a town of France in the department of Somme, with two citadels; seated on the Autie, 15 m. N. of Amiens; it is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1825, 3,504.

Doune, Donn, or Donne, a town of Scotland, in the parish of Kilmadock, Perthshire, with the ruin of a huge square castle, whose tower is yet full 80 feet in height. Here is a manufacture of pistols; also an extensive work called the Adelphi cotton-mill. It is seated on the Teith, 8 m. N. W. of Sterling, and 32 S. W. of Perth. In 1821 the parish contained 3,150 inhabitants.

Dourdan, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, with a manufacture of silk and worsted stockings: seated on the Orge, 25 m. S. W. of Paris.

Douro, a river of the Peninsula, rising near Soria, in old Castile, in the long. of 2. 30. W. It rises to the W. of Soria, and from thence runs S. for about 20 miles, when it takes a course nearly due W. past Aranda into Leon, past Zamora to the frontier of the Portuguese province of Trazos Montes; it then takes a course S. S. W. past Miranda, and for about 60 miles forms the boundary between Leon in Spain and Tras os Montes: it then takes a course N. by W. dividing the latter province and Entre Douro e Minho from Beira, falling into the sea a short distance below Oporto. The meridional distance from its source to its entrance into the sea is about 300 miles, while the course of the stream will be near 400 miles; it receives numerous tributary streams both from the N. and S.

Dowlatabad, formerly called Amednagur, a province of the Deccan of Hindoostan; intersected by the Godavery river, bounded on the N. by Candeish, W. by the Gauts, S. by Visiapour and Golconda, and E. by Berar. Aurungabad is the capital.

Dowlatabad, one of the celebrated hill-forts of Hindoostan, and formerly the capital of the preceding province. The fort is 420 feet above the level of the plain. In the beginning of the 14th century the Emperor Mahomet III. caused a great number of the inhabitants of Delhi, to emigrate S. of the Godavery river, and attempted to make Dowlatabad the seat of government of his empire, but the project did not succeed, and his successor returned to the ancient capital Dowlatabad nevertheless continued an important place and capital of the province, until the time of Aurungzebe, who fixed his residence at Aurungabad (which see), about 10 miles to the S.; it is now included in the territories of the Nizam of the Deccan.

Down, a maritime county on the N. E. coast of Ireland, opposite to the Isle of Man, it is bounded on the N. by the Lough of Belfast, which divides it from the county of Antrim, S. by Carlingford Bay, which divides it from the county of Louth and on the W. it is bounded by the county of Ar

agh. It is 53 miles in extreme length from S. W. to S. E. and about 25 in mean breadth, the N. E. being indented by Strangford Lough, containing about 100 square miles of surface; a canal from Carlingford Bay to the Lough Neagh, bounds the W. end of the county, and the river Lagan filling into Belfast Lough, waters the northern side; the river Bann intersecting the S. W. Down is the fifth county in Ireland, in order of population, both collectively and relatively, and although it is one of the least productive counties in the country, a great portion of its surface being occupied as bleach grounds, the industry of the inhabitants in the linen manufactures, enables it to command an equal or greater share of comforts than in most other parts of Ireland; the S. part of the county is mountainous, Slieve Donard Peak rising to the height of 2,800 feet above the level of the sea; various minerals are found in different parts of the county, but none are worked to advantage, the linen manufactures absorbing all the labour and exertion of its inhabitants, about an equal portion of whom are Protestants, emigrants, or descendants of emigrants from Scotland. Remains of antiquity are common in every part of the county. The principal towns are Downpatrick (the capital and a bishop's see), Newton Ardes, Bangor, Donaghadee, Killyleagh, Hillsborough, Dromore, (another bishop's see), and Newry, at the head of Carlingford Bay, which is the largest and most considerable trading town in the county. For extent of surface, divisions, &c. see Ireland.

Down, or Downpatrick, the chief town of the preceding county, is pleasantly located on the banks of a stream falling into the S. end of Strangford Lough, 74 miles N. N. E. of Dublin, and 23 S. by E. of Belfast; it a bishop's see in conjunction with Cannor, in the county of Antrim, and besides the cathedral has three other places of religious worship; its other public buildings consists of a diocesan school, hospital, town hall, court house and goal. Down is celebrated as the supposed place of interment of Ireland's adopted saint, St. Patrick, and a well in the vicinity dedicated to that saint, is held in high veneration. Down participates in the linen manufacture; its population in 1821, amounted to 4,123, and the parish to 4,417 more. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Downe, a township in Cumberland Co. N. J.

Downham, a town in Norfolk, Eng. seated on the side of a hill, about a mile from the Ouse. It has a great trade in butter, which is sent up the river in boats to Cambridge, and thence conveyed in waggons to London, under the name of Cambridge butter. It is 11 miles S. of Lynn, and 86 N. by E. of London, and is celebrated for a foundation of church and turret bells, of a peculiarly harmonious tone. Pop. in 1801, 1,512, and in 1821, 2,044.

* There are four villages of the same name in different parts of England.

Darrington, p.v. Chester Co. Pa.

Doens, a famous road for shipping, on the E. coast of Kent, between the North and South Foreland. See Godwin Sands, and Deal.

Downton, a borough in Wiltshire, Eng. seated on the Avon, 6 m. S. E. of Salisbury, and 88 W. S. W. of London. Pop. in 1821, 3,112.

Drabburgh, a town of Carinthia, on the river Drave, near the frontier of Tyrol.

Dracut, a town of Massachusetts, in Middlesex county on the N. bank of the Merrimac, at Pawtucket falls, 28 m. S. W. of Exeter, and 30 N. N. W. of Boston. Pop. 1,615.

Dradate, or Dorho, a town of Nubia, with a harbour on the Red Sea, and wells of good water in the vicinity. It is 36 miles N. N. W. of Suakem.

Draguignan, a town of France, capital of the department of Var, 10 miles N. W. of Frejus, 40 N. E. of Toulon, and 420 S. S. E. of Paris. Pop. in 1825, 8,616.

Drakenstein, an extensive valley in the Cape of Good Hope territory. See Stellenbosch.

Drane, a town of Macedonia, near the ruins of Philippi, and about 20 m. N. N. E. of Embol.

Drainburgh, a town of Brandenburg, in the N. part of the New Mark, seated on the Drage, 15 m. E. by N. of New Stargard.

Drammen, the two towns of Stromsøe and Bragnas, on each side of the Drammen river, falling into the bay of Christiana, in Norway, are called Drammen. See Stromsøe.

Drancesville, p.t. Fairfax Co. Va.

Drave, a river which rises in Germany, at Innichen in Tyrol, flows through Carinthia and Stiria, then along the confines of Slavonia and lower Hungary, and after a course of about 300 miles joins the Danube a little below Essig.

Drayton, a town in Shropshire, England, with a market on Wednesday, it is seated on the banks of the river Tern, at the N. E. end of the county, on the road from Shrewsbury to Newcastle. It has 3 tan yards, 2 paper mills, and 2 manufactures of hair cloth; 151 miles N. W. of London. Pop. in 1801, 3,162, and in 1821, 3,700.

* There are 16 villages called Drayton, and 9 Draycott, in different parts of England. Dray is a Saxon word, but its application to the names of places is not very obvious; the etymologist must draw his own inferences respecting it.

Dresden, a city of Germany, and the capital of the kingdom of Saxony. It is divided by the Elbe into the old and new town, which are united by a grand bridge, and surrounded by strong fortifications. It has a castle, an academy of painting and sculpture, and a magnificent church for the Roman catholics, with a tower 300 feet in height, one Calvinist, and 11 Lutheran churches. The houses are built of freestone, almost all of the same height; and though the palaces are few, it is deemed the handsomest city in Germany. The palaces of Holland and Japan are full of curiosities from that country and China; and the picture gallery may claim precedence over every individual gallery in Italy. The royal palace has a tower 355 feet in height. Dresden is deservedly celebrated for its manufacture of porcelain, the repository for which is in the castle. Here are also manufactures of gold and silver lace, jewelry, paper-hangings, and wind-instruments of music, &c. &c. The arsenal contains specimens of the first invented fire arms, and a curious collection of arms of all ages and countries. The other public buildings of Dresden are the house of assembly of the Saxon diet, an academy for the young nobility, a military school, and several edifices for charitable institutions. It was taken by the king of Prussia in 1745, and again in 1756, but retaken in 1759; and it was bombarded by him in 1760, for nine days, when he was obliged to raise the siege. Dresden is further rendered memorable for its neighbourhood being the principal theatre of operations between the allied and French armies, during the greater part of the year 1813. The Russian and Prussian troops having entered it in the month of March, was obliged to quit it in May, after the battle of Lutzen; and Bonaparte afterwards held his head-quarters here for a long time. On the 26 and 27th of August of the same year, the allied army, 200,000 strong, under prince Schwartzburg, attempted to carry the town by assault; but Bonaparte having arrived from Silesia, with his guards, the night before the attack, repulsed them with great loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners. It was at this time, the celebrated general Moreau, received a mortal wound, while in conversation with the Emperor of Russia. The allies, in consequence of this disaster, immediately commenced their retreat into Bohemia; and the French being too eager to profit by their success, had sent general Vandamme with about 30,000 men, into the mountains of that country to cut off their retreat. But on their arrival near Culm, they were assailed on all sides; and after a furious conflict, the whole army was nearly destroyed, and the commander with the whole of his staff were made prisoners. On the 6th of November, after the battle of Leipzig, marshal St. Cyr who remained in Dresden with a French force of 39,000 men, after a fruitless attempt to negotiate a retreat, was compelled to yield to an unconditional surrender. Prior to the spoliation by Prussia in 1756 Dresden contained about 65,000 inhabitants, from which period it progressively declined down to 45,000 in 1810, but since the restoration of peace in 1814, it has gradually increased, and in 1825 contained again a population of 54,000. In the vicinity are several fine gardens and public promenades, which serve to render Dresden one of the most agreeable abodes in the north of Europe. It is in the lat. of 51. 2. 50. N. and 13. 43. of W. long 230 miles N. N. W. of Vienna, 240 N. N. E. of Munich, 100 S. by E. of Berlin, 190 E. of Cassel by way of Leipzig, from which it is distant 55 miles. See Pilnitz and Saxon.

Dreux, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire, with a considerable manufacture of cloth for the army. It is seated on the river Blaise, at the foot of a mountain, 45 m. W. by S. of Paris. It was burnt by Hen. II. of England, in 1186, taken by Hen. V. in 1421, and is further celebrated for a battle fought in its neighbourhood, on the 18th of December 1562, between the army of the King of France and the protestants under the Prince of Conde, when the latter were defeated. It surrendered to Hen. IV. of France in 1593, and is now the seat of a prefect, with a pop. of 6,032 in 1825.

Dreuxville, v. Cheshire Co. N. H. included in Walpole.

Driesen, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark, on an island, formed by the river Netze, near the Polish frontier, 20 miles E. of Landsberg.

Drifbor, t. Norway, in Drontheim; 46 m. E. Romsdal.

Driffield, Great, t. Eng., in the east Riding of Yorkshire, on a canal which joins the river Humber; 23 m. N. Hull, 30 E. York. Long. 0. 20. W. lat. 54. 6. N. Pop. 1,857. Here are manufactures of woolen and cotton, both lately introduced, and a weekly market on Thursday.

Drighlington, t. Eng., in the W. Riding of Yorkshire; 5 m. from Leeds. Pop. 1,355.

Drinana Point, cape, Ireland, on N. coast of the bay of Donegal; 3 m. S. Killbegs.

Drin, or Drinaus, r. which rises in S. W. part of Servia, and runs into the Save, 32 m. W. Sabaoz.

Drinacu, r. Servia, which runs into the Save, 15 m. W. Sabacz.

Dringenburg, t. Prussia Minden; 6 m. E. S. E. Paderborn. Pop. 734.

Dringfort, t. Prussia; 9 m. N. E. Rastenburg.

Drino Nero, or Black Drino, or Drilo, r. Eu Turkey, which rises in the lake near Akrida; joining the Drino Bianca, it takes the name of Drino only, and runs into the Adriatic; about 8 m. S. W. Alessio, forming a bay at its mouth, called the Gulf of Drino. It is navigable nearly 100 m. for large rafts.

Drissa, a town of Russia, in the government of Polotsk, at the conflux of the Drissa with the Dwina, 20 m. W. N. W. of Polotsk, and 272 S. of Petersburg.

Drista. See Silistria.

Drivastro, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, 20 m. N. E. of Dulcigno.

Drogheda, a seaport on the S. coast of Ireland, seated at the head of a bay on the banks of the river Boyne, which here divides the counties of Meath and Louth, Drogheda, being a town and county of itself, with a separate jurisdiction. It is a respectable town, and carries on a considerable trade in butter, grain, and coarse linens; the harbour is tolerably commodious, but its entrance is impeded for ships of large burthen by a bar. It is divided into three parishes; Oliver Cromwell took it by storm in 1649, and it was near here where the decisive battle was fought between the forces of William and James in 1691, when the latter were defeated. See Boyne. Drogheda is 24 m. N. of Dublin. Pop. in 1821, 18,300. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Droitwich, a borough in Worcestershire. Here are famous salt springs, which were in great celebrity at the period of the Norman conquest; from these is made much peculiarly fine white salt. It is seated on the Salwarp, 7 m. N. N. E. of Worcester, and 116 W. N. W. of London. It is connected with the river Severn by a canal, 7 m. in length, and the Birmingham and Worcester canal runs at a short distance, and by this means the salt is distributed over all parts of the kingdom. Droitwich is divided into four parishes, and returns two members to parliament. Pop. in 1821, 2,176.

Drome, a Department of France, takes its appellation from the river Drome, which crosses it, bounded by the department of the Upper Alps, Lower Alps, and Vaucluse; the Rhone bounds it on the west. The country is high, full of mountains and valleys; the soil in many parts unproductive. Valence is the capital. Pop. 253,372. Protestants, 34,000.

Drome, or Druna, a r. of France, which rises near Valrome, passes by Die, Pontaix, Saillans, Crest, Livron, &c., and falls into the Rhone about 11 m. S. Valence.

Dromo, a small island in the Grecian Archipelago. Long. 24. E. lat. 39. 28. N.

Dromore, a town and parish in the county of Down, Ireland; the town is a bishop's see, the palace of the prelate is a stately edifice. It is 20 m. W. by N. of Downpatrick, and 66 N. of Dublin, on the road to Belfast. Pop. of the town in 1821, 1,861, and of the parish 12,760 more; there is another parish and town of the same name in the county of Tyrone. Pop. of the town 415, and of the parish 7,698.

Dronero, a town of Piedmont, at the foot of the Alps, on the river Maira, 15 m. S. S. W. of Saluzzo, and about the same distance W. by N. of Cuni. It contains 6 churches, and has a fine bridge across the river. Pop. about 6,500.

Drontheim, the most northerly of the four great diocesses of Norway, extending from the lat. of 62. 5. to 65. 20. N. being about 80 miles in mean breadth; it is intersected by several small streams, and the coast is indented with numerous inlets and bays, and flanked with numerous islands; although a dreary district, the industry of the inhabitants counteracts in a considerable degree the inhospitality of its position and climate. It is divided into 80 parishes containing a population of about 250,000, having considerably increased during the last and present century. The chief town of the same name is seated on a point of land, formed by a deep inlet, about 40 m. from the open sea, in the lat. of 63. 26. N. and 10. 22. of E. long., 253 m. N. E. of Bergen, about the same distance due N. of Christiania, and 360 N. W. of Stockholm. It was the residence of the ancient kings of Norway, and is now the principal trading town of the diocese, and exports a very considerable quantity of fir timber and deals, some pitch, tar, peltry, &c. It is the residence of the bishop of the diocese; the cathedral is a stately edifice; the houses are mostly built of wood, but the streets are commodious, and in the summer season this town is not an unpleasant residence. Pop. about 9,000.

Drosendorf, a town of Austria, with an ancient castle, seated on the Teya, on the frontier of Moravia, 10 m. N. of Horn.

Drossen, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark, 14 m. S. E. of Custrin.

Drum, the name of two parishes in Ireland, one in the county of Mayo, and the other in Roscommon; there are also about thirty other parishes, and several villages in different parts of Ireland beginning with Drum, such as Drumara, Drumboe, Drumcannon, &c. &c.

Drumsna, a town of Ireland, in the county of Leitrim, seated on the E. bank of the Shannon, 4 m. S. E. of Carrick, and 73 from Dublin, it is rather a neat town. Pop. in 1821, 606.

Drusenheim, a town of France in the department of Lower Rhine, seated on the Motter, near the Rhine, 15 m. N. by E. of Strasburg.

Druses, a community of people in Syria, which had its origin in a fanatical persecution of a caliph of Egypt, against the Mahomedans. About the beginning of the 11th century, the caliph and his prophet (a native of Persia), both met a violent death, and such of their disciples (the Druses) as adhered to their tenets, fled for a refuge to the mountains of Lebanon, and Antilibanus; from whence they successively made war against the Crusaders, the Sultans of Aleppo, the Mamelukes and Turks; they were effectually subdued by Amrath III. in 1588, who imposed a regular tribute upon them, appointing an emir or chief whom he invested with executive power, and held him responsible for the payment of the tribute. This organization, however, the Druses soon turned against the Turks, with whom they have since been involved in repeated conflicts with alternate success; they still maintain a nominal independence, occupying about 70 miles of coast from Saide the ancient Sidon, to Gebail or Djebail Bairut or Berut (whicli see) being their chief station. Their number is estimated at about 120, 000, all the males being trained to arms. Their language is the Arabic; and they now appear to have but little religion of any kind, praying indifferently in Christian churches or Turkish mosques.

Dryburg, or Drburg, a town in the Prussian States, seated near the source of a stream, falling into the Weser, in the principality of Paderborn; it is pleasantly located and distinguished for its baths; 10 m. E. of the town of Paderborn.

Dublin, a maritime and fertile county on the E. coast of Ireland, being about 30 miles in extreme length, and 13 in mean breadth. Its capital a city of the same name is the capital of all Ireland, and in extent of population and architectural display is the second city of the British dominions in Europe, but in other respects inferior to either Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, or Edinburgh. For divisions, extent of superficies, population, &c. of the county of Dublin. See Ireland.

Dublin City, the capital of Ireland, is seated on the banks of the river Liffey, at its entrance into a bay of about 40 square miles in surface. The city lies up the river, about a mile from the bay, which is much more remarkable for its picturesque beauty on either side than for its navigable uses. This bay has been compared, rather idly, by some person in the first instance, with that of Naples; and after him, still more idly, by a thousand others. It forms a vast semicircular basin about eight miles in diameter, perilous from its shallows and breakers; which are, however, counteracted by a long and massive central mole running into it, with a lighthouse at its extremity, and two piers on either side at its entrance. A bold peninsular promontory, called the hill of Howth, shelters it on the north, having a range of lowlands from its base skirting the sea, luxuriantly wooded and varied, exhibiting here and there, a church, a mansion, or a pretty villa; whilst, on the south, it is bordered, at a short distance, by the picturesque and beautiful range of hills called the Wicklow mountains.

Dublin resembles the cities to be met on the continent much more than those of England, in the frequent juxtaposition of magnificence and meanness. The late Mr. Curran compared it to a man with a new coat over a dingy under dress. Its square area of about two miles and a half contains more noble edifices, wretched habitations, and public charities, than will be found within the same compass elsewhere. It is in form a rectangle, divided by the river into two nearly equal parts. We will suppose the spectator in the open space called College-green, on the left bank of the river and eastern side of the city. Looking eastward, he beholds the Bank of Ireland, formerly the parliament house, on his left; and the University immediately facing him, with a bronze equestrian statue of king William between

The Bank of Ireland presents a noble, simple, and really classic mass of Grecian architecture. Its principal front is a grand Ionic colonnade, 147 feet long, resting on an elevated plane, reached by a flight of steps.

The front of the University, at a right angle with the Bank, is a long and florid Corinthian façade; the central columns surmounted by a pediment, and the whole terminated by Corinthian pavilions, with coupled pilasters of the same order. An octagonal vestibule, with the museum on the right, leads from the town into the first of three squares, which is built of hewn stone, and contains three principal buildings;—the chapel, presenting a beautiful Corinthian colonnade, on the left; the theatre or examination-hall on the right, exactly corresponding; and beyond this square, on the left hand, forming the smaller side of a rectangle, with a simple pilastered front, the hall in which the fellows and students of the whole university dine. The library, though inferior to to many others in the number of volumes, is one of the most complete and precious in Europe; containing rich materials of bibliography. It consists of two compartments; the ancient library of the university, entered at one end, and presenting a long and noble vista, with, on either side, a gallery and balustrade above. The books are admirably arranged in stalls beneath. At the remote end is a handsome pavilion, containing the Fagel library, a gem in its kind, once the family library of the Fagels, Grand Pensionaries of Holland, and purchased by the university. There is, again, archbishop Usher's library, left by him to the university, of which he was the founder,—containing many books noted and commented on with his own hand. There is, lastly, a collection of valuable, or at least curious, manuscripts, Persian, Arabic, Chinese, and Irish. Graduates of the university only, as in the Bodleian, have the privilege of reading; but studious strangers are admitted, upon a proper introduction to the provost and board. The chapel and theatre were built from the designs of sir W. Chambers; the latter contains a monumental marble group in memory of provost Baldwin, full of grace, sentiment, and beauty, and not sufficiently appreciated or known. There are also some mediocre portraits, including one of Swift, in whom, by the way, his Dublin alma mater could discover only ill nature and incapacity. The spectator returns to his former place, goes up Dame-street, and meets at its extremity on the left hand the Royal Exchange, on an elevated site, a quadrangle of which the principal facade presents a Corinthian portico surmounted by Corinthian pilasters and a balustrade, over which is visible the summit of the dome. The interior is a rotunda formed by twelve fluted Corinthian columns, and richly stuccoed. Immediately to the left is the Castle, the residence of the vice-regal court. The upper castle-yard or court is a quadrangle, with an Ionic structure crowned with a Corinthian tower and cupola, from which the vice-regal flag waves; and on the opposite side a colonnade leads to the vice-regal apartments. In the lower chapel-yard is observed a Gothic chapel built by a living architect of Dublin: it is a very graceful specimen of the pointed Gothic.

Crossing the river to the north side, the Law Courts present themselves; a noble edifice, ill-placed on a low site, looking immediately over the river: it is a modern building, the first stone having been laid by the duke of Rutland, lord lieutenant, in 1786. The whole facade is 450 feet, with a central portico of Corinthian columns surmounted by a pediment, and allegorical statues over these,—the wings connected in a right line with the front by arched screen walls with arcades behind. The hall a circular area, lighted from the top and surmounted by a dome with a mosaic ceiling, is paced round and round, or occupied in groups, by barristers, attorneys, and strangers, while business is proceeding in the several courts which are in the periphery of the hall. Returning on the same side, and descending with the river, Sackville-street, a spacious and even noble avenue, opens on the left. At about half its length appears Nelson's pillar, a heavy column, placed in its centre, with a perverseness of absurdity rarely seen to break a fine and complete view. The new Post-office, a fine building, with an Ionic fluted portico surmounted by a pediment and several allegorical figures, is in this street immediately near Nelson's pillar; and at the remote end another handsome mass of buildings, comprises the Lying-in Hospital and Rotunda Assembly-rooms. A little further on are the King's Inns, comprising the record-office and prerogative court; a recent edifice, with much of architectural and well-executed sculptural ornament. Having retraced his steps to the river, and followed its course a short way, the observer beholds the Custom-house, with its principal front nearly at the water's edge—its centre a Doric portico, supporting an entablature and frieze rather too ornamental, with various allegorical groups single figures,—and a noble dome, supported by columns and surmounted at its vertex by a colossal statue of Hope,—placed there most inauspiciously,—for all idea of customs or commerce has been abandoned even in expectancy, and the building receives another destination. Crossing again to the left bank or south side of the town, the spectator should halt for a moment on Carlisle-bridge to view Sackville-street,—unfortunately broken and disfigured by Nelson's pillar, but adorned by its own breadth and elegance,—the portico of the Post-office, and the Rotunda in the distance; the south front of the Custom-house, and a noble line of walled quays, over an innavigable river flowing into a bay without ships; Westmoreland-street, with on either side a portico of the bank and a pavilion of the university; and d'Olier-street, with the Dublin Library, and a view of the front of the new square of Trinity-college. A little further on to the south is the theatre, a handsome building, and adapted to its purposes, built in 1821 by Mr. Henry Harris, whose name is honourably associated with the English drama.

There are in Dublin five squares; three on the south and two on the north side of the river; of which one, called Stephen's-green, may be called magnificent, from its space, ornament, and edifices. The river is crossed by seven bridges within the city, all, with one exception, modern and well built, and one of them of cast iron. Sarah's bridge, so called from Sarah, countess of Westmoreland, who laid the first stone in 1791, is about a mile above the city; consisting of a single arch, beautifully constructed and of very picturesque effect.

Dublin is an archiepiscopal see, and is singular in the United Kingdom as having two cathedrals, both of which are more interesting for their antiquity and monumental associations than for their architecture. St. Patrick's cathedral, founded in 1190, but commenced in its present form in 1370, is a Gothic structure, beautiful only for its arched stuccoed ceiling; and containing, among many other monuments, that of Jonathan Swift, dean of St. Patrick's, "one who loved virtue, liberty, and his country; and here only released from the torture of his honest indignation."

Christ-church cathedral, founded, it is stated, in 1038, but constructed successively some centuries later, is a dilapidated Gothic edifice, containing some interesting monuments: among them that of earl Strongbow, the first English invader of Ireland. There are, besides the two cathedrals, nineteen churches and two chapels of ease; of which few are deserving of particular notice. St. Andrew's is a vain and unfinished attempt after the church of the Rotunda at Rome. St. Werburgh's exhibits the Ionic, Corinthian, and composite, in its façade; and contains the remains, but not the monument, of lord Edward Fitzgerald. St. George's is a modern edifice, with a handsome Ionic fluted portico and a light and lofty steeple.

There are in Dublin twenty Roman Catholic chapels. The metropolitan chapel, built by subscription, and begun in 1816, is in the best taste,—a large edifice, with a simple but majestic Doric portico, resting on an elevated plane, approached by a flight of steps, and sustaining a marble pediment. The places of worship for dissenting non-catholic congregations are also very numerous, and exceed, in proportion, the number in any other part of the United Kingdom. There are about a hundred public hospitals, and other benevolent institutions and private associations, for the relief, protection, reformation, and education of the poor.

Dublin contains one public and two large subscription libraries; the Dublin Society, for purposes of science and art; the royal Irish academy, and several others. Literature, however, in Dublin is rather an accessory accomplishment than a profession: there is no authorship, no publishing trade. The university sends forth well educated and disciplined generations, but does no more: the junior fellows are occupied with the "crambre repetita" of public and private lectures, and other academic duties, whilst the senior fellows live in opulence and learned ease.

The medical and surgical schools are well supplied with professors and all the other means of knowledge,—much frequented, and in high repute. Several attempts have been made in Dublin, but without success, to establish a school of art: men conscious of their genius, or who have proved it, migrate to London. From these may be singled out, without distinguishing invidiously, the president of the royal academy in London (Mr. Shee,) and Mr. Mulready.

The chief manufactures of Dublin are, what are called Irish poplins, tabinets, silks, cottons, woollens, and hardware,—of which last the extent does not at all equal the excellence.

Dublin occupies a square area of about 2 m. and a half. It is distant 102 m. from Belfast, 95 from Waterford, 122 from Limerick, and 156 from Cork. Lat. 53. 21. N. Long. 6. 0. 15. W. Pop. 200,000.

Dublin, p.t. Cheshire Co. N. H. 70 m. fr. Boston. Pop. 1,218. Also towns in Huntington, Bedford, Philadelphia and Montgomery Cos. Pa., Laurens Co. Geo. and Franklin Co. Ohio.

Dubois, a county of Indiana. Pop. 1,774. Portersville is the chief town.

Dubro, a town of Russian Poland in the province of Volhynia, seated on the banks of a branch of the Przypieck, near the frontier of Galicia; it was formerly celebrated for its great annual fair. It is 24 miles S. E. of Lucko. Pop. about 6,500, chiefly Jews.

Duddingston, a pleasant village on the S. side of Edinburgh, Scotland.

Duderstadt, a town of Germany, in the territory of Eichsfeld, 18 miles E. of Göttingen. Pop. about 4,000.

Dudley, a town of Worcestershire, Eng., insulated in the county of Stafford, 10 miles W. by N. of Birmingham, and 128 from London. It is a place of antiquity, having the remains of a castle, built about the year 700; the neighbourhood abounds in coal, iron, and limestone, and the town participates largely in the manufactures of the district; having about 20 establishments for the manufacture of nails, anvils, vices, tracery, and other heavy iron work; 10 other establishments for the manufacture of fenders and fire irons, 5 glass houses, and two other establishments for glass cutting; 3 malt and coffee mill makers, 20 malt ing houses, &c. &c. It has two churches, that of St. Thomas, recently rebuilt, is a beautiful structure with a lofty spire. The pop. which in 1801, was only 10,107, and in 1811, 13,925, in 1821 had increased to 18,211.

Dudley, a town in Worcester county, Massachusetts near the frontier of Connecticut, 20 m. S. of Worcester. Pop. 2,155.

Duffel, a town of the Netherlands, a few m. N. of Malines. Pop. about 3,000.

Duisburg, a town of Prussia in Cleves.

Duke of York Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by commodore Byron, in 1765, lying N. of the Friendly islands. Long. 172. 30. W. lat. 7. 56. S.

Duke of York Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, lying between New Britian and New Ireland, so named by captain Carteret, in 1767. The natives go entirely naked; are stout, well made, and of a light copper colour; their hair is woolly, but they dress it with grease and powder, and make it hang straight. Their huts are made chiefly of bamboo, and placed under the shade of cocoa-nut trees, with a fence before them, within which the plantain, banana, yam, sugar-cane, &c. are cultivated. The island produces, besides the plants above-mentioned, betel-nuts, mangoes, bread-fruit, and guavas. Here are also dogs, hogs, poultry, and some spices. The nutmeg was seen by captain Hunter, who anchored in Port Hunter bay, in this island, in 1791. Long. 151. 20. E. lat. 4. 7. S.

Duke's County, in Massachusetts. See Martha's Vineyard.

Dulas, a village of Wales in the isle of Anglesey, 10 m. N. W. of Beaumaris. It stands on the Irish sea at the mouth of a river of the same name; and is much frequented on account of the corn and butter trade, and for fern-ashes and kelp. Pop. in 1821, 220.

* * * There are several small rivers in different parts of Wales, named Dulas, and also a village in Herefordshire.

Dulcigno, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, seated at the mouth of the river Boina, 15 m. S. W. of Scutari, which see. Long. 18. 56. E. lat. 42. 23. N. Pop. about 8,000.

Dulerk, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Meath, formerly the see of a bishop, but now an inconsiderable place. It is seated near the S. bank of the river Boyne, 3 m. S. W. of Drogheda, and 21 N. by W. of Dublin. Pop. of the town in 1821, 1,030, and of the parish 2,668 more.

Dulken, a town of the Prussian states, lying about midway between the Rhine and the Maese, 20 m. N. by W. of Juliers. Pop. about 4,000.

Dull, an extensive parish in the highlands of Scotland, in the county of Perth, about 30 m. in length, by 12 broad; it is intersected by the military road, from Sterling to Inverness, it contains a village of the same name on the N. bank of Loch Tay. Pop. of the parish in 1801, 4,055, and in 1821, 4,508.

Dulmen, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster, 14 m. S. W. of Munster. Pop. about 1,800.

Dulverton, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. with manufactures of coarse woolen cloths and blankets. It is seated near the Ex, 20 m. S. of Minehead, and 165 W. by S. of London. Pop. in 1821, 1,027.

Dulwich, a beautifully sequestered village in Surry, 4 m. S. of London. It is famous for a college, founded by Edward Alleyn a comedian, called the college of God's Gift; to which is attached a gallery containing a beautiful collection of paintings; the village is seated in a vale. Pop. included with Camberwell, which see.

Dumaring, a town of the island of Borneo, on the E. coast. Long. 117. 30. E., lat. 2. 10. N.

Dumbarton, County of, sometimes called Dunbarton, formerly Lennox, formed a narrow strip of territory between the lowlands and highlands of Scotland, extending W. from near the Frith of Forth, for about 25 miles to the mouth of the Clyde, and then N. for about 25 miles more between Loch Long and Loch Lomond, the mean breadth not exceeding 5 miles; the grand canal from the Clyde to the Forth runs along the E. part of the county, which is divided into 12 parishes: the principal towns and villages are Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch in the E. part; Kirkpatrick, Killpatrick, Dumbarton, Cardross, Bonhill, and Kilmarnock in the centre; and Roseneath, Row, Lup, and Aroquhar in the N. The cotton manufacture is carried on in the central part of the county, and illicit distillation in the N.

Dumbarton, the chief town of the preceding county, is a royal burgh, seated on the N. bank of the Clyde, at the junction of the Leven, the outlet of Loch Lomond; on a point of land formed by the junction of the two rivers is a castle, occupying a very commanding position, and formerly deemed the key of the pasturage between the lowlands on the W., as well as commanding the navigation of the Clyde. The town consists principally of one long street, in the form of a crescent, parallel with the Leven; over which is a handsome bridge of five arches. It has a handsome church, with a lofty spire erected at the close of the last century. Its principal manufacture is glass; a portion of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton manufacture in connexion with Glasgow. It has a convenient port for small vessels, and a quay, but no custom house, being included in the port of Greenock. It is 12 miles W. N. W. of Glasgow. Pop. in 1801, 2,541, and in 1821, 3,481.

Dumboor, or Dombou, a salt lake on the north frontier of Bournou, in the interior of North Africa, from whence much salt is carried to Agades and other parts of western Africa; there is a considerable town of the same name on the W. side of the lake, which is S. of the Tropic of Cancer, in the long. of 21. 50. E.

Dumfries, a county of the S. of Scotland, being about 65 miles in extreme length from E. to W., and 30 in mean breadth its superficial area being 1,003 square miles; it is bounded on the N. by the counties of Ayr, Lanark, Peebles, Selkirk, and Roxburg, and E. S. E. by the English border, W. S. W. by Kirkcubrightshire, and S. by the Solway Frith: is intersected from N. to S. by three considerable rivers, abundant in salmon and trout, viz. the Nith, Annan, and Esk, all running from the N. into Solway Frith, and is divided into 44 parishes, including four royal burghs, viz. Dumfries, Annan, Lochmaber, and Sanquhar. A great part of this county is mountainous, over-spread with heath, well stocked with game, and affording pasturage to numerous herds of sheep and black cattle, which are driven into England, in great numbers; the valleys watered by the three rivers before mentioned, and the coast bordering on the Frith, are fertile both in pasture and tillage; the mountains in the N. W. part of the county contain a bed of rich lead ore, yielding a small portion of silver; coa and lime abound over the greater part of the county, and on the English border both copper and iron have been found; the county also contains a vein of antimony, and two mineral springs. It has no manufactures of importance.

Dumfries, a royal burgh, and chief town of the preceding county, seated on the E. bank of the river Nith, where that river forms the boundary between the counties of Dumfries and Kirkcubright, and about 7 miles above its entrance into Solway Frith. Dumfries is a port of entry, but its external commerce is inconsiderable (except coastwise); it derives its chief importance from being the assize town for the county of Kirkcubright as well as for Dumfries, and from being the seat of the commissary and sheriff court and of the Presbytery and Synod, while the agreeableness of its locality renders it the focus of gaiety and fashion for all the S. W. part of Scotland. It has 2 bridges over the Nith, one of them ancient, the other modern and elegant, 2 churches, a catholic chapel, and 4 dissenting places of worship. Its other public buildings are the town house, guild-hall, infirmary, house of correction and lunatic asylum; Dumfries is 38 m. W. N. W. of Carlisle, 75 S. W. of Edinburgh, 79 S. S. E. of Glasgow, and 80 E. N. E. of Port Patrick. Pop. in 1801, 7,288, and 1821, 11,052. It is the place of interment of Buns.

Dummer, t. Coos Co. N. H., 20 m. fr. Lancaster. Pop. 65.

Dun, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, on the river Meuse, 15 m. N. N. W. of Verdun.

Dun le Roi, a town of France, in the department of Cher, on the river Auron, 15 m. S. of Bouges.

Dunamunde, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga. It formerly belonged to the duchy of Courland, but was taken by the Swedes in their wars with the Poles. In 1700 it was taken by the Poles, and retaken the next year by Charles XII. In 1710 it was taken by Peter the Great. It is situate at the mouth of the Dwina, 15 m. N. W. of Riga, to which it is the outport, and 20 N. of Mittau. Long. 23. 41. E., lat. 57. 5. N.

Dunaburgh, a town of Russia, in the government of Vitpeck, seated on the E. bank of the Dwina, about 100 m. above Riga. The Russians formed extensive entrenchments near this place in 1812, but abandoned them on the approach of the French towards Moscow. Pop. about 6,000.

Dunbar, p.t. Fayette Co. Pa.

Dunbar, a town of Haddingtonshire, on the S. E. coast of Scotland, seated on the shore of a bay opening in the German Ocean, the harbour, defended by a battery, is difficult of access but safe and commodious when attained. It is a port of entry, but its foreign commerce is inconsiderable; it has a yard for ship-building, a ropery, soap work, one or two iron foundries; exports a considerable quantity of corn to the London market, and the inhabitants in the season pursue the herring fishery with much industry. Here was anciently a castle, now in ruins, which stood on a rock, and before the use of artillery, was deemed impregnable. Under the rock are two natural arches, through which the tide flows; and between the harbour and the castle, is a stratum of vast basaltic columns of red stone, interspersed with veins of jasper. Dunbar is distinguished in various periods of Scottish history through several centuries, and was formerly deemed of much greater importance than at present. It was created a royal burgh about the middle of the 14th century. The parish extends for about 9 m. along the coast, and in 1801 contained a pop. of 3,951, and in 1821, 5,272. It is 27 m. E. of Edinburgh, and 29 N. W. of Berwick on Tweed. Lat. 56. N. and 2. 30. of W. long.

Dunbarton, p.t. Merrimack Co. N. H. 65 m. fr. Boston. Pop. 1,067.

Dunblane, or Dumblane, a town of Scotland in Perthshire, formerly a bishop's see, with a magnificent cathedral; it is 6 m. N. of Stirling. Pop. in 1821, 3,135.

Duncansby, or Dungisby Head, the extreme N. E. point of Great Britain, in the lat. of 58. 40. N. and 3. 8. of W. long.

Dunccawille, p.v. Barnwell Dis. S. C.

Dunchurch, a village in Warwickshire, Eng. 80 m. N. W. of London on the mail coach road to Liverpool and to Holyhead, by Birmingham, which makes it a place of great intercourse; it derives its name from its situation on the border of what was formerly an extensive heath, called Dunsmore heath, celebrated for a legendary tale of a cow of enormous size, which roamed upon it.

Dundalk, a parish and town on the E. coast of Ireland, in the county of Louth, and of which it is the assize and chief town. The town is seated at the mouth of a small river, falling into a bay of the same name. It participates largely in the linen manufacture, and is distinguished for a manufacture of fine cambrics, established in 1737. It has a custom house, and an elegant town hall, and other public buildings. Pop. in 1821, 9,256, and the parish 3,096 more. It is 18 m. N. of Drogheda, and 12 S. of Newry. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Dundee, a seaport of Scotland, seated at the S. extremity of Angus, or Forfarshire, on the N. shore of the Frith of Tay, which forms a convenient and commodious harbour for ships of large burthen. Next to Edinburgh and Glasgow, Dundee is the most manufacturing and commercial town in Scotland; independent of its extensive coasting trade, it imports a large quantity of flax and other products direct from the Baltic, and employs several ships in the Greenland whale fishery. Its manufactures consist of sail-cloth, cotton, bagging, osnaburgs and other heavy linen fabrics, and coloured sewing threads. The town consists of 4 principal streets, diverging from a square in the centre; the public buildings are a town house, trades hall, infirmary, orphan and lunatic asylum, 3 churches, and a theatre. Dundee was erected into a royal burgh in 1165, and has been exposed to the repeated ravages of the contending parties which have prevailed in Scotland since that period; the last time it suffered from such cause was in the time of Cromwell, when it was taken by assault and given up to pillage by the troops under general Monk, who shared £60 a man from the booty they obtained. It is 22 m. E. of Perth, and 42 N. E. of Edinburgh. Lat. 56. 27. N. and 3. 3. of W. long. Pop. in 1801, 26,084, and in 1821, 30,575.

Dundonald, a village S. of Irvine, in Ayrshire, Scotland, abounding in excellent coal. The cotton manufacture is also carried on in the villages. Pop. in 1801, 1,340, and in 1821, 2,482.

Dunfermline, a royal burgh of Scotland, in Fifeshire, seated near the S. W. extremity of the county about 3 m. from the north shore of the Frith of Forth. It is celebrated for its once magnificent abbey, which fell a prey to the plundering army of Edward I., and as the place of interment of Malcolm Canmore, the founder of the abbey; 7 other Scottish monarchs, 5 queens, and several of the most eminent persons who figure in the Scottish history. Dunfermline has been celebrated in latter times for its extensive manufacture of fine linen, and still ranks among the most important manufacturing towns of Scotland. The town is well built on an eminence, and commands some beautiful prospects of the surrounding country; its public buildings consists of a town house, an elegant guildhall, &c. It is 17 m. W. of Edinburgh. Pop. in 1801, 9,980, and in 1821, 13,681.

Dungannon, a town of Ireland, in the S. E. part of the county of Tyrone. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom. It is 11 m. N. by W. of Armagh, and 73 from Dublin. Pop. in 1821, 3,243.

Dungarvon, a town of Ireland, seated at the head of a bay, in the county of Waterford; although the harbour is safe and convenient, it is not a port of entry, its principal trade consists of potatoes and fish, for the Dublin market. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom, and is frequented in the summer season for sea bathing; the principal object of the town is the ruin of an ancient castle, 17 m. W. by S. of Waterford, in the lat. of 52. 2. N. and 7. 35. of W. long. Pop. in 1821, 5,105.

Dungeness, a celebrated promontory forming the S. E. point of the county of Kent, Eng. at the entrance into the straits of Dover; the lighthouse is in the lat. of 50. 55. 1. N. and 0. 57. 48. of E. long.

Dunkeld, a town of the highlands of Scotland, seated on the N. bank of the river Tay, in a delightfully romantic part of the county of Perth.—It was the capital of ancient Caledonia; and at an early period a Pictish king founded here a monastery of Culdees, which was converted into a bishopric by David I. in 1130, and for a length of time held the first rank in Scotland. The choir of the cathedral is still entire, and serves for the parish church. At a more recent period it was much frequented as a place of fashionable retreat, and for obtaining goat's whey; but this practice has ceased. The town and surrounding country is claimed by the Duke of Argyll, as his exclusive property, and as such, he has converted the whole of the adjacent vicinity to his own immediate profit and gratification; here is an elegant bridge of 7 arches over the Tay. Dunkeld is the chief market town of the highlands it is 15 miles N. of Perth, on the line of the military road to fort Augustus and Inverness. Pop. in 1821, 1,364.

Dunkard, a township in Greene Co. Pa.

Dunkirk, a seaport of France, in the department of Nord. It was taken from the Spaniards by the English and French in 1658, and put into the hands of the English, but sold to the French by Charles II. in 1662. Louis XIV. made it one of the best fortified ports in the kingdom; but all the works are demolished, and the basins filled up, in consequence of the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. The French afterwards resumed the works; but they were ordered to be demolished at the peace of 1763. They continued thus till the peace of 1783, when the works were again resumed; and the next year it was declared a free port. The English attempted to besiege this place in 1793, but were obliged to retire with loss. Dunkirk is divided into the old and new town, is well built, has a spacious market place, and an elegant modern built church; as a seaport it is now but of little note. It is the seat of a prefect, and in 1825 contained a population of 23,012; 16 m. E. by N. of Calais.

Dunse, a town of Scotland, the largest in Berwickshire. Here is a woolen manufacture, and a celebrated mineral well, similar to that of Tumberidge in England. It is situate under a hill, near the river Whiteadder, 14 m. W. of Berwick, and 40 E. S. E. of Edinburgh; it is distinguished as the birth place of Joannes Scotus, in 1274. Pop. in 1821, 3,773.

Dunstanan, or Dunstanane, a hill, 6 miles N. E. of Perth, in Scotland, 1,024 feet above the level of the sea; immortalized by Shakspeare, in his drama of Macbeth.

Dunstable, a town in Bedfordshire, Eng. It is of great antiquity, having been ruined by the Danes, and restored by Henry I., who made it a borough, but no members were ever sent to parliament. The church is the remainder of a priory, and opposite to it is a farm house, once a royal palace. Dunstable consists principally of one long street, and is celebrated for its manufactures of straw for bonnets, &c. It is seated on the verge of a range of chalk hills, which extend across the counties of Bedford, Buckingham, and Oxford; and large quantities of larks, are caught in its vicinity, and sent to the London market.

It is 33 miles N. N. W of London. Pop. in 1821, 1,831.

Dunstanville, p.v. Edgefield Dis. S. C.

Dunstaffnage, a castle of Scotland in Argyllshire, one of the first seats of the Pictish and Scottish monarchs. Here was long preserved the famous stone, used as the coronation seat of the Scottish monarchs, which was removed to Scone by Kenneth II., and thence by Edward I., in 1296, to Westminster abbey, where it now remains as an appendage to the coronation chair. Some of the ancient regalia still continue in the castle; and near it is a small roofless chapel, of elegant architecture, where several of the kings of Scotland are said to be interred. It stands on a promontory, almost insulated, at the entrance of Loch Etive, 24 m. N. W. of Inverary.

Dunster, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. It has a castle, on a steep knoll; and at one corner of the terrace is an ancient turret, supposed to be part of the original castle, built in the time of William I. A priory stood on the N. W. side of the castle, part of which now serves for the parish church. It stands on the edge of a vale, near the Bristol channel, 20 m. N. W. of Taunton, and 161 W. of London. Pop. 895.

Dunwich, a borough in Suffolk, Eng. It was formerly a bishop's see, and had many churches which have been swallowed up by the sea. The remains of two churches and a palace are the only marks left of its former greatness. It is seated at the top of a loose cliff 24 miles S. of Yarmouth, and 100 N. of London; it returns 2 members to parliament. Pop. in 1821, 200.

* * * There are numerous other towns and villages in England, the names of which begin with Dun, a Saxon word signifying a down or level place, or country. There are also a number more in Ireland, and Scotland, but none that merit any particular mention.

Duplin, an interior county in the S. E. part of the state of North Carolina, watered by the N. E. branch of cape Fear river. Pop. 11,373. Kenansville is the chief town.

Durango, one of the 15 new divisions of Mexico, extended from the lat. of 24. to 32. N. comprising the greater portion of the late province of New-Biscay, intersected from S. to N. by the main ridge of the Andes. Its superficial area is computed at 129,247 square miles, and in 1803 contained a population of 159,700. The chief town of the same name, is seated near the S. end of the province in the lat. of 24. 10. N. and 104. of W. long. at an elevation of 6,854 feet above the level of the sea. It is about 520 miles N. W. of the city of Mexico. Pop. about 12,000.

Durazzo, a town of European Turkey, capital of Albania, and a Greek archbishop's see. It has a ruined fortress, and a good harbour on the gulf of Venice, 50 m. N. of Alvona. Long. 19. 36. E. lat. 41. 25. N. Pop. about 5,000.

Durhanga, a town of Hindoostan, in Bahar, near the Gogary, 50 m. N. E. of Patna.

Durbuy, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, seated on the Ourthe, 25 m. S. by W. of Liege, and about the same distance E. by S. of Namur.

Duren, or Deuren, a town of the Prussian states of the Rhine, on the E. bank of the Roer, in the duchy of Juliers, 15 m. E. of Aix-la-Chapelle. Pop. about 4,700.

Durham, a maritime county, on the N. E. coast of England, bounded on the S. and S. W. by the river Tees, which divides it from Yorkshire; the western extremity of the county joins upon Westmoreland and Cumberland, and the rivers Derwent and Tyne divide it from Northumberland on the N.; the line of the coast from the mouth of the Tees to the Tyne, is about 32 miles, but in its extreme extent from N. to S. the distance is 36 miles, and from E. to W. about 40 miles; being, however, of a triangular form, its superficial area does not exceed 1,061 square miles. All the W. part of the county is mountainous, some of the peaks rising upwards of 2,000 feet above the level of the sea: from these mountains rises the river Wear, which by its circuitous course and collateral streams, waters all the interior parts of the county. The chief characteristic of this county, is the coal mines, which yield about two million tons annually, chiefly for the supply of London, and the E. and S. E. parts of England. The river and coasts abound in salmon and other excellent fish, while the E. and S. E. parts of the county yield a surplus of agricultural produce, both in grain and cattle: it owns also a considerable extent of shipping, employed chiefly in the conveyance of its coal, the value of which, including the freight and its supply of agricultural produce, together with some lead, iron, and mill-stones, constitute an exchangeable amount, exceeding £1,000,000 per annum. The principal towns besides the capital of the same name, are Stockton, Darlington, and Bernard castle, on the N. bank of the Tees; Gateshead, and South Shields on the S. bank of the Tyne; Monk Wearmouth, Bishop's Wearmouth, and Sunderland, at the mouth of the Wear; Bishop's Auckland, Chester-le-Street, &c. in the interior.

Durham City, the chief place, and capital of the preceding county, is seated on the banks of the river Wear, about the centre of the county, on the line of the great high road from London to Edinburgh, 10 miles from the sea in a direct line, about 20 from the mouth of the Wear by the course of the stream, 14 from the Tyne at Newcastle, 19 from the Tees at Darlington, 242 in a meridional line, and 255 by the line of road N. by W. of London. It was created a bishop's see, by a king of Northumberland prior to the conquest, who out of devotion conferred the whole county of Durham upon St. Cuthbert, a monk of Landisfärne, its first bishop, and his successors for ever. This grant was confirmed by William the Norman Conqueror, who constituted it a principality, or county palatine; hence the county is sometimes designated the principality of Durham; and the revenue of the see justifies the appellation, it being the richest in England. The cathedral was founded towards the close of the 11th century, and is a magnificent edifice, upwards of 460 feet in length, seated on an eminence 80 feet above the surface of the river; the principal tower is 214 feet in height. Besides the cathedral there are six other churches, three of them fine edifices, two Roman catholic, and several dissenting places of worship. Durham has also a stately castle, founded by William the Norman, now the bishop's palace, and several public buildings more immediately belonging to the city; while the goal, house of correction, courts and governor's house for county purposes, have all been recently rebuilt in a handsome style. There are three bridges over the river; and on the whole, the city of Durham presents a very interesting and imposing aspect and is celebrated in several pages of English history. It returns two members to parliament; market on Thursday; it has no manufacture of importance. Pop. in 1801, 7,530, and in 1821, 9,822.

On the principal rock (for the rest are under water) Mr. Winstanley built a light-house in 1700, which was destroyed by a storm in 1703, and the projector perished in it. In 1709 another, built of wood, was erected by Mr. Rudyard, which was consumed by fire in 1755. Within four years after, one was built by Mr. Smeaton, which also was burnt down in 1770; and another, of stone, was completed by him in 1774, which has hitherto withstood the fury of the elements. The building to the height of 33 feet from the foundation, is a solid mass of stones, engrafted into each other; above this are four rooms, one over the other, and at the top a gallery and lantern. It is nearly 80 feet high; and its distance from the Ram Head, the nearest point of land is 12 m. Long. 4. 24. W., lat. 50. 8. N.

Edgecomb Mount, a hill on the W. side of the harbour of Devonport, from the summit of which is an enchanting prospect of the surrounding country and the English channel.

Edgecombe, an interior county on the E. part of N. Carolina, intersected by Tar river. Pop. 14,933. Tarborough is the chief town.

Edgefield, a district of S. Carolina, bounded on the S. W. by the Savannah river, comprising about 1,500 square m. of surface. Pop. 30,511. The chief town of the same name in the centre of the county, is 63 m. E. S. E. of Columbia, and 140 S. S. E. of Savannah.

Edgehill, a village in Warwickshire, Eng. 14 m. S. of Warwick, memorable for the first battle fought between Charles I. and the parliament, in 1642; from the brow of the hill there is an extensive and delightful prospect over the vale of Redhorse.

Edgeware, a town in Middlesex, Eng. It stands on the Roman road, leading to St. Albans, 8 m. N. W. of London.

Edinburghshire, or Mid Lothian, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Frith of Forth, E. by the shires of Haddington, Berwick, and Roxburg, S. by those of Selkirk, Peebles, and Lanark, and W. by Linlithgowshire. It is divided into 31 parishes, comprising an area of 354 square miles. The soil is fertile, and produces corn of all sorts with plenty of grass; also coal, iron, limestone, and black marble. The principal rivers are the N. and S. Esk, Leith, Amond, and Gala, all flowing into the Frith of Forth. See Scotland.

Edinburgh, the capital of Scotland stands on the southern shore of the Frith of Forth about a mile and a half from the sea. The situation of this interesting city is worthy of the capital of such a romantic land. Built on three lofty eminences, the interior arrangement of its streets and public edifices, and the surrounding scenery, afford a spectacle of the greatest beauty and variety. The castle, from which it originated, is built on the rocky verge of the central hill, and marks with Holyrood-house on the opposite side, the limits of the Old Town. The northern division is occupied by the New Town, which is as remarkable for the neatness of its buildings and the elegance of its streets and squares as the more ancient quarter is for its closeness and irregularity. The two divisions are connected by a bridge thrown over the intervening hollow, and an artificial hillock called the Mound. The southern quarter is less distinguished for regularity of plan than the New Town, but contains several important public buildings, and is joined to the other parts of the city by Bridge-street, formed of the north and south bridges, which respectively cross the two lakes, now dry, that formerly separated the different eminences on which it stands. About a mile and a half distant is the Frith of Forth. On the east rise, the precipitous rocks named Calton-hill, Arthur's-seat, and Salisbury-crags; the Corstorphine-hills bound the prospect on the west; and the Pentland mountains, with those of Braid, form the romantic landscape of the south. The principal part of the Old Town consists of the High-street, which is more than a mile long, and in some parts ninety feet wide; of Cowgate, which runs parallel with the former; and of innumerable lanes and alleys which form the communication between these great avenues. Owing to the narrowness of the inferior streets, and to the extreme height of the houses in the larger ones, this quarter of the city has to strangers an unpleasant appearance; but when viewed without relation to the advantages of domestic comfort, there is something very imposing in its massy extent of building; while the beautiful bridge across the southern valley, covered as it is on each side by rows of handsome houses, offers an object as picturesque as it is singular. The New Town is intersected by George-street, which is terminated by St. Andrew's-square on the east, and Charlotte-square on the west, and is 115 feet wide. The principal streets parallel with this are Prince's-street and Queen-street, which are crossed by others of proportionate width and extent. But every year is adding to the size and beauty of this elegant capital. The road by which it is connected with Leith has become a street, and the new road over the Calton-hill has opened another magnificent passage for its growing wealth.

Of the public buildings of Edinburgh the most interesting are the palace and abbey of Holyrood. The former is a quadrangular edifice, surrounding a spacious court, the sides of which are ornamented with piazzas. The west front is supported by circular towers at the angles, and has a portico and cupola resting on Doric columns. It was in a small apartment of the north-west tower that Rizzio was murdered while attending the unfortunate queen Mary; and the bedchamber which she occupied, with some relics of its furniture, are still shown. The great gallery is 150 feet long by 72 wide; and is now used by the nobility when they elect their sixteen representatives in parliament. Of the ancient abbey only the walls remain standing, but the spot marked out as its burial-ground possesses the dust of a long line of kings. The castle is at present employed as a barrack, and can hold about 3,000 men. It was once a place of great strength; the rock on which it is situated being near 200 feet above the plain beneath, and in some places overhanging the base. Palisades, a dry ditch surmounted by a draw-bridge, and two batteries to protect the gate, form the principal defences of the fortress; the area of the whole occupying about seven acres.

Of the religious edifices of Edinburgh, the church of St. Giles is the principal and the most ancient. Charles I. made it the cathedral of the new diocese, and it was a collegiate church as early as the year 1466. It is built in the form of a cross, and occupies one entire side of the Parliament-square. The most remarkable circumstance connected with it is, that it is divided into four parts, each of which is a distinct church. It is here also that the General Assembly is held, and that the affairs of the Scottish church are ordered by its ruling ministers. The part of the building most admired is the elegant tower and spire, which rise from the centre of the edifice to the height of 161 feet, and are ornamented by richly wrought arches. Of the other churches it is only necessary to mention that of Trinity college, founded by Mary of Gueldres in 1462, a noble Gothic structure; and those of St. Andrew's and St. George, which are elegant buildings of modern erection. Besides these, which belong to the national church, there are six episcopal chapels, of which St. Paul's and St. John's, raised within late years, are amongst the grandest of modern structures: the former is after the model of King's college chapel, Cambridge; and the latter is a parallelogram, the parts of which are composed in richest Gothic style. A Roman Catholic chapel built in 1814, is greatly admired for a similar species of architecture; and almost every class of dissenters has its appropriate place of worship.

The university was founded in the year 1582, but at that period had only one professor: another, however, was soon after appointed, and then a third, till the number increased to twenty-seven, the present establishment. The original building belonging to the university was so ill adapted to its increasing celebrity, that in 1789 it was partly taken down, and a new structure commenced; but from want of funds the work was for many years delayed, and was not till of late resumed, and then on a diminished scale. The university library contains more than 50,000 volumes; and the number of students is, on an average, 2,000. Next to this establishment we may mention the high school, founded in the sixteenth century, and consisting of a rector, four masters, and near 500 scholars.

The charitable institutions are numerous, and some of them richly endowed. The hospital, established by the celebrated jeweller of James VI., George Heriot, is a handsome Gothic edifice; and under its venerable roof 180 boys are boarded and educated with benevolent care. Watson's hospital is also on a similar plan; and there are others for the support of decayed tradesmen, their wives, and daughters. Of the literary and scientific institutions of Edinburgh, the Royal, Antiquarian, and Wernerian societies are deservedly distinguished; and there is no other city in Europe where the men of letters and scientific ability bear so great a proportion to the number of the inhabitants.

No particular manufacture is carried on in this city; the working and trading classes being chiefly supported by the production and sale of the more general articles of domestic use. Edinburgh sends one member to parliament. Distance N. W. of London 396 miles. Lat. 55. 58. N. Long. 3. 12. W. Pop. in 1821, 112,335. See Leith.

Edisto, a river in South Carolina, which after a course of about 140 m. falls into the Atlantic Ocean by two channels, about 40 m. S. of Charleston. The island, formed by the divergence of the stream, contains about 3,000 inhabitants, the greater part of whom are slaves.

Edmonton, a village of Middlesex, England, 6 m. N. of Shoreditch Church, London, on the great high road to Edinburgh. It has nothing but its thoroughfare to entitle it to notice. Pop. in 1801, 5,093, and in 1821, 7,900.

Edwards, a county on the E. frontier of the state of Illinois, bounded by the great Wabash river, 35 m. from S. to N. and about 30 in mean breadth, the little Wabash intersects the W. side of the county; and towards the S. part, between the two rivers. Pop. 1,649. Albion is the capital.

Edwardsville, a village in Madison Co. Illinois Also a township in Greenville Co. Upper Canada.

Ecloo, a populous town of the Netherlands, 11 m. N. by W. of Ghent.

Efferding, a town of Austria, with a castle, seated near the S. bank of the Danube, 12 m. W. of Lintz.

Effingham, a village in Surry, Eng. 12 m. N. E. of Guilford. It was once a much larger place, and supposed to have contained 16 churches, wells, cavities like cellars, having been frequently found in the neighbouring fields and woods; and in the present church are some ancient stalls and monuments.

Effingham, a county in the state of Georgia, bordering on the Savannah river, its area comprises about 500 sq. m. Pop. 2,969. Willoughby is the chief town.

Effingham, p.t. Stafford Co. N. H. 67 m. fr. Portsmouth. Pop. 1,911.

Egeln, a town and castle of Germany, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on the river Bode, 16 m. S. W. of Magdeburg.

Egenburg, a town of Austria, noted for good wine, 13 m. S. W. of Znain in Moravia.

Eger, a river in Germany, which rises in the principality of Culmbach, running in an E. N. E. direction through the circle of Saaz, and after a course of about 120 miles falls into the Elbe, near Leutmeritz.

Eger, a fortified town at the western extremity of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz, with a castle and college. It was taken by the French in 1742, but they were forced to evacuate it the next year through famine. Here are manufactures of leather, hats, cloths, and stuffs; and its mineral waters are famous. It is seated on the Eger, 90 m. W. by N. of Prague. Long. 12. 27. E., lat. 50. 5. N. Pop. about 8,000.

Egersz Szala, a town of Lower Hungary, seated on the banks of the Szala, which falls into the S. end of lake Balaton.

Egg, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S. of Skye, 5 m. in length, and from 2 to 3 in breadth. It is partly flat, and partly lilly and rocky, with some basaltic pillars. The low grounds are fertile.

Egg Harbour River, Great and Little, the former constituting the S., and the other the N. boundary of Gloucester county, New Jersey; the harbours opening into the Atlantic Ocean, in the lat. of 39. 17. and 39. 30. N. On both these harbours are towns of the same name.

Egham, a village of England, in Surry, 18 m. from Hyde Park Corner, London, on the great western road.

Eglingen, a town of Suabia, capital of a lordship of the same name, 8 m. N. of Dillengen.

Eglisau, a town and castle of Switzerland, in the canton of Zurich, seated on the Rhine, 13 m N. of Zurich.

Egmont op den Hoef, a village of North Holland, 3 m. W. by S. of Alkmaer. It appears to have been a considerable town, but was destroyed in 1573, by the enraged Spaniards, after their failure before Alkmaer. It now exhibits extensive and picturesque ruins perhaps the only ruins in all Holland. Near it are two other villages; Egmont op Zee, a m. to the W. on the sea-coast, and Egnont Binnen, nearly two m. to the S.; where a bloody but undecided battle was fought, in 1799, between the allied English and Russian army, and the French and Dutch.

Egremont, a town in Cumberland, Eng. On the W. side is an artificial mount, with the ruins of a castle; and 3 m. S. E. of the town, in the wooded vale of the Calder, are the remains of the Calder abbey. Egremont, is seated near the Irish sea, on the river Eden, 5 m. S. S. E. of Whitehaven, and 289 N. W. of London.

Egremont, p.t. Berkshire Co. Mass. Pop. 889.

Egypt, a country comprising the N. E. extremity of Africa, having about 400 m. of coast, between Alexandria, and El Arish, including the indentations of lakes and bays; Cape Bourlos its N. extremity is in lat. 31. 36. N., from which point it extends inland to the frontier of Nubia, in the lat. of about 24. 30. giving a length of about 500 m. while its boundaries E. and W. are very undefined. It is divided from Asia, at its N. E. extremity, by an extensive desert, and further S. by the gulf of Suez, and the Red sea, (see Suez.) It is bounded on the W. by the deserts of Barca and Libya, and parts of Africa but little known, and in its extreme limits from W. to E. may be considered as comprising about 2 degrees of long. or 122 statute m. between 31. and 32. E.; the inhabited parts however, do not exceed more than 15 to 25 m. on each side of the Nile, which runs in a direction N. by W. through the whole extent of Egypt, except for about 120 m. above its entrance into the Mediterranean, where it diverges into two main and numerous collateral channels. This is called the Delta of the Nile, comprising an area of about 12,000 square m. studded over, the greater part, with towns and villages.

In the marshes of this region grows that remarkable reed grass celebrated in ancient times by the name of papyrus, the leaves of which afforded the first materials for making paper. It has a tapering stem surmounted by a tuft or plume of hairy leaves.

This country, so celebrated in history for its fertility, its policy and arts, appears first to have attained pre-eminence under the renowned Sesostris about 1720 years antecedent to the christian era. For nearly four centuries prior to this period, Egypt appears to have been divided into several petty sovereignties, under what was then termed Hycsos or Shepherd Kings, of whom Amasis at Thetmosis was the first who gained an ascendancy over his compeers; this ascendancy was acquired about 100 years prior to that of Sesostris; and it appears to have been the descendants of Amasis who were ruling in Egypt at the time of the death in western Asia, when Jacob and his family established themselves in the valley of Gessen, or Goshen, east of the Nile. From the descendants of Amasis and Sesostris sprung the race of the Pharaohs, who ruled over Egypt for 12 centuries, until Cambyses king of Persia, became master of it, 525 years B. C. By the Pharaoh's all those wonderful structures were raised, and works perfected, which we cannot behold without astonishment. These are, the pyramids, the labyrinth, the immense grottos in Thebaid, the obelisks, temples and pompous palaces, the lake Mæris, and the vast canals, which served both for trade, and to irrigate the land. After this conquest, Cambyses demolished the temples, disinterred the remains of Amasis and burnt them, and persecuted the priests. This country continued under the Persian yoke till the time of Alexander of Macedon, who having conquered Persia, built the city of Alexandria. He was succeeded by Ptolemy, the son of Lagos, 324 years B. C. Ten kings of that name succeeded each other, till Cleopatra, the sister of the last Ptolemy, ascended the throne; when Egypt became a Roman province, and continued so till the reign of Omar, the second caliph of the successors of Mahomet, who drove out the Romans after it had been in their hands 700 years. When the power of the caliphs declined in the 13th century, Saladin set up the empire of the Mamelouks who in time became so powerful, that they extended their dominions over a great part of Africa, Syria, and Arabia. Next, about 1570, Egypt yielded to the arms of Selim, the 2nd emperor of the Turks, under whose dominion it still continues.

The present inhabitants are composed of four different races of people; the Turks, who assume to be masters of the country; the Saracen Arabs, who were conquered by the Turks; the Copts, who were descended from the first Egyptians that became Christians; and the Mamelouks, who were originally Circassian or Mingrelian slaves, and being the only military force, continued for centuries to be the real masters of the country; and Egypt had been for many years, distracted by the civil wars between the different contending beys, by which its 24 provinces were governed. The famous Hassan Ali, the Turkish admiral, gained several victories over them in 1786; but though he repressed, he could not totally subdue them. The French invaded Egypt in 1798, under Bonaparte, who defeated the beys in several engagements; but after the departure of Bonaparte, a strong British force arrived to aid the country, and the French were expelled in 1801. But the Turkish Pacha, finding the power of the Mamelouks broken by their conflicts with the French, partly by treachery and partly by force, succeeded in driving them out of Egypt into Nubia.

The complexion of the Egyptians is of a dusky brown, they are generally indolent and cowardly; and the lower class are disgustingly filthy in their persons; the richer sort do nothing all day but drink coffee, smoke tobacco, and sleep; and they are ignorant, proud, haughty, and ridiculously vain. But the Copts are an ingenious people, and have great skill in business. From March to November, the heat, to an European, is almost insupportable; but the other months are more temperate. The S. winds which occur at intervals, from February to the end of May, are by the natives called poisonous winds, or the hot winds of the deserts; they are of such extreme heat and aridity, that no animated body exposed to it can withstand its fatal influence; and for the three days that it generally lasts, the streets are deserted. The sands are so subtle, that they penetrate into the closets, chests, and cabinets, which, with the hot winds, are probably the cause of sore eyes being so very common here. It rains very seldom in Egypt; but that want is fully supplied by the annual inundation of the Nile.

When the waters retire, all the ground is covered with mud; then the corn is harrowed into it, and in the following March there is usually a plentiful harvest. But some lands are never fallow, and yield three harvests annually; particularly in Lower Egypt, where sowing and reaping are going on incessantly, wherever the water of the river can be obtained for irrigation. There is no place in the world better furnished with corn, flesh, fish, sugar, fruits, and all sorts of garden vegetables; and in Lower Egypt, oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, are produced in great plenty. Lentils form a considerable article of food to the inhabitants of Upper Egypt, who rarely enjoy the luxury of rice; and onions remarkably mild and of the purest white continue to be a favourite diet among all classes.

The animals of Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes, black-cattle, fine horses, large asses, the camelion, crocodiles, hippopotami, the cerastes, or horned viper, and a kind of rat called ichneumon. This animal is domesticated among the Egyptians, as the cat is among us. He destroys rats and mice, and hunts also birds, serpents, lizards and insects. He sucks the eggs of the crocodile, and even kills the young ones when they first come out of the shell. It is a fable however, that the ich-neumon enters the jaws of the Crocodile while he is asleep and devours his entrails. This animal was so highly esteemed for his services that he was deified by the ancient Egyptians.

Among the birds may be mentioned eagles, hawks, pelicans, water fowls of all kinds, and the ibis, which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and noxious insects.

The pyramids of Egypt, so justly celebrated as evidences of human labour and art, are all built on rocky and sandy plains; the largest is 500 feet in height, and covers eleven acres of ground. They are situate in the south part of the Delta, or Lower Egypt, on the W. bank of the Nile. Egypt is now spoken of as divided into three parts, Lower, or the Delta, Middle, and Upper. During the reign of part of the Pharaohs, Thebes in Upper Egypt in the lat. of 25. 25. appears to have been the capital of the whole country; afterwards transferred to Memphis, in the lat. of 29.; and during the reign of the Ptolemies, the seat of the empire was transferred to Alexandria, whilst at the present time Cairo is the seat of government. Under the present Pasha, Mahomed Ali, who has ruled since 1798, Egypt has made advances in enterprize and cultivation almost without a precedent; and cotton wool, indigo, sugar, and grain, are again forming the basis of an extensive external commerce. Respecting the extent of the pop. of Egypt, information is very imperfect, both in reference to the past, as well as at the present time, being now variously estimated at from 2 to 4 millions: conjecture has hardly ever offered an opinion as to the number in former times. In further illustration of this very interesting section of the globe, see Nile, Suez, and Thebes.

Ehingen, a town of Suabia, near which the Austrians were defeated by the French, in 1805. It is seated on the Danube, 12 m. S. W. of Ulm.

Ehingen, another town of Suabia, seated on the Neckar, opposite Rotenberg, 6 m. W. by S. of Tubingen, and 25 S. S. W. of Stuttgart; both these towns are in the dominions of the king of Wurtemberg, and contain each about 4,000 inhabitants.

Ehrenbreitstein, a fortress of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine, on the E. bank of the river Rhine, opposite Coblentz. It stands on the summit of a stupendous rock, not less than 800 feet above the level of the river, and is deemed to be impregnable. It has a communication with Coblentz by a subterraneous passage, cut out of the solid rock, and is plentifully supplied with water from a well 280 feet deep. In the vale of Ehrenbreitstein is an old palace, which belonged to the elector of Treves. This fortress surrendered to the French through famine, in 1799, after a blockade of above 20 months.

Eibenstock, or Eybenstock, a town of Upper Saxony, in the circle of Erzeberg, near the N W. frontier of Bohemia, 60 m. S. by E. of Leipzig Pop. 3,200.

Eichsfeldt, a territory of Germany, at the N. E. extremity of the circle of the Lower Rhine, surrounded by Brunswick, Thuringia, and Hesse. It produces much flax and tobacco. Heiligenstadt is the capital. It is now divided between Prussia and Hanover: it formerly belonged to the elector of Mentz, and contained a pop. of 90,000, on a surface of about 600 square miles; Stadt Worbis and Mulhausen are the other principal towns.

Eichstadt. See Aichstadt.

Eil Loch. See Linnke Loch.

Eilenburg, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, situate on the Mulda, 12 m. N. E. of Leipzig.

Eimeo, one of the Society Isles, in the Pacific Ocean, lying 12 m. W. of Otaheite. The products of the two islands, and the manners of the people, are much the same. Eimeo has steep rugged hills, running in different directions, leaving large valleys, and gently rising ground about their sides. The hills, though rocky, are generally covered with trees almost to the tops.

Eimbeck, a fortified town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Calenberg. It has manufactures of cloth and all kinds of stuffs; and in the mountains near it are mines of silver, iron, copper, and lead. It is situate 17 m. N. of Göttingen, and 45 S. of Hanover. Pop. about 5,000.

Eisenach, or Eysenach, a town of Upper Saxony, at the western extremity of Thuringia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a celebrated college. The duke resides in a castle within the town; and there is another on a mountain out of it, called Wartburg, which, in 1521, was for some time the asylum of Luther. It is seated on the Nesse, at its conflux with the Horsel, 16 m. W. of Gotha. Long. 10. 21. E., lat. 51. 0. N. Pop. about 8,000.

Eisnartz, or Eisenitz, a town of Germany, in Stiria, famous for its iron mines, 34 m. N. N. W. of Graz.

Eisenberg, another town in Thuringia, 35 m. S. W. of Leipzig. Pop. 3,500.

Eiscstadt, a town of Hungary, with a magnificent palace, 5 m. N. W. of Odenburg, and 27 S. of Vienna.

Eisleben, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of the county of Mansfield, with a decayed castle. The celebrated Luther was born and died here. In the churches of St. Andrew and St. Ann are the superb burial places of the ancient counts of Mansfield. Eisleben contains many breweries, and derives much profit from the neighbouring iron mines. It is 28 m. N. N. W. of Naumburg. Long. 11. 47. E., lat. 52. 32. N.

Eisfeld, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Coburg, with a castle. It has manufactures of vitriol, &c. and stands on the Werra, near its source, 7 m. E. of Hildburghausen.

Elba, an island in the Mediterranean sea, between Italy and the island of Corsica, and separated from Tuscany by the channel of Piombino. It was known to the Greeks by the name of Æthalia, and to the Romans by that of Ilva. The form of the island is very irregular, the length from E. to W. is about 14 m. and the greatest breadth, which is at the W. end, is between 8 and 9 m. and contains a pop. of about 14,000 souls. The whole island presents numerous mountains, separated by deep valleys, and some plains of considerable extent; the south-west part is the most elevated, and are composed of black and white granite, susceptible of a fine polish. Elba has been renowned for its mines of iron and lead stone, for a period beyond the reach of history Aristotle speaks of them as opened from time immemorial; it has also quarries of fine marble. On the N. E. part is the mountain, or mine of iron ore, which supplies most of the forges of Italy. The tower of Voltorajo stands on this mountain, on a shaggy rock. The view from this tower is wonderfully fine every way, as the eye overlooks the whole island, that of Corsica, many scattered islets, the channel of Piombino, and a great range of continent. On the E. side of the mountain stands Rio, a village inhabited by miners. Under it breaks out the only rivulet in Elba, which does not run above a mile before it falls into the sea; but the water gushes out of the rock in such abundance, that it turns 17 mills in that short course. The soil of Elba is very shallow, with scanty room for cultivation, and few places level enough for corn, producing little more than six month's provision for its inhabitants; but the island is so situated that it can, in spite of a blockading fleet be always supplied with provisions, and the garrison with reinforcements. The wine is good, if made with care and properly kept; the fruit of its standard trees are excellent, though not in great plenty; orange and lemon trees thrive very well in the sheltered vallies and narrow plains near the sea. There are several springs of excellent water in the island; and the climate is much milder than the adjacent continent, for it produces many fruits and plants that cannot stand the Tuscan winters. Among the animals and birds are wild boars, hedge-hogs, partridges, quails, canary-birds, nightingales, ortolans, &c. It has no rivers; but there are a number of rivulets. This island was held with Piombino, by the Apenni, as a fief of the empire, till Charles V. thought proper to transfer it to Cosmo I. duke of Florence, that he might rescue it and the adjacent coasts from the Turks and French. Before the French revolution, it was subject to the prince of Piombino, except Porto Ferrajo, and Porto Longone, the former belonging to the duke of Tuscany, and the latter to the king of Naples; but in 1801 the French became possessed of the whole island. It now owes its chief celebrity to the circumstance of its having been ceded by the powers of Europe in full sovereignty to Napoleon Bonaparte; after the surrender of Paris to the allies in March 1814. He landed at Porto Ferrajo, the capital of the island, on the 4th of May in that year, but on the 26th of February following, he embarked again for France, and reached Paris, without encountering the least obstruction: since when the island has been wholly ceded to the duke of Tuscany. Porto Ferrajo, on the N. side of the island, is in lat. 42. 50. N., and 10. 15. of E. long.

Elbassano, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, 45 m. S. E. of Durazzo.

Elbe, a river of Europe, rising on the N. E. frontier of Bohemia, bordering on Silesia, in the lat. of 50. 30. N., and 15. 35. of E. long., flows S. for about 40 m. past Königgratz to Pardubitz, in the circle of Chrudin, from whence it takes a meandering course in a N. W. direction to Melnick, where it receives the Moldau from the frontier of Austria on the S.: from Melnick, it continues a winding course through the circle of Leutmeritz, in which it receives the Eger from the frontier of Franconia, on the W. S. W. and then enters the circle of Meissen in Upper Saxony, still running in a N. W. direction past Dresden, into the duchy of Saxony to Magdeburg; from whence it takes a direction N. by E. to Havelberg, where it receives the Havel; from Havelberg it intersects in a N. W. direction the Old Mark of Brandenburg; and then divides Mecklenburgh Schwerin, and the duchy of Saxe Launenburg on the N., from Lunenburg Zell, to Hamburgh: from whence it becomes navigable for ships of the largest burthen, dividing for about 70 m. the duchy of Holstein on the N., from Bremen on the S.; and after a course of 330 m. in a meridional line, and upwards of 500 m. by the course of the stream, falls into the North sea at Cuxhaven, in the lat. of 53. 52. N., and 8. 46. of E. long. The Elbe is rendered subservient to the purposes of navigation; and by itself and collateral branches, receives and distributes produce along lines of country, several hundred m. in extent. See Labc.

Elberfeldt, or Elcerfeldt, a town of the grand duchy of Berg, seated on the banks of the Wipper, which falls into the Rhine between Cologne and Dusseldorf. It has extensive manufactures of linen, silk, and wool, and a pop. of near 20,000. It is 15 m. due E. of Dusseldorf.

Elberston, p.t. Effingham Co. Geo.

Elbeuf, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine. It has extensive manufactures of cloth, and is seated on the Seine, 10 m. S. of Rouen, and 65 N. W. of Paris.

Elbert, a county of the state of Georgia, lying between the Savannah and Broad rivers. Pop. 12,354. Elberton the chief town; it is 190 m. N. W. of the city of Savannah.

Elbing, a strong town of W. Prussia, in the palatinate of Marienburgh, with a considerable trade in butter, cheese, and corn. It is seated on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Frische Haff, 30 m. E. S. E. of Dantzic. Long. 19. 30. E. lat. 54. 18. N. Pop. about 18,000.

Elbonen, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saatz, with a citadel; seated on a mountain, by the river Eger, 10 m. N. E. of Egra.

Elbridge, p.t. Onondaga Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,357.

Elburn, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, on the E. coast of Zuyder Zee, 10 m. N. E. of Harderwick.

Elche Albufera de, a town of Spain, in Valencia, 10 m. W. S. W. of Alicant.

Elchingen, a village of Suabia, on the N. bank of the Danube, about 5 m. N. E. of Ulm, where a battle was fought between the French and Austrians in 1805, which obtained for Ney, one of Bonaparte's generals, the title of duke of Elchingen.

Elida, a town of Spain, in Valencia, 20 m. W. N. W. of Alicant.

Elderton, p.t. Armstrong Co. Pa.

Eldridge, p.v. Buckingham Co. Va. Also a township in Huron Co. Ohio.

Elephanta, called by the natives Gharipoor, an island on the W. coast of Hindoostan, 5 m. from Bombay. It contains one of the most celebrated temples of the Hindoos. The figure of an elephant of the natural size, cut coarsely in stone, appears on the landing place, near the foot of a mountain. An easy slope then leads to a subterranean temple, hewn out of the solid rock, 80 feet long, and 40 broad, the roof supported by rows of pillars 10 feet high. At the further end are gigantic figures of the three Hindoo deities, Brahma, Vishna, and Seva, which were mutilated by the zeal of the Portuguese, when this island was in their possession. Elephanta was ceded to the English by the Mahrattas

Eleuths, a kingdom of Tartary, lying to the N. W. of Chinese Tartary. It was conquered in 1759 by the emperor of China. See Kalmuc.

Elgin, a borough of Scotland, capital of Murrayshire, and formerly the see of a bishop. Here are many large old buildings over piazzas. Its cathedral was one of the most magnificent structures in Scotland; of which its ruins are a sufficient proof. Two miles to the N. E. on the banks of a lake, is the palace of Spynie, formerly the residence of the bishop, of which some rooms are still pretty entire. Elgin stands on the Lossie, 5 m. from its port at Lossiemouth, where there is a tolerable harbour, whence much corn is exported. It is 33 m. E. N. E. of Inverness, and 163 N. of Edinburgh.

Elginshire. See Murrayshire.

Elinge, a village of Hampshire, Eng. at the head of Southampton bay, 5 m. W. of Southampton. Here are docks for building and repairing ships, and store-houses for merchandize and corn, in which last it carries on a considerable trade.

Elie. See Ely.

Elizabeth City, a small county of Virginia, forming the promontory between the mouths of York and James rivers upon Chesapeake bay. Pop. 5,068. The chief town is called Hampton, and gives name to the celebrated anchorage ground called Hampton Roads, at the entrance of James river.—A town of the same name is seated on the Pasquotank river, in North Carolina, which is united with Chesapeake Bay, by the canal cut through the Great Dismal Swamp.

Elizabeth Islands, small islands near the coast of Massachusetts, bearing N. W. of Martha's Vineyard, and belonging to Dukes county. They are about 16 in number; the chief of which are Nashawn, Pasqui, Nashawenna, Pinequese, and Chatabunk. Nashawn, the largest, supports a considerable number of cattle and sheep, and is famous for excellent cheese and wool. It is two miles from the continent, and the N. point 6 m. W. S. W. of Falmouth. Long. 70. 38. W., lat. 41. 34. N.

Elizabeth, p.t. Essex Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,729.

Elizabethtown, a town of New Jersey, in Essex county, with a handsome presbyterian church, an episcopal church, and an academy. It is situate on a creek of Newark bay, 14 m. W. S. W. of the city of New York. Pop. 3,451.

Elizabethtown, a town of North Carolina, chief of Baldwin county, seated on the W. bank of Cape Fear river. 36 m. S. by W. of Fayetteville, and 43 N. W. of Wilmington.

Elizabethtown, or Hagerstown, a town of Maryland, chief of Washington county. It has a considerable trade with the western country, and the neighbourhood produces the finest Orinoko tobacco. It is situate in a valley, 70 m. W. N. W. of Baltimore, and 80 N. N. W. of Washington. Also townships and villages in Lancaster Co. Pa. Alleghany Co. Pa. Bladen Co. N. C. Hardin Co. Ken. Carter Co. Ten. Gallaway Co. Missouri; and Hamilton Co. Ohio.

Elk, a river of Maryland, which falls into the head of Chesapeake bay. It has been lately united with the Delaware, by a Canal.

Elk, a township in Athens Co. Ohio.

Elk River, a township in Columbiana Co. Ohio

Elk Creek, a township of Erin Co. Pa.

Elkhohn, p.v. Montgomery Co. Missouri.

Elkland, a town of Lyeoming Co. Pa.

Elk Lick, a township of Somerset Co. Pa.

Elk Marsh, p.v. Fauquier Co. Va.

Elk Ridge, p.t. Anne Arundel Co. Maryland.
Elkton, villages in Todd Co. Ken. and Giles Co. Ter.

Elkton, a town of Maryland, chief of Cecil county with a considerable trade, particularly in wheat. It is situate at the conflux of the head branches of the Elk, 13 miles from its mouth in Chesapeake bay, and 47 S. W. of Philadelphia. Long. 76. 20. W. lat. 39. 40. N.

Elley p.t. Chataouque Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,001.

Ellesmere, a town in Shropshire, Eng. with a considerable trade in malt. It has a canal from Shrewsbury, which passes hence, by Wrexham and Chester, to the estuary of the Mersey. The town is seated on a large mere, 16 miles N. N. W. of Shrewsbury, and 17 $\frac{1}{2}$  N. W. of London. Pop. in 1821, 6,056.

Elliehpour, or Ellishpoor, a town of Hindoostan, in Berar, capital of a circar of the same name, subject to the Nizam of the Deccan. It was formerly the capital of Berar, and is 154 m. N.E. of Aurungabad. Long. 78. 5. E., lat. 21. 12. N.

Ellicott, p.t. Chataouque Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,101.

Ellington, p.t. Chataouque Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,279.

Ellington, p.t. Tolland Co. Conn. Pop. 1,455.

Elliot, p.t. York Co. Me. Pop. 1,845. Also the name of a missionary station in the eastern part of Mississippi.

Ellisburn, p.t. Jefferson Co. N. Y. Pop. 5,292.

Ellisville, p.v. Nicholas Co. Ken.

Ellorc, a town of Hindoostan, capital of one of the Circars, on the bay of Bengal. It is 32 miles north of Masulipatam. Long. 81. 15. E., lat. 16. 43. N.

Ellsworth, p.t. Hancock Co. Me. Pop. 1,385. Also a township in Trumbull Co. Ohio.

Elbogen, a town of Bohemia, capital of a territory, in the Circle of Saatz, with a castle on a rock, by the river Eggra, 38 miles W. S. W. of Saatz. Long. 12. 50. E., lat. 50. 20. N.

Elne, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees. It suffered greatly in the civil wars, during the reign of Louis XI. and is 8 miles S. by E. of Perpignan.

Elora, a town of Hindoostan, in Dowlatabad, celebrated for its wonderful temple cut out of the natural rock. It is 15 miles N. of Aurungabad.

Elphin, a town of Ireland in the county of Roscommon, and the see of a bishop, 16 m. N. of Roscommon.

Elrich, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, capital of the county of Hohenstein. It stands on the river Zorge, 12 m. N. N. W. of Nordhausen. Long. 10. 43. E., lat. 51. 38. N.

Elsflet, a town of Westphalia, at the conflux of the Hüntorf with the Weser, 13 m. E. N. E. of Oldenburg, and 12 N. W. of Bremen.

Elsworth, t. Salem Co. N. Y.

Elsinburg. See Helsinburg.

Elsinore, a town in Denmark, seated on the Sound, in the isle of Zealand. It is the most commercial place in Denmark, next to Copenhagen, being the residence of a considerable number of foreign merchants, and the consuls of the principal nations trading to the Baltic. A little to the E. is the fortress of Cronborg, which guards the Sound. Every vessel as it passes, pays a toll at Elsinore, in return for which, the crown takes the charge of constructing light-houses, and erecting signals to mark the shoals and rocks, from the Categat to the entrance into the Baltic. Elsinore has no harbour, but a good and safe road, and is 22 m. N. of Copenhagen.

Long. 12. 35. E., lat. 56. 9. N. See Cronborg.

Elstner, White and Black, two rivers of Upper Saxony, the first rises near the northern frontier of Franconia and runs N. nearly parallel with and E. of the Saal, into which it fills about 18 m. N. W. of Leipzig; this river proved very disastrous to the French troops, on their retreat after the battle of Leipzig, in October 1813.—The Black Elster rises near the Spree in Upper Lusatia, and after a winding course E. of the Elbe, falls into that river in the duchy of Saxony.

Elsterberg, a town on the W. bank of the White Elster, near its source, 7 m. N. of Plauen.

Elsterwerda, a town and castle of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, on the E. bank of the Black Elster, 24 m. N. by W. of Dresden.

Eltham, a town in Kent, Eng. Here are the remains of a palace, in which Edward II. often resided, and his son, John of Eltham, was born; it is now in part converted into a farm house, and the stately hall forms the barn. It is 8 m. S. W. of London Bridge. Pop. in 1821, 1,883.

Elvas, a strong frontier town of Portugal, in Alentejo, and a bishop's see, with a castle. Here is a cistern so large, that it will hold water enough for the town for six months. The water is brought by a Moorish aqueduct, three miles in length, which, in some places is supported by several stories of arches. On the side of it is a forest of olive-trees, among which are walks and fine mountains. Elvas was bombarded by the French in 1706. A royal academy for young gentlemen was founded here in 1733. It is seated near the Guadiana, 15 m. W. of Badajos, and 118 E. of Lisbon. Pop. about 16,000.

Elvira, a township in Union Co. Illinois.

Elwangen, a town of Suabia, near the S frontier of Franconia, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the Jaxt, 18 m. N. W. of Nordlingen.

Ely, a city in Cambridgeshire, Eng. and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Ouse (which is navigable hence to Lynn) in the fenny tract, called the Isle of Ely. The spring assizes are held here. It is a county of itself, including the territory around it, and has a distinct civil and criminal jurisdiction, of which the bishop is the head. It has a fine cathedral, but is otherwise a mean place. It is 17 m. N. of Cambridge, and 67 N. by E. of London. Pop. in 1821, 5,679.

Ely, or Elie, a town of Scotland, on the S. E. coast of Fifeshire, with a good harbour, with upwards of 20 feet water at common tide, but has little trade. It is opposite to N. Berwick, and forms the N. point of entrance to the Frith of Forth.

Elyon, p.v. Jefferson Co. Alabama.

Elyria, p.t. Lorrain Co. Ohio.

Elze, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Hildesheim, seated on the Leine, 12 m. S. W. of Hildesheim, and 20 S. of Hanover.

Emanuel, a county of Georgia. Pop. 2,681. Swainsborough is the capital.

Emboly, or Jemboli, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, and a Greek archbishop's see. It is the ancient Amphipolis; and is sometimes called Christopolis. It is seated on the Strumona, at its entrance into the gulf of Contessa. Long. 23. 55. E., lat. 40. 50. N.

Embsen, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. Pop. 894.

Embrun, a city of France, in the department of Upper Alps. It has a fortress built by Louis XIV. and is seated on a craggy rock, near the river Durance, 17 m. E. of Gap. It is the seat of a prefect, and in 1825, contained 3,002 inhabitants.

Emden, a strong town of Westphalia, capital of  $\ddot{U}$ . Friesland. It has a good harbour and a safe road at the mouth of the Ens; and considerable manufactures of stockings, soap, leather, and cotton. The greatest part of the inhabitants are Calvinists, but there are some Lutherans, Papists, and Jews. It was a free port under the protection of the United Provinces, but in 1744 they sold their right to the king of Prussia. It was a neutral port during the early part of the war between England and France, which began in 1793. It is now included in the kingdom of Hanover; population about 12,000. It is 25 m. E. N. E. of Groningen, and 47 W. N. W. of Oldenburg. Long. 7. 8. E., lat. 53. 20. N.

Emmaus, a village of the Moravians in Lehigh Co. Pa.

Emmendingen, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, and chief town in the marquisate of Hochberg, seated on the river Ens, 10 m. N. by W. of Friburgh.

Emmerick, a strong town of Germany, in the duchy of Cleves. It has a considerable trade with Holland, and is seated on the Rhine, 22 m. N. W. of Wesel.

Emmitsburg, p.v. Frederick Co. Maryland, 50 m. N. W. Baltimore.

Ens, a river of Westphalia, which rises in the territory of Paderborn, and after a course of about 150 m. in a N. N. W. direction, flows at Emden, into the Dollart, a bay of the German Ocean.

Ems, or Embs, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, near which are some baths impregnated with sulphur. It is 10 m. S. E. of the lake of Constance.

Encheysen, a town of N. Holland, on the Zuider Zee. It was once a flourishing place; but its harbour being now obstructed by sand, it has lost its former consequence. It was taken by the English in 1799. It is 27 m. N. E. of Amsterdam.

Endeavour Strait, a strait of the S. Pacific Ocean, which separates New Guinea from the N. E. point of New Holland. It received its name from captain Cook, who explored it in 1770. Its length, is 10 leagues, and its breadth about five, except at the N. E. entrance, where it is contracted to less than two miles, by the islands called Prince of Wales Islands.

Endingen, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, near the Rhine, 7 m. N. E. of Old Brisach.

Enfield, a town in Middlesex, Eng. It was once famous for an extensive royal chase, disforested in 1779; and had a royal palace, of which little now remains, the front having been taken down in 1792, and its site occupied by some houses. It is 10 m. N. of London. Pop. 8,227.

Enfield, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H. 105 m. fr. Boston. Pop. 1,492.

Enfield, p.t. Hampshire Co. Mass. Pop. 1,058.

Enfield, a town of Connecticut, in Hartford county, situate on the E. bank of the Connecticut, 16 m. N. by E. of Hartford. Pop. 2,129.

Enfield, p.t. Tompkins Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,332. Also a village in Halifax Co. N. C.

Engadina, or Inthal, a delightful valley of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, extending along the banks of the river Inn, from its source to Tyrol. It is divided into Upper and Lower, the chief towns are Zurz and Cernetz.

Engelberg, a valley of Switzerland, in the canton of Underwalden, 10 m. long, surrounded by mountains. It is subject to the abbot of a Benedictine monastery of the same name, whose revenues arise principally from a commerce in cheese. The country contains extensive glaciers, on the side of fertile mountains, fine black marble, white veined; small crystals called Swiss diamonds; silver and vitriol. The abbey is 12 m. S. W. of Altdorf.

Engelholm, a sea port of Sweden, in Schonen, on a bay of the Categat, with good anchorage near the entrance to the Sound. In 1678, it was taken by the Danes, after an obstinate defence. It is 44 m. N. by W. of Lund. Long. 12. 57. E., lat. 56. 22. N.

Engers, a town of Germany, in the Westerland, capital of a county of its name; seated near the Rhine, 5 m. N. W. of Coblentz.

Enghein, a town of the Netherlands, in Hainhault, 15 m. S. W. of Brussels, on the road to Tournay. It gives the title of Duke to one of the Bourbon family.

Engia, Engina, or Ægina (its ancient name), an island of European Turkey, in the gulf of Engia, between Livadia and the Morea. It has a town of the same name, 22 m. S. S. W. of Athens. Long. 23. 39. E., lat. 37. 45. N.

England, the southern part of the island of Great Britain is a very irregularly shaped territory, extending in its extreme length, from the Land's End in Cornwall, in the lat. of 50. 4. 7. and long. of 5. 41. 31. to Berwick, at the mouth of the Tweed, which divides it from Scotland, in the lat. of 55. 46. 21. N., and 1. 59. 41. of W. long. The meridional distance between these two points is 366 geographical, or 425 English statute m.; this line, however, intersects the entrance to the Bristol channel, South and North Wales, and the Irish Sea; the extreme meridional line that could be drawn on English ground, from N. to S. would be from Berwick to St. Alban's Head, in the county of Dorset: this line would measure 366 statute m.; and the extreme length from W. to E. would be from the Land's End, Cornwall, to the Dudgeon lights on the N. E. coast of Norfolk, which would measure 359 statute m. The four S. E. counties of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall, however form a promontory; and as the superficial area of England by actual survey proves to be 50,535 square m. taking the length from N. to S. to be 366 m. the mean breadth from W. to E. will be within 150 m. The sea on the S. is called the English Channel, and which divides England from the N. W. coast of France: the sea at the S. E. point is called the straits of Dover, and divides England from the N. W. point of France and the Netherlands: the sea on the E. coast of England is called the North Sea, or German Ocean, and divides England from Holland, Germany, and Jutland: the sea on the N. W. coast of England is called the Irish Sea, and divides England from the N. E. coast of Ireland. Wales, North and South, bound the centre of its western side; and the four S. W. counties before mentioned, project into the Atlantic Ocean. England, for local purposes, is divided into 40 counties, viz.: Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester, Cornwall, Cumberland, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Durham, Essex, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Huntingdon, Hertford, Kent, Lancaster, Leicester, Lincoln, Middlesex, Monmouth, Norfolk, Northampton, Northumberland, Nottingham, Oxford, Rutland, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Suffolk, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Westmorland, Wilts, Worcester, and York; each of which is subdivided into hundreds and parishes. For judicial purposes it is divided into six circuits; and for ecclesiastical purposes into two archiepiscopal and 20 episcopal sees, or jurisdictions. The extent, relations, &c., of each of the several counties, towns, &c., are noticed in their alphabetical place in this work.

The face of the country affords all that beautiful variety which can be found in the most extensive tracts of the globe; not, however, without romantic, and even dreary scenes, lofty mountains, craggy rocks, black barren moors, and wide uncultivated heaths; and yet, few countries have a smaller proportion of land, absolutely sterile and incapable of culture. The richest parts are, in general, the midland and southern. Towards the N. it partakes of the barrenness of the adjoining parts of Scotland. The E. coast is in many places, sandy and marshy. A range of rude and elevated land, sometimes rising into mountains 3,000 feet in height, extends from the borders of Scotland to the very heart of England, forming a natural division between the E. and W. sides of the kingdom. Cornwall is also a rough hilly tract; and a similar character prevails in part of the adjacent counties. These mountainous tracts abound with various mineral treasures, more particularly coal, iron, copper, lead, and tin.

The rivers of England are numerous, and contribute essentially to the beauty and fertility of the country, as well as to facilitate the conveyance of its products from one part of the kingdom to another: the four most deserving of notice for their magnitude and utility, are the Trent, Mersey, Severn, and Thames. These four rivers rise in the interior of the country, and flow in contrary directions, the first to the N. E., the next to the N. W., the Severn to the S. W., and the Thames to the S. E.; and being rendered navigable and united to each other by canals, they afford an admirable facility of conveyance over all parts of the country. In addition to these, the great Ouse and the Nen, flow from the centre of the country in a N. E. direction, into the N. sea between the Thames and the Trent, and the Nen is united to the line of canal which unites those two rivers, and thereby with the Mersey and Severn. Further N. are the Humber, Tees, Wear, Tyne, and the Tweed, which divides England from Scotland, all flowing from W. to E. into the North Sea; and on the other side is the Eden, Derwent, Ribble and the Dee, flowing into the Irish Sea: the tributary rivers deserving of notice, are the Medway and Lea, falling into the Thames, the Soar and Derwent falling into the Trent, the Don, Aire, and Ouse falling into the Humber, the Irwell into the Mersey, and the Upper and Lower Avon and Wye into the Severn; all of which are navigable, and yield a variety of fish: The Tamar, Torridge, Tame, Exe, Arun, and a few other rivers of inferior note, intersect the S. and S. W. parts of the country, falling into the Bristol and English channels. The lakes are neither numerous nor extensive, and are chiefly in the N. W. counties: those of Westmoreland and Cumberland, in particular, exhibit such varieties of beautiful scenery, as to become the object of summer excursions from every part of the country. With respect to climate, England is situate in the N. part of the temperate zone, so that it enjoys but a scanty share of the genial influence of the sun. Its atmosphere is inclined to chillness and moisture, subject to frequent and sudden changes; and is more favourable to the growth, than to the ripening of the products of the earth. No country is clothed with so beautiful and lasting a verdure, but the harvests, especially in the northern parts, frequently suffer from unseasonable rains. The country, nevertheless, generally affords an abundant supply of grain, and all the other necessaries of life, and the rigours of winter, and the heats of summer, are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent; a circumstance common to all islands. The whole country, some particular spots excepted, is sufficiently healthy; and the longevity of its inhabitants is equal to that of almost any region. All its most valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, have been imported from foreign countries, and have been kept up and improved by constant attention. England has now no other wild quadrupeds than those of the smaller kind; as the fox, badger, marten, otter, hare, rabbit, squirrel, &c. On the other hand, every kind of domestic animal, imported from abroad, has been reared to the greatest degree of perfection. The horse has been trained up for all the various purposes of strength and swiftness, so as to excel in those qualities the same animal in every other country. The whole number kept in Great Britain has been estimated at 1,500,000, including every valuable variety of that noble animal. The breeds of cattle in various parts of the kingdom have also been cultivated with much care, and have been brought to the largest size and greatest justness of shape. The different races of sheep are variously distinguished, either for uncommon size, goodness of flesh, or plenty or fineness of wool. The deer of its parks, which are originally a foreign breed, are superior in beauty of skin, and delicacy of flesh, to those of most countries. Even the several kinds of dogs have been trained to degrees of courage, strength, and sagacity, rarely to be met with elsewhere. Domestic poultry, as well as wild birds, are numerous; the shape and beauty of plumage of the pheasant, and delicious note of the nightingale, cannot be surpassed. The improvement in the vegetable products of this island is not less striking than in the animal. Nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, were almost all the variety of vegetable food which its woods could boast. To other countries, and to the efforts of culture, it is indebted for corn, esculent roots, plants, and all its garden fruits. The seas as well as the rivers of England are stocked with a great variety of fish, which yield a plentiful article of provision to all ranks of people.

The English are generally of a middle size, and are upon an average an inch shorter than the Americans. They are well-formed, handsome, robust, and though not so fair as the northern nations generally, of a florid complexion. The females are distinguished for their grace and beauty. In the cities and among the more fashionable classes their dress is showy, although the fashions are generally copied from the French. The manners of the English are formal, stiff, and reserved, and there is no country where ranks and conditions are fenced round with so many barriers.

Of the early history of England, but little is known prior to its becoming a province of the Roman empire, during the first century of the Christian era. The first invasion of England by the Romans was under Julius Cæsar in the year 55, at which period the country was inhabited by a very numerous but hardy and rude race of people denominated Britons, living in tribes and subject to an austere and rigorous priesthood. About the year 86 the whole country, after numerous conflicts, was subdued by the Romans. During a period of nearly 400 years, from the time of Agricola to the year 447, when the Romans finally quitted the island, they had effectually succeeded in reconciling the natives to a dependence on their government, and in diffusing a taste and desire to cultivate and practice the arts of social life; they had, however, so implicitly yielded to Roman government and protection, that, on being left to govern and protect themselves, they were unable to withstand the rude and vigorous attacks of the Piets and Scots, who poured into the country from the north. The Romans, on being applied to by the Britons, declining from inability to render them assistance, the Britons invited the assistance of the Saxons, a people who had acquired celebrity for their valour in the north of Europe. In the year 449 Hengist and Horsa, two Saxon leaders, arrived with a force of 1,600 men, who succeeded in speedily subduing the Scots and Piets; but perceiving the inefficiency of the Britons, the Saxons obtained a succession of reinforcements, made allies of the Scots and Piets, and turned their whole force to the subjugation of England; and, in the progress of time, the country became divided into seven monarchies, some one of which, however in its turn maintaining an ascendancy over the rest, the ascendant monarch being regarded as king of England. The following is a list of the seven monarchies: with the dates of their foundation and extinction, viz —

Kent . . . . .	founded in 454	extinct 823
South Saxons . .	— 491 —	655
East Saxons . . .	— 527 —	827
Northumberland .	— 547 —	827
East Angles . . .	— 575 —	792
Mercia . . . . .	— 582 —	827
West Saxons . . .	— 592 —	828

This period is denominated the Heptarchy, which merged into an undivided sovereignty under Egbert, the 17th king of the West Saxons, in 828. In 860 the Saxon Dynasty in its turn was assailed by the Danes, and, after repeated conflicts and aggressions, Sweyn, a Dane, was crowned king of England in 1013. The crown reverted again to the Saxons in Edward, surnamed the Confessor, in 1042; but on the 14th of October, 1066, the destinies of England were placed in the hands of William of Normandy, surnamed the Conqueror, from the decisive victory he gained on that day, over Harold II., king of England. From that period to the present time the whole country has been under the rule of a successive line of kings, except for 11 years, from 1649, to 1660, when it was under the protectorate of Cromwell, during which time it was ruled by the Parliament or the Protector, and was called the commonwealth of England.

England, New. See New England.

English Town, p.v. Monmouth Co. N. Y.

English Turn, a bend in the river Mississippi, 18 m. below New Orleans.

Enköping, a town of Sweden, in Upland, on the N. side of Lake Mæler, 21 m. S. W. of Upsal.

Ennis, a town in the parish of Drumcliff, Ireland, capital of the county of Clare. It is seated near the head of a bay, on the N. side of the river Shannon. It is 19 m. N. N. W. of Limerick, and 113 S. S. W. of Dublin. Population of the town (which is sometimes called Clare), in 1821, 6,702, and the remainder of the parish 3,533 more. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Enniscorthy, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, with a manufacture of coarse woollen cloth, and some iron works. It is situate on the Slaney, close under Vinegar-hall, 10 m. N. of Wexford, and 27 N. E. of Waterford.

Enniskillen, a borough of Ireland, capital of the county of Fermanagh. It is seated on an island in Lough Erne, where that lake is contracted for about six miles to the width of an ordinary river, and has a strong fort, it being a pass of great importance between the N. and S. of Ireland. In 1595 it made an obstinate defence against the army of queen Elizabeth, and again in 1680 against James II. It is 80 m. N. W. of Dublin. Population, in 1821, 2,309, and of the parish 10,000 more. It returns one member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Ennisville, p.v. Huntingdon Co. Pa.

Eno, or Enos, a town of European Turkey, in Rumelia, and a Greek archbishop's see; seated near a gulf of the Archipelago, at the influx of the Marissa, 90 m. S. by W. of Adrianople, and 145 W. S. W. of Constantinople. Long. 28. 15. E., lat. 40. 46. N.

Enosburgh, p.t. Franklin Co. Vt. Pop. 1,560.

Ens, a town of Austria, on a river of the same name, at its conflux with the Danube, 12 m. E. S. E. of Lintz.

Enseut, a town of Egypt, on the E. side of the Nile. Here are considerable ruins of the ancient Antinoë. It is 120 m. S. of Cairo. Long. 30. 54. E., lat. 28. 5. N.

Ensisheim, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on the river Ille, 10 m. S. of Colmar.

Enskirken, a town in the duchy of Juliers, 15 m. S. W. of Cologne.

Eustorf, a town of the palatinate of Bavaria, 22 miles N. of Ratibon.

Entlibuch, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucern, 14 m. W. S. W. of Lucern.

Entre Douro e Minho, the most N. W. province of Portugal, lying on the sea coast, between the rivers Douro and Minho, and bounded on the E. by Tralos Montes. It is 68 miles from N. to S., and 40 broad, and in 1810 contained a population of 907,965. Braga, 30 miles N. N. E. of Oporto, is the capital. It is watered by two other rivers, falling into the Atlantic Ocean, viz. the Lima and Cavado; the other principal towns are, Lagos, Lapeda, and Moncao, on the S. bank of the Minho, which divides the province from the Spanish province of Galicia: Port de Lima, and Viana, near the mouth of the Lima, Barcellos, between Braga and the mouth of the Cabado, Guimaraens, and Amarante in the S. E. and Oporto on the N. bank near the mouth of the Douro, which separates the province from Beira.

Eperias, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of the county of Saros, celebrated for its mines of salt. It is seated on the Tatzta, 20 miles N. E. of Cassovia. Long. 21. 13. E., lat. 48. 50. N. Pop. about 7,500.

Eperuay, a town of France, in the department of Marne. It was taken by Henry IV., in 1592, when marshal Biron was killed while the king's hand was on his shoulder. The wines produced in its neighbourhood are excellent. It is 17 miles N. W. of Chalons, and the seat of a prefect, with a population in 1825, of 4,997.

Epernon, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire, 15 m. N. N. E. of Chartres.

Ephesus, a village of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, anciently one of the most splendid cities of Asia Minor, and the most frequented emporium of that continent. Of its former splendour there is nothing to be seen but heaps of marble, overturned walls, columns, capitals, and pieces of statues. The fortress, which is upon an eminence, seems to have been the work of the Greek emperors; and also the aqueduct, part of which is yet standing, supported by pillars of fine marble. The eastern gate has three basso-relievos, taken from some ancient monuments; that in the middle was constructed by the Romans. The most remarkable structure was the Temple of Diana, deemed one of the seven wonders of the world, and which the primitive Christians had converted into a church; but it is now so entirely ruined, that it is not easy to find the ground-plot. Ephesus is seated near the mouth of the Cayster, which formerly afforded a good harbour for ships, but is now almost choked up with sand. The present inhabitants are only Greek peasants, who live in extreme wretchedness and insensibility. It is 30 miles S. S. E. of Smyrna. Long. 27. 23. E., lat. 38. 8. N.

Ephrata, or Tunkerstown, a town of Pennsylvania, in Lancaster county, and the principal settlement of a sect called Tankers [Dippers], who are of German extraction, and first appeared in America in 1719. It is 22 miles N. of Lancaster.

Epinal, a town of France, capital of the department of Vosges. It is famous for its paper-mills, and seated on the river Moselle, near the mountains of the Vosges, 65 miles S. W. of Strasburg, and 195 E. by S. of Paris. Pop. in 1825, 7,941.

Epping, a town in Essex, Eng. It is famous for excellent butter, and seated at the N. end of a forest of the same name, 17 miles N. N. E. of London. Pop. in 1821, 1,658.

Epping, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H. 20 m. fr. Portsmouth. Pop. 1,263.

Epsom, p.t. Merrimack Co. N. H. Pop. 1,418.

Epsom, a town in Surrey, Eng. celebrated for its mineral waters and salts; and on its neighbouring downs are annual horse-races. It is 15 miles S. S. W. of London. Population in 1821 3,890.

Epsworth, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng. on the isle of Axholm, with a manufacture of sacking. John Wesley, the founder of the Arminian sect of methodists, was born here. It is 11 miles N. of Gainsborough, and 106 N. N. W. of London. Pop. in 1821, 1,502.

Erbach, a town of Franconia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle. It is 22 miles W. by S. of Wertheim, and 35 S. S. E. of Frankfort.

Erekli, a town of European Turkey, on the N. shore of the sea of Marmora, 55 m. Jes W. of Constantinople. It was the ancient Heraclina, and contains the ruins of an amphitheatre, built by the emperor Severus; and a wall at some former time extended from this place to Derkus on the shore of the Black Sea, a distance of about 55 miles, the object of which, seems to have been the protection of Constantinople from the northern barbarians.

* * There is another town of the same name on the S. W. shore of the Black Sea, 130 m. E. by N. of Constantinople.

Erfurt, a city of Upper Saxony, sometimes accounted the capital of Thuringia, with a university and two strong forts. The principal magistrate is sometimes a protestant and sometimes a papist; but the greatest part of the burghers are protestants. It has three fine libraries, one of which belongs to the papists, another to the university, and a third to the protestant ministers. The inhabitants are computed at 15,000. A fire happened here in 1736, which burnt down 180 houses, and several churches. In 1806 it was taken by the French; and in 1814, it surrendered to the allies. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Gerar, 58 m. W. S. W. of Leipzig.

Eribol, Loch, in Scotland, an arm of the sea, on the N. coast of Sutherlandshire, in the long. of 4. 30. W., capable of affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels. It receives several streams; particularly that which flows from a lake called Loch Hope.

Ericht, Loch, a lake of Scotland, lying in the counties of Inverness and Perth. It is 24 m. in length and one in breadth, surrounded by lofty mountains and rugged cliffs, and its banks covered with heath and a few straggling birches and alders. Its outlet, at the S. extremity, is the river Eriecht, which flows into Loch Rannock.

Eric, Lake, one of the great chain of lakes in North America, lies between 79. and 84. W. long., and 41. and 43. N. lat. Its length is 230 m. and 40 its medium breadth. It is upwards of 650 m. in circumference, and navigable for ships of any burthen. The coast on both sides is generally favourable for batteaux and canoes; yet in some places, chiefly on the S. side, there are rocks that extend several m. in length. Some of these, near the mouth of the Cuyahoga, rise 40 or 50 feet perpendicular out of the water, and project over the lake. The heathen Indians, when they pass this impending danger, offer a sacrifice of tobacco to the water. The islands and banks towards its W. end are so infested with rattlesnakes, as to render it dangerous to land on them. The lake is covered, near the banks of the islands, with a large pond lily; the leaves of which are thickly spread on the surface of the water, to an extent of many acres: on these, in the summer, lie myriads of watersnakes, basking in the sun. This lake, at its N. W. end, receives the waters of the great chain, from the N. W. by the river Detroit, and discharges them by the river Niagara, over the great falls at its N. E. end, into Lake Ontario. It forms the boundary line between the United States, and British North American territories, both parties claiming an equal right of navigation. During the war of 1812—1815, the Americans had a squadron of 9 vessels, carrying 56 guns, and the British one of 6 vessels, carrying 60 guns; on the 10th of September 1813, after an action of three hours, the whole of the British squadron surrendered to the American Commodore Perry. The English have a fort called fort Erie, at the N. E. extremity of the lake where it narrows into the river Niagara, in the lat. of 42. 57. N., and 78. 20. of W. long.

Erie, a county of West Pennsylvania. The N. W. side is washed by the shore of the lake, the W. end borders on the State of Ohio, and the E. end on that of New York. Its area is about 750 square m. Pop. 16,906. A town of the same name seated near the shore of the lake, is 315 m. in a meridional line, N. N. W. of Philadelphia.

Erie, a county of New York, bordering on the E. end of the lake and Niagara river, bounded N. by the Tonawanta, and S. by the Cattaraugus river. Buffalo, opposite the British fort Erie, is the chief town. Pop. 35,710.

Erie, p.v. Erie Co. N. Y.

Erie, p.t. Erie Co. Pa. on Lake Erie at the harbour of Presqu' Isle which is safe and commodious but has only 8 feet water at the entrance. The town has considerable trade, principally by the lake commerce. A turnpike road extends from hence to Pittsburg.

Erieville, p.v. Madison Co. N. Y.

Erie Canal, the largest in the United States unites Lake Erie with the river Hudson. It is 362 m. long, 40 feet wide and 4 deep. It has 679 feet of lockage; the locks are 90 feet in length and 15 in width. This immense work leaves the lake at Buffalo and passes northwardly along Niagara river towards lake Ontario. It then turns to the east and proceeds northward of the small lakes of New York to the valley of the Mohawk down which it passes to the mouth of that stream. It then follows the western bank of the Hudson to Albany where it joins the river. It has several large aqueducts; one of which across the Genesee at Rochester is 804 feet in length, and two other across the Mohawk are 1188 and 748 feet in length. The sides of the canal are paved with stone or covered with thick grass. There are a number of branches or side cuts to this canal; one of them which extending from Syracuse to Oswego is 33 m. long, and another to Geneva 20 m. The navigation upon this canal is very great, and the canal duties amply compensate the cost of the work, which was above 7,000,000 dollars. It was begun in 1817 and finished in 1825.

Travelling upon the canal is very easy and cheap. The boats for passengers are 80 feet long with cabins nearly the whole length of the deck. They are drawn by horses and proceed 4 m. an hour, day and night. The fare is 4 cents per mile.

Eriskay, a small island of the Hebrides of Scotland, at the S. end of South Uist; noted for being the first place upon which Charles Stuart landed, in his wild attempt to gain the British crown.

Erith, a village in Kent, Eng. on the Thames, 5 m. E. by S. of Woolwich. Great quantities of corn and wood are shipped hence; and here the East India ships, in their passage up the river, generally discharge a part of their cargoes.

Erivan, the capital of Persian Armenia, in a province of the same name, and the seat of an Armenian patriarch. The city is defended by a fortress, in which is the governor's palace, and by a castle, on the river Zuengui, near the lake of Erivan, which is very deep, and 60 m. in circumference. The Meidan is an open square, 400 paces over, in which are very fine trees. The baths and caravanseis have their beauties, but the churches of the Christians are small, and half under ground. It is seated on the banks of the Arus river, which runs past Shirvan into the Caspian sea, from which it is distant about 130 m., and about the same distance from Gonieh on the S. E. shore of the Black Sea. Long. 44. 10. E., lat. 40. 20. N.

Erkelens, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the Roer, 10 m. N. W. of Juliers. Pop. about 2,300.

Erlan, or Erlau, a populous town on the frontiers of Lower and Upper Hungary, 60 m. E. N. E. of Buda. It is the see of an archbishop. The cathedral and archiepiscopal palace are stately edifices.

Erlangen, a town of Franconia, with a university and a palace. It is divided into the old and new town; and the latter is one of the handsomest towns in Germany. The principal manufactures are hats, gloves, and stockings. It is seated on the Rednitz, 12 m. N. of Nuremberg; and is now included in the dominions of the king of Bavaria. Long. 11. 2. E., lat. 49. 38. N.

Erne, a river of Scotland, which issues from a lake of the same name in Perthshire, flows by Crieff, and joins the Tay, a little below Abernethy.

Erne, a river of Ireland, which issues from a small lake on the N. border of the county of Longford, flows N. through that of Cavan, and N. W. through Fermanagh into Donegal bay. In the latter county it forms a lake, called Lough Erne 30 m. in length, containing several islands; and on one in the middle part, where the lake is very narrow, stands the town of Enniskillen.

Ernee, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne, on a river of the same name, 15 m. N. N. W. of Laval.

Erodu, or Erzoad, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a large mud fort. Much coarse cotton cloth is made here and in the vicinity. It is seated on a canal from the Bhawani, E. of the Cavery river, 75 m. W. N. W. of Trichinopoly.

Errol, t. Coos Co. N. H. on the W. of Umbagog lake. Pop. 82.

Erromango, one of the new Hebrides in the S. Pacific Ocean, 70 m. in circumference, with low shores. On the W. side is a promontory that separates two bays, and captain Cook, from the treacherous behaviour of the inhabitants, named it Traitor's Head. Long. 169. 19. E., lat. 13. 47. S.

Erzy, a town of France, in the department of Aube, 17 m. S. by W. of Troyes.

Erzerum, or Arz Roum, the capital of Turkish Armenia, with Armenian and Greek episcopal sees. It is surrounded by double walls, defended by strong towers, and estimated to contain 125,000 inhabitants. The Turks are all janissaries; but most of them tradesmen, and receive no pay. The Armenians have two churches, the Greeks but one; the latter are mostly braziers, and live in the suburbs. A great trade is carried on in furs, Persian silks, cottons, calicoes, and drugs. This city is a thoroughfare, and a resting place, for the caravans to the East Indies. It is situate between the two sources of the Euphrates, at the foot of a chain of mountains, 104 m. S. E. of Trebisond, on the S. E. shore of the Black Sea. Long. 41. 36. E., lat. 39. 57. N.

Erzeberg, Circle of, a populous district of Upper Saxony, forming the S. W. part of the Margraviate of Meissen, or Misnia, bounded on the

S. by the Bohemian mountains. It abounds in valuable minerals. Freyburg, Altenburg, and Chemnitz, are the principal towns.

Escalona, a town of Spain, in New Castile, surrounded by walls. It is situate on an eminence, in a fertile country, near the Albreche, a tributary of the Tagus, 20 m. N. W. of Toledo, and 32 S. W. of Madrid.

Escambia, a county of West Florida. Pop. 3,386. Pensacola is the capital.

Eschwegen, a town and castle of Germany, in the landgraviate of Hesse Cassel, seated on the Werra, 25 m. E. S. E. of Cassel.

Escorial, a village of Spain, in New Castile, seated on the Gnadara, 15 m. N. W. of Madrid. It takes its name from a noble structure, founded by Philip II. in memory of the victory gained over the French near St. Quentin, in 1557. This edifice consists of a royal palace, a church, a monastery, a college, a library, shops of different artists, apartments for a great number of people, beautiful walks, large alleys, an extensive park, and fine gardens. It is built of grey stones, found in the neighbourhood, and in the form of a gridiron, because St. Lawrence, on whose day the victory was gained, suffered martyrdom by being broiled on such an instrument. It is a long square of 740 feet by 580, and four stories high, with a tower at each angle 200 feet high; and the palace forms the handle of this imaginary gridiron. The most remarkable part is the arched chapel; in which is a magnificent sepulchre called the Pantheon, being built in imitation of that church at Rome: it is the burying-place of the kings and queens of Spain; and is thought by some to be the most curious piece of architecture in the world. The church is built after the model of St. Peter's at Rome.

Esgueira, or Esgueria, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 5 m. S. of Aveiro.

Esk, a river which rises in Scotland, in the N. E. part of Dumfriesshire, and flows S. E. through a dale to which it gives name to the edge of the county. It there receives the Liddel from Roxburghshire, and enters Cumberland, flowing S. by Longtown into the N. E. extremity of Solway frith.

Esk, a river of Scotland, in Edinburghshire, formed by the junction of two streams called N. and S. Esk. They almost encircle the town of Dalkeith, passing on each side of the eminence on which it stands, and unite a little below the town. The river enters the Frith of Forth, at Musselburgh.

Esk, North and South, two rivers of Scotland, in Angusshire, which descend from the hills called the Braes of Angus. The former divides the county from Kincardineshire for several miles, and reaches the ocean, a little to the N. of Montrose: the latter, after traversing the whole breadth of the county, enters the bay on the W. of the same town.

Eski Shehr, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Nattolia, on the river Sakaria, which falls into the Black Sea, 80 m. E. S. E. of Bursa. Long. 31. 18. E., lat. 39. 48. N.

Esne, Asua, or Esnay, a town of Egypt, supposed to be the ancient Latopolis. Here is an ancient temple, with walls on three sides, and in the front 24 columns, well preserved: within it are three stories of hieroglyphics, of men about three feet high; and the ceiling is adorned with animals, painted with beautiful colours. On the N. side of the town is another temple; richly carved with hieroglyphics, crocodiles, &c. and a mile to the S. is the monastery of St. Helena, which contains many magnificent tombs. Esne stands on the Nile, 300 m. S. of Cario. Long. 31. 40. E., lat. 24. 46. N.

Esopus, p.t. Ulster Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,770.

Espalion, a town of France, in the department of Aveiron, on the river Lot, 14 m. N. N. E. of Rhodéz. It is the seat of a prefect, and in 1825 contained 3,261 inhabitants.

Esperance, p.v. Scholarie Co. N. Y.

Esposenda, or Espandenda, a sea-port of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, at the mouth of the Cavado, 22 m. N. of Oporto. Long. 8. 21. W., lat. 41. 32. N.

Esquimaux, a people of North America, chiefly inhabiting Labrador, the shores of Hudson's bay, the country between Gulf Welcome and Mackenzie's River, and probably Bhering's Straits. To the S. they extend as far as Slave Lake, and, to the N., the territory which they occupy is bounded by an icy sea, if such a sea really exists, or else they extend their wandering excursions into a frozen desert. A permanent establishment of this nation was met with by Captain Ross, at Prince Regent's Bay, in lat. 76. N.; and their huts were numerous in many parts of Melville Island, in lat. 75. N. The latter officer observed them frequently in the islands of the Archipelago of Barrow's Straits, though their timidity prevented any intercourse. Little, squat, and feeble, the complexion of these Polar men partakes less of a copper hue, than of a reddish and dirty yellow. Their huts, which are of a circular form, and are covered with deer-skins, can only be entered by creeping on the belly. Yet the rude necessities of the climate have suggested to this feeble race many contrivances which do honour to their ingenuity. The snoic-house, or the comfortable, and comparatively speaking commodious dwelling, which they construct from the frozen snow that surrounds them, affords a favourable example. The rapidity and neatness with which they raise these edifices, and render them impervious to the rigorous atmosphere around, is truly admirable; and these edifices, when finished, afford their inhabitants a similar protection to that which the vegetable world receives from a covering of snow. The Esquimaux of Prince Regent's Bay, and of the Arctic Highlands, are entirely ignorant of boats and canoes, affording, it is said, a unique instance of a fishing tribe unacquainted with the means of floating on the water. Ross advances strong grounds for considering them as the true aboriginal race, from whence all other Esquimaux are derived. They seem utterly ignorant of the nations to the south, and may be considered as an independent tribe, separated by almost impassable mountains from the regions of South Greenland, and extending beyond the most northern inlet of Baffin's Bay. They are almost entirely destitute of religious ideas. The other tribes have canoes made of the skins of the sea calf, which sail with great swiftness. These savages patiently work a grey and porous stone into the shape of pitchers and kettles. The edges of these vases are elegantly ornamented. They preserve their provisions of meat in bags, filled with whale oil. Those who live near the mouth of Mackenzie's River, shave their heads, a peculiar custom, but not sufficient of itself to prove an Asiatic origin.

Esquimaux Bay, a bay on the S. coast of Labrador, at the entrance to the straits of Belleisle from the gulf of St. Lawrence. Long. 57. 59. W., lat. 51. 30. N.

Esquimaux Islands, a cluster of small islands in the gulf of St. Lawrence, off the entrance to the bay.

Esseg, or Eszek, a trading town of Selavonia, with a strong castle. It has a wooden bridge over the Drave, into Lower Hungary, and the marshes, 8 m. in length, and 80 feet in breadth, with towers at a quarter of a m. distant from each other. It is a difficult pass, and several battles have been fought here between the Turks and Germans. Esseg was taken from the Turks in 1687, since which time it has continued in the hands of the house of Austria. It is seated on the river Drave, 100 m. W. N. W. of Belgrade, and 136 S. of Buda. Long. 19. 16. E., lat. 30. 45. N. Pop. about 9,000.

Essen, a town of Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg. Here are several Catholic churches and convents, but the inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans. It is 8 m. E. of Duysburg.

Essens, a town of Westphalia, in East Friesland, near the German Ocean, 20 m. N. N. E. of Emden.

Essiquibo, a river of Dutch Guiana, on which is a settlement of the same name, in lat. 7. N. long. 58. 30. W. It formerly belonged to the Dutch, but was ceded to the English in 1814. The river is 300 m. long and 20 wide at its mouth but incommoded with shoals. The whole district is fertile and well cultivated, producing coffee, cotton, sugar and cocoa.

Essex, a maritime and beautifully fertile county of England. It is bounded on the S. by the river Thames, which divides it from the county of Kent. The county is nearly a square, the area of which is 1,532 square m. It possesses a variety of soil and face of country. The S. W. part is occupied principally by the two forests of Epping and Hainbault, and is noted for its butter, which takes the name of Epping butter. The N. W. part from Saffron-Walden to Cambridge, is famous for the growth of saffron; and for a kind of triple crop of coriander, caraway, and teazle, which are all sown together, but come to maturity at different periods. The middle part is a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and sprinkled with woods. The part bordering on the Thames and the sea consists chiefly of marshy grounds, which afford excellent pasturage, being secured from the inroad of the tides by embankments. Its contiguity to the metropolis, affords it a facile and advantageous market for its surplus produce of grain, seeds, calves, butter, poultry, potatoes, fruit, wild fowl, and oysters, all of which it supplies in a greater proportion than any other county in the kingdom; yet, notwithstanding all the advantages of fertility, abundance, and contiguity to market, pauperism and crime prevail to an equal extent to any, and to a much greater extent than in most other parts of the kingdom. The manufacture of baize and other worsted stuffs was formerly carried on over the greater part of this county, but since the middle of the 18th century it has progressively declined, and is now almost extinct. It has large establishments for the printing of calico, and mills for making sheet lead.

Essex is also the name of a county in Upper Canada, forming a promontory at the southern extremity of the province, and nearly surrounded by lakes Erie, and St. Clair, and Detroit river.

Essex is also the name of five counties in different parts of the United States of America: viz.

First in Vermont, bounded on the E. for about 45 m. by the Connecticut river, and bounded on the N. by Lower Canada; its mean breadth is about 20 m. Population 3,981: chief town Guildhall.

Second, forming the N. E. part of the state of Massachusetts, bordering on New Hampshire and the Atlantic Ocean; it is intersected by the Merrimack river, and contains several large towns: viz. Newburyport, Ipswich, Gloucester Marblehead, Salem, and Beverly, &c. Population 82,887. Salem is the chief town.

Third, in New York, bounded on the E. for 52 m. by lake Champlain. Population 19,187. The court house is at Elizabethtown, in Pleasant Valley.

Fourth, in New Jersey, bounded on the W., N. and E. by the Passaic river; its area is only about 150 square m. Pop. 41,028. Newark, is the chief town; its contiguity to New York renders it the most populous and important part of the State.

Fifth, in the E. District of Virginia, on the S. W. bank of the Rappahannock river, along which it extends about 30 m. being about 8 m. in mean breadth. Pop. 10,531. Tappahannock, is the chief town.

Essex, p.t. Chittenden Co. Vt. Pop. 1,664 Also a village in Middlesex Co. Conn.

Esslingen, a village of Austria, on the N. bank of the Danube, about 6 m. E. S. E. of Vienna, between which and Aspern a sanguinary battle was fought between the French and Austrians, on the 21st and 22nd May, 1809.

Esslingen, a town of Sùabia, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg. Here are several convents, but the inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans. It has three extensive suburbs, and its district yields good Neckar wine. It is seated on the Neckar, 8 m. S. E. of Stuttgart. Pop. about 7,000.

Estain, a town of France in the department of Meuse, 12 m. E. N. E. of Verdun.

Estakur, a town of Persia, in Farsistan, capital of a district of the same name. Near it are the magnificent ruins of ancient Persepolis. It is 50 m. N. E. of Shiras. Long. 53. 40. E., lat. 30. 5. N.

Estarayer, a town and baliwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Friburg, with a fine castle, seated on the lake of Neufchatel, 13 m. W. of Friburg.

Este, a populous town of the Venetian territory, 14 m. S. S. W. of Padua.

Estella, an episcopal town of Spain, in Navarre, with a castle and a university, seated on the Ega, 15 m. W. S. W. of Pamplona. Long. 2. 2 W., lat. 42. 38. N.

Estepa, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with an ancient castle on a mountain, 18 m. S. of Ecija and 58 E. of Seville.

Estepona, a town of Spain, in Granada, near the coast, 20 m. W. S. W. of Marbella.

Esterabad. See Asterabad.

Estonia, or Revel, a government of the Russian empire, bounded on the W. by the Baltic, N. by the gulf of Finland, E. by Ingria, and S. by Livonia. After having been long an object of bloody contention between the Russians, Poles, and Swedes, it was confirmed to the latter by the peace of Oliva in 1660; but it was subdued by Peter the Great in 1710, and finally ceded to Russia in 1721. It is divided into 4 circles. Revel is the capital.

Esthwaite-water, a lake in Lancashire, Eng. between Hawkshead and Windermere-water. It is two m. and a half long, and half a m. broad, intersected by a peninsula from each side, jetting far into the lake. On the banks are villages and scattered houses, pleasantly situate under woods and hanging grounds clothed with verdure, all heightened by the strong back ground of rocky mountains. No char are found in this lake, though it is connected with Windermere-water.

Estill, an interior county in the E. part of the state of Kentucky, intersected by the Kentucky river; its area is about 500 square m. Pop. 4,618. Irvine is the chief town.

Estilleille, p.v. Scott Co. Va.

Estremadura, a province of Spain, extending from the lat. of 37. 56. to 40. 15. of N. lat. bounded on the W. by the Portuguese province of Alentejo and part of Beira. It is about 90 m. in mean breadth, giving an area of 14,400 square m. The pop. in 1820, was returned at 428,493. The N. end is intersected by the Tagus, and the S. by the Guadiana; it seems a country of great capability. The vine, olive, and corn, all luxuriate within its limits. Cattle and fine wool are the chief articles of trade; and great herds of black swine are fed on the hills, which are covered with oaks. Badajoz, near the Portuguese frontier, is the capital, and the other principal towns are Plazencia, Coria, Alcantara, Albuquerque, Truxillo, Merida, Olivenza, Xeres, and Llerena.

Estremadura, the metropolitan province of Portugal, lying on both sides of the Tagus; its area is about 700 square m. and the pop. in 1810, was returned at 826,680. The part S. of the Tagus is mountainous and unproductive, whilst the N. although in parts mountainous, is exceedingly fertile; the vine, olive, orange, lemon, and other delicious fruits, as well as corn, millet, and legumes, abound. Besides Lisbon, the capital of the province, and of all Portugal, the other principal towns are Leyria, Thomar, Abrantes, Santarem, and Alenquer, all N. of the Tagus, and Setubal near the coast on the S.

Estrenos, a town of Portugal, in Alemtejo, and one of the strongest in the kingdom, being surrounded by ten bastions. An earthenware is made here, generally esteemed for its beauty and fine smell; and in the vicinity are quarries of beautiful marble. It is 18 m. W. of Elvas, and 100 E. of Lisbon. Pop. about 5,500.

Essek, or Esseg. See Esseg.

Etampes, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, seated on the river Loet or Etampes, 15 m. E. of Chartres. It is distinguished for the murder of its prefect on the 1st of March, 1792. Pop. in 1825, 7,603.

Etaples, a town of France, in the department of Pas de Calais, situate on the English Channel, near the mouth of the river Canche, 13 m. S. of Boulogne.

Etaja, or Etawch, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, situate on the E. bank of the Junna, which is here 60 feet high. On the top, near the river, are the remains of a fort. It is 62 m. S. E. of Agra. Long. 79. 16. E., lat. 26. 45. N.

Ethiopia, a name by which a vast region of Africa has been distinguished by some geographers, who have divided it into Upper and Lower Ethiopia. The first includes Nubia, Abyssinia, and part of Guinea: the second all the countries S. of the equinoctial line, as Congo, Monumugi, Monomotapa, &c. Ethiopia appears to have once been a great and powerful empire, but the details of its history are lost in the vortex of time. The Egyptian empire, was probably founded on the ruin of that of Ethiopia.

Etienne, St. a town of France, in the department of Loire. Beside the manufactures of arms, hardware, and cutlery (the most considerable in France,) the weaving of ribbands forms a considerable article of commerce. Coal is found in the neighbourhood, and also a soft stone, fit for grindstones. It is the seat of a prefect, 20 m. S. E. of Montrison, and 32 S. W. of Lyon. Pop. in 1825, 19,102.

** There are about a dozen other towns in different parts of France, named after St. Etienne (Stephen) all inconsiderable.

Etre Loch, a navigable inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, in Argyreshire. It is 20 m. in length, but of very unequal breadth; and its banks are indented with creeks, which afford safe anchorage. About 7 m. from the entrance it contracts into a narrow channel, called Connel, where a ridge of rocks occasion, at particular times of the tide, a violent current. About 2 m. below is the ancient castle of Dnstaffnage.

Etna. See Ætna.

Etna, a township in Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 362. Also a village in Tompkins Co. N. Y.

Eton, a town in Buckinghamshire, England, seated on the N. bank of the Thames, opposite to Windsor, to which it is united by an elegant stone bridge over the river. Eton is celebrated for its school, founded by Henry VI. 1440, for the education of 70 scholars, a portion of which, when duly qualified, are annually elected to King's College, Cambridge. In addition to the 70 foundation scholars, there are generally 3 to 400 of the sons of the opulent classes, receive their education at Eton. The buildings are commodious and elegant, their light gothic turrets form a beautiful and interesting contrast to the massive and majestic towers of Windsor Castle, from which it is separated only by the river. Eton is 22 m. N. W. of London. Pop. in 1821, 2,475.

Etruria. See Tuscany, and Stoke upon Trent.

Ettenheim, a town in the territory of the grand duke of Baden, 25 m. S. by E. of Strasburg.

Ettlingen, a town of Suabia, in the duchy of Baden, on the river Albe, 4 m. S. S. W. of Durlach.

Eu, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a strong castle, and a harbour for small vessels at Treport. The principal trade is in serges and lace. It is seated on the river Bresle, near the English channel, 15 m. N. E. of Dieppe.

Eufemia, St. a town of Naples, on the W. coast of Calabria Ulteriore, on a gulf of the Mediterranean, to which it gives name, 27 m. S. by E. of Cosenza.

Eu-lo, or Precious-river, a river of China, in Pe-tehe-li, which flows N. E. into the Pei-ho, at Tien-sing. Much grain is conveyed by this river for Pekin and it is also important for its connection with the N. extremity of the grand canal.

Eule, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Kurzin, with a gold mine, 11 m. S. by E. Prague.

Euatoria, or Kostaf, a town of Russia, in the Crimea or government of Taurida, situate on the W. side of a salt lake, and near the Black Sea, 68 m. S. by W. of Perecop. Long. 33. 16. E., lat. 45. 12. N.

Eupen. See Oeper.

Euphrates, a noble river of Western Asia, which rises from three sources in Turkish Armenia. The principal head is about 35 m. S. E. of Erzerum, and is called by the Turks Bingheul Frat, or 1,000 springs, and on the opposite side of the mountains from whence these springs flow, the Raksi, a branch of the Aras, which falls into the Caspian sea below Shirvan, also has its source: another branch of the Euphrates rises about 35 m. N. by W. of Erzerum; these two branches unite in the long. of 40. E., and lat. of 39. 50. N., and about 40. m. W. by S. of Erzerum, from whence the united stream becomes navigable for boats. Another branch rises on the frontier of Persia, in the long. of 43. 40. E., and runs a course nearly due W. to the long. of 39. 25. and lat. of 39.; the united streams are then called the Frat, and flow in a direction S. S. W. to Semisat, in the lat. of 37. 8. N. and long. of 37. 20. E., being within 60 m. of the gulf of Aïasso, at the N. E. extremity of the Mediterranean; from this point the Euphrates flows in a S. E. direction through 12 degrees of longitude in European Turkey, falling into the gulf of Persia, in the lat. of 30., and long. of 48. 40. E., the meridional distance from the source to the mouth of this noble river, is about 800 m. but the course of the stream is about 1,200. It is navigable for ships of the largest burthen to Bassora, 35 m. from its mouth; and, were the country through which it runs, inhabited by a social and well organized people, it might be instrumental to the conveyance of a reciprocal interchange of the products of Asia and Europe. A social, scientific, and enterprising people would not be content with its communicating with the Persian gulf, but would unite its waters with the Mediterranean on one side, and the Caspian sea on the other. The ancient Babylon was seated on its banks. See Syria, Irak-Arabi, and Roum, and Tigris.

Eure, a department of the N. of France, so named from a river which intersects the E. part, falling into the Seine, about 15 m. above Rouen; the Seine then forms its northern boundary to its entrance into the sea. Eure, however, may be considered a manufacturing and agricultural, rather than a maritime department. It is divided into five arrondissements.

Eure and Loire, an interior department of France, bordering on the preceding province, on the S. It is so named from the two rivers, the Eure and the Loire, both of which rise within the department; the Loire flowing to the S., and the Eure to the N., as described in the preceding article.

Europe, one of the five grand divisions of the globe; the extreme limits of which, are Cape Matapan, S. in 36. 23. N. and 22. 29. E., Cape St. Vincent, W. in 37. 3. N. and 9. 2. W., Cape North, N. in 71. 10. N. and 25. 50. E., Cara River, E. in 66. 30. N. and 63. 30. E. The longest meridional line, that could be drawn across Europe, would be from Europa point, in the strait of Gibraltar which divides Europe from the N. W. extremity of Africa, in the lat. of 36. 7. N., and 5. 20. of W. long., to the Cara river, in the long. of 63. 30. E. in the lat. of 66. 30. N. This line, the angle of which is N. E. bearing E. would intersect the gulfs of Dantzic, Riga, and Finland, and the lakes Ladoga and Onega; and its length would be 3,065 geographical, or 3,546 English statute m. The longest line that could be drawn from S. to N. would be from Cape Matapan at the S. extremity of the Morea, to Cape North, at the northern extremity of Finmark; this line would intersect the gulf of Riga, the entrance to the gulf of Bothnia; and the N. E. shore of the gulf of Bothnia; and its length would be 2,090 geographical, or 2,423 English statute m. The boundaries of Europe, however, on all sides, are extremely irregular, jetting out into several great peninsulas, so that if it was resolved into a square, the sides would not exceed 1,600 geographical m. each way. It is bounded on the N. by the Arctic Sea, W. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. from the long. of 5. W. to 35. E. by the Mediterranean Sea, and E. by Asia.

Among all the divisions of the globe, Europe is that in which perhaps the works of external nature are on the smallest scale, and in which certainly the development of mind is the greatest. "A mere adjunct of the immense Asiatic continent"—to use the words of the most illustrious geographer of modern times—"the whole peninsula could hardly contain a basin large enough for the Nile, the Kiang, or the Amazon. Its loftiest mountains cannot be compared in height, or in extent to the Andes, or Himalayas. If all its downs and uncultivated lands were added to the sandy plains of Africa, the augmentation might be wholly imperceptible. The productions of the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms are here few and insignificant. Its mines do not abound in gold; the diamond is not found among its minerals. There are not more than fifteen or twenty species of quadrupeds that belong exclusively to Europe, and these are not of the most useful kind. Some animals, as the horse, the ox, the sheep, and the dog, have been greatly improved by the care and industry of man; but the most valuable natural productions have been imported from other quarters of the world. The silk-worm was brought from India, fine wool from Mauritania, the peach from Persia, the orange from China, and the potato from America. It is rich, its wealth has been derived from the produce or spoils of other countries." Presenting a less extent of surface than Asia, Africa, or America, this continent shows that surface more crowded with men, improved by cultivation, enriched by productive industry, and extensive commerce, embellished with mighty cities, and splendid works of art, illumined with the reflections of genius, and invested with irresistible preponderance in the scale of political importance. In other regions, we contemplate, amid the great physical features of the scene,

A world of wonders, where creation seems
No more the works of Nature, but her dreams.

In Europe, we behold a yet more elevating spectacle,—spirit asserting its supremacy over body,—and man, the lord of nature, pursuing most gloriously the high destiny originally assigned him 'to replenish the earth, and to subdue it.' In other regions, it is matter we wonder at; in Europe, it is mind we admire. Here humanity has her chosen seat, and from hence have emanated her noblest gifts.

The superficial extent of Europe has been variously estimated by different geographers. Our want of information respecting the extent of some countries, and the doubts regarding the real boundaries between Europe and Asia, noticed above, increase the difficulty of stating precisely the extent of surface belonging to Europe. Kitchen reckons 3,258,038 English square miles; Hassel, 3,331,579; and Crome, 3,796,349. Perhaps, notwithstanding its irregularity of form, we may ascertain the superficial area of this continent with tolerable accuracy, by reducing it to an oblong square. If for angles of this square, be taken the North Cape in Norway, and the town of Ekaterineburg in the Russian government of Perm, Bordeaux in France, and Cape Solomon the eastern extremity of the Island of Crete, the sides of this parallelogram will measure 2,100 m., and 1,500 m. respectively, and will enclose a superficies of 3,150,000 square m.; and the different portions of land excluded from this measurement, will amount to about 300,000 square m., making in all a superficial extent of 3,450,000 square m. Europe thus embraces about one-sixteenth part of the whole terrestrial surface of the globe; and, with all its islands, does not exceed in superficial extent, the Australian continent. Europe is particularly distinguished by the seas and numerous gulfs that wash its shores, and the number and extent of its inland waters. Hence the facility with which the commercial intercourse of nations is here conducted; and hence too the influence which Britain has been enabled to exert over the political destinies of Europe, as a great maritime power. Europe has an abundance of inland lakes. The greater part of them are situated in Switzerland, Upper Italy, Germany, Russia, and Sweden; but very few of them can be compared, in point of extent, to those found in other parts of the world. The largest European lake is the Ladoga, in Russia, which has a superficial extent of 6,340 square m.; the Onega, in the same country, is about half that size, and greatly exceeds the largest of the remaining lakes. The accumulation of lakes, or insulated pools of water, in some places of Europe, is very remarkable. Some Russian governments possess an incredible number. They are less numerous in the western parts of Europe. But in Iceland, a hundredth part of the territory is occupied by lakes. Europe is abundantly watered, though its rivers are greatly inferior in size to those of the other continents. In fact, this continent is too much intersected by the sea, and presents too small a mass of land, to abound in such magnificent streams as are found elsewhere. In the eastern part only, where it stands connected with the great Asiatic mass of land, is found any considerable breadth of contiguous territory, and here also do we find its largest rivers.

The greater part of Europe is a mountainous surface; but the masses which tower up in the south greatly exceed those of the north. The plains of Europe are much inferior in dimensions to the same physical feature in the other continents. With the exception of the wide valley of the Theiss, and the basin of the Po, we do not recognise any extensive plain on the south of the Sudetic chain; but an enormous plain extends from the mouth of the Rhine, over the whole of northern Germany and the greater part of Poland, to the foot of the Uralian chain. The difference in general elevation between northern and southern Europe may be illustrated by stating, that if the waters of the Atlantic Ocean were to rise 1,500 or 1,600 feet above their present level, the whole of northern Europe, with the exception of the mountainous districts of Norway and Scotland, would be laid under water; while southern Europe, on the contrary, being higher than the level of such inundation, would form one or two large and high islands. The most elevated districts in Europe are Switzerland and Savoy. In the comparatively level countries of Europe, extending from Iceland to the Caspian sea, the mountains rise in insulated groups; while in the southern and central parts of this continent, or from Etna in Sicily, to the Blocksberg of the Harz, and from the Strait of Gibraltar, to the Bosphorus, all the mountains belong to one great connected system. In this quarter are the Alps,—the highest, and beyond comparison the most extensive range of mountains in Europe, though scarcely exceeding a half of the average height of the great South American chain under the equator. Perpetual ice commences here at the elevation of 7,000 or 8,000 feet. At the height of 10,500 feet the ice disappears, and the atmospheric vapour, congealed as it descends, covers the ground with eternal snow. The Alps extend over a space of 13,000 square miles. They branch out, in various angular directions, into the Maritime, Cottian, Graian, Peninne, Lepontine, Swiss, Rhetian, Norian, Carnian, Julian, and Dinaric Alps, which again spread out in many secondary chains. The Apennines, stretching in a vast crescent through the whole length of the Italian peninsula, and evidently connected with the mountains of Sicily, may be regarded as a southern branch of the Alpine series. The average height of this chain is about 5,000 feet. A second great chain stretches its branches over the whole peninsula of the Pyrenees. The two outer bulwarks of this peninsula—which consists of a central plain elevated from 2,000 to 4,000 feet—are the mountains commonly called the Pyrenees, stretching between France and Spain on the north, and the Alpujarras or Sierra Nevada of Spain on the south. The mountains of Auvergne, which are connected with those of Vivarais and the Cevennes, are united to the Pyrenees by the Logere. At the other extremity of Europe, three chains of mountains meet together, collectively called Argentario, at a point nearly equidistant from the Danube, the Adriatic, and the Ægean Sea. This central point may be considered as the nucleus of all the mountain in European Turkey. From it proceeds the ancient Hæmus or modern Balkan, eastwards to the Black Sea. A second range runs N. W. till it joins the Carnian Alps; and a third runs southwards through the peninsula, dividing the northern continent of Greece into two parts of nearly equal breadth, and passing into the islands of the Archipelago. As the Hellenic Mountains, with the exception perhaps of Athos and Olympus, have never been accurately measured, it is impossible to determine whether or not they are higher than the Apennines. Mount Orbelus, the northern boundary of the country, has, according to Pouqueville, its summit perpetually covered with snow, and must therefore, according to the laws that fix the lower limit of congelation, exceed 8,500 feet of elevation. None of the other Hellenic Mountains, however, whether they be insulated or disposed in groups and ranges, attain the line of perpetual snow. The Carpathian and Hercynian Mountains are separated from the Alps and the Hellenic Mountains by the Danube. This wild range, the general elevation of which is from 4,000 to 5,000 feet, completely encircles Transylvania, and is connected with the Sudetes or Giant Mountains of Silesia, and the Erzgebirge or Metallic Mountains of Saxony. The mountains of Russia have no visible connexion with the other European mountains. The woody heights of Valdai and Duderhof seem to form their centre, from which a number of secondary branches diverge, like radii, into the surrounding country. The British, Irish, and Icelandic mountains are all of secondary rank. There are only three volcanoes properly so called, in Europe; viz. Etna, Vesuvius, and Hecla. Besides these, however, there are nine jökels in Iceland, and two mountains upon Stromboli and Milo, which emit flames. Some naturalists assert that there are two great subterranean fires under Europe, one of which cuts the first meridian of the Arctic polar circle, and the other extends under Italy and the Mediterranean, towards the Archipelago.

The greater part of Europe is situated within the northern Temperate zone; about a twelfth part only of its superficies extends within the Arctic polar circle. Although the astronomical climates are greatly modified in this part of the world by physical causes, we may, in taking a general view of the climate of Europe, consider it divided into four different districts, the boundaries of which are defined by parallels of latitude. The Arctic district of Europe extends over a superficies of about 400,000 square m., and the warm district may be estimated at 540,000 square m.; while upwards of 1,500,000 square m. belong to the cold, and 970,000 to the temperate. With the exception perhaps of Australia, Europe in natural fertility of soil, and variety and richness of productions, is much inferior to any other division of the earth. Zimmermann asserts that it has only sixteen species of indigenous animals, and these chiefly mice and bats. Some species of wild animals have entirely disappeared before the increase of population, while others have become extremely rare. The Fallow Deer are found in greatest abundance in England. Yet here they are diminishing.—And according to Aristotle, the lion was once found in Greece, but it no longer exists in Europe. The buffalo, the elk, the stein-buck, and the beaver, are becoming daily more rare in Europe; and the varieties of game—which once seemed to possess, under the protection of merciless tyrants, a fuller right in the soil than man himself,—are now confined to juster limits. The rein-deer and dog are the only domestic animals of the Polar zone. The walrus, white bear, and blue fox, appear on the shores of the Frozen Sea. The horse is found to the 66th parallel, but in the high latitudes is reduced to a dwarfish stature; cattle too lose their horns in the northern regions, and shrink in size; even man himself appears here an inferior species, whether physically or morally considered. Some Asiatic animals are found in the neighbourhood of the Caspian and Sea of Azof. The black bear, the urus, and the wolf, are the most formidable wild animals now known in Europe. The jackal is found in all the warm regions; and the lynx and wild-cat attain considerable dimensions in the Italian forests. Europe, though not wholly free of dangerous reptiles, suffers less from their presence than any other region of the globe. The chameleon is one of the most singular European reptiles. The mosquito is troublesome in the highest north; and flights of locusts occasionally arrive in Taurida from the African or Syrian coast. Europe is indebted for its most valuable plants to other climes. Originally it probably possessed little more than forest-trees, a few shrubs, and some species of grass. The cereal and leguminous plants are now universally cultivated, and garden-herbs are here usually of finer quality than elsewhere. The vine is successfully cultivated at Witzzenhausen under 51. 21. 30., and at Zullichau under 51. 58.; but, with these exceptions, wine manufactured above the 50th parallel does not deserve the name. The northern countries furnish good materials for the carpenter and ship-builder. The forest-trees of the warmer climate are tamarisks, carubes, sumachs, mastics, the cork-tree, planes, sycamores, and cypresses. Every species of the inferior and superior metals, and even several of the more precious minerals, are found in Europe. Hungary and Transylvania possess the nobler ores; Russia, Sweden, and Norway, abound in iron; England produces copper and tin; and Scotland, lead. There are likewise extensive mines of rock-salt, alum, saltpetre, and coal, in Europe.

It is difficult to estimate the precise amount of the population of Europe, notwithstanding the accuracy with which the census of most countries has been taken: for we do not possess a census of contemporary surveys, and in Turkey the population can only be loosely estimated from the number of hearths paying tax to the Porte. The population-returns of Russia, Hungary, Spain, and Transylvania, are very old. In 1787, Zimmermann estimated the population of Europe at 144,000,000; at present, according to Malte Brun, it is not likely to be overrated at 205,000,000. In 1819, Hassel estimated it at 180,550,000. Perhaps 200,000,000 will be pretty near the truth, which gives an increase of 56,000,000 in 40 years. This population is not equally concentrated throughout Europe. Thus, in the Duchy of Lucca, it is in the ratio of 288 to a square m.; while in Iceland and Faroe it is only 4-2-3; in the Netherlands it is as 212, in Great Britain as 178, and in Sweden and Norway as 10 to the square m. Upon the whole, the south of Europe is more populous than the north in proportion to its extent: and must continue so, as the means of subsistence are procured with so much greater facility in the countries of the former than in those of the latter. The climate of Norway is quite as favourable to longevity as that of Lucca; but the one comprehends a vast tract of rugged, untillable surface,—the other is a garden throughout.

In almost every European State, we find the citizens divided into four distinct classes. The first is that of the nobility, which exists in every State, with the exception of Norway and the Turkish empire. Nobility is, in most cases viewed in Europe as an hereditary rank; but it can be acquired by the will of the sovereign, and even, in some instances, purchased by money. The clergy form the second class of the community. The third is that of the citizens, or inhabitants of towns, which in most countries enjoys peculiar rights and privileges. The fourth and lowest class includes the peasants, and forms the mass of the population in every country.

Eurville, a town of France, department of Upper Marne, 5 m. S. E. of St. Dizier.

Euskirchen, a town of the Prussian states, 23 m. S. E. of Juliers.

Eustace, an island which forms, with a long point of land, the entrance to the harbour of St. Augustine, in E. Florida.

Eustatia, St. one of the least of the Leeward Islands, in the West Indies, 10 m. N. W. of St. Christopher. It is a mountain in the form of a sugar loaf, whose top is hollow, yet for its size, it is one of the most valuable of all the Caribbees. Tobacco is cultivated on its sides, to the very summit; and hogs, kids, rabbits, and all kinds of poultry, are in great abundance. It has a town of the same name, with a good fort. It was taken by the English in 1781, who pillaged the inhabitants, and confiscated all private property; it was soon after retaken by the French, and restored to the Dutch, in 1783; again taken by the English, in 1801, and again restored to the Dutch, at the general peace of 1814.

Eutin, a town of Lower Saxony, in Holstein, near the side of a lake, 20 m. N. N. W. of Lubeck.

Euxine, or Black Sea, a large inland sea, dividing Europe from Asia, between the latitudes of 41. and 47. N. extending E. from the long. of 28. to 41. 25., giving an extreme length from W. to E. of 606 geographical, or 702 British statute m. On the W. it washes the coasts of Romania, Bulgaria, and Bessarabia; and on that side receives the waters of the Danube: at the N. W. corner it receives the waters of the Dneister, and the Dnieper, which flow through the southern provinces of European Russia; and from the N. between the longitudes of 33 and 37. E. projects the peninsula of the Crimea, or Russian province of Taurida. A narrow strait at the eastern extremity of this peninsula, leads into the sea of Azof, into which flows the river Don: the N. E. part of the Euxine, washes the coast of Circassia, and the territory of the Abkhas; the eastern extremity washes the coast of Mingrelia, which contributes to the waters of the Euxine by several streams, the most important of which is the Roni or Phasis: the S. part washes the coasts of the Turkish provinces of Armenia, Roum, and Natolia which contribute the waters of the Kisil-Jermak, and numerous other rivers of inferior note. The Euxine communicates with the Mediterranean, first by the narrow strait of Constantinople into the sea of Marmora, and from thence by the Dardanelles, the ancient Hellespont, or Thracian Bosphorus, into the Grecian Archipelago. The navigation of the Euxine appears to have been more general in past than at the present time, the Phœnicians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Venetians, and Genoese, all appearing to have maintained an extensive intercourse with the inhabitants on its shores. In 1476, when the Turks drove the Genoese from the Crimea, they precluded all intercourse through the straits of Constantinople, and claimed an exclusive right of navigation within. In 1774 the Russians, and in 1784 Austria obtained by treaty an equal right of navigation, which at the peace of Amiens was extended to all nations; and since the peace of 1814 a considerable traffic has been carried on from the port of Odessa, between the rivers Dniester and Dnieper, with the Mediterranean and with England; but the other parts of its extensive shores are but little frequented, and but little known, though doubtless susceptible of affording a rich field for well-directed enterprise and exertion.

Fayal, one of the Azores, or Western Islands, which suffered greatly by an earthquake, in 1764. Its capital is Villa do Horta, the S. E. point of the island; is in lat. 38. 31. N., and 23. 42. of W. long. It is very fertile, and exports large quantities of wine.

Fayette, the name of five counties in the United States.

1st, at the S. W. corner of Pennsylvania, bounded on the E. by the Laurel Ridge of the Alleghany mountains; W. by the Monongahela river, and S. by Monongahela county, Virginia. It is nearly a square of about 32 m. each way. Pop. 29,237. Union, 186 m. W. by S. of Harrisburgh, is the chief town.

2nd, in Georgia, bounded on the W. by Flint river, which divides it from the territory of the Creek Indians. Pop. 5,501. Fayetteville is the chief town.

3rd, in the S. W. part of Ohio, W. of the Scioto river. Pop. 8,180. Washington, the chief town, is 40 m. S. W. by S. of Columbia, and 35 N. W. of Chillicothe.

4th, in the interior of Kentucky, E. of Kentucky river. Pop. 25,174. Lexington, (which see) is the chief town.

5th, in the E. part of Indiana. Pop. 9,112. Connersville, 65 m. S. E. by E. of Indianapolis is the chief town.

Fayette, p.t. Kennebec Co. Me. Pop. 1,049. Also a township in Seneca Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,216. Also a township in Alleghany Co. Pa.

Fayetteville, a town of N. Carolina, in Cumberland Co., capital of a district, formerly called Fayette, but now divided into several counties. Its trade with Wilmington is considerable, to which it sends tobacco, wheat, hemp, cotton, lumber, staves, naval stores, &c., and has a return of European and India goods. It is situate on the N. W. branch of Cape Fear river, 50 m. S. by W. of Raleigh, and 90 N. W. of Wilmington.

Fayetteville, p.v. Fayette Co. Geo. and Lincoln Co. Tenn.

Fayoum, or Fium, a town of Egypt, capital of a province of the same name. It has a trade in flax, linen, mats, raisins, and figs; and is seated on a canal, which communicates with the Nile, 49 m. S. S. W. of Cairo. Long. 30. 39. E., lat. 29. 27. N.

Fayston, a township in Washington Co. Vt. Pop. 458.

Fear, Cape, a cape of N. Carolina, where there is a dangerous shoal, called, from its form, the Frying Pan, lying at the entrance of Cape Fear river. This river is formed by two branches, called the N. W. and N. E. branches, which unite above Wilmington; and it enters the Atlantic below Brunswick. Long. 77. 45. W., lat. 33. 40. N.

Fecamp, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a trade in linen, serges, lace, leather, and hats; seated near the English channel, 24 m. N. E. of Havre de Grace.

Federalsburg, p.v. Carolina Co. Maryland.

Fees-toen, p.t. Clermont Co. Ohio.

Feira, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 10 m. S. E. of Oporto, and 30 N. by E. of Aveiro.

Feldkirch, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the river Ill, near its entrance into the Rhine. 19 m. S. of the Lake of Constance.

Feldsburg, a town and castle at the N. E. extremity of Lower Austria, with a fine palace, seated on the Teya, 18 m. E. of Laab.

Felicula, one of the Lipari islands, in the Mediterranean, 25 m. W. of Lipari.

Felipe, St., a populous town of Colombia, seated on the banks of a river falling into the Caribbean sea, about 100 m. W. of Caracas.

Felipe, St. See Nativa.

Feliz, St., an island in the Pacific ocean, N. N. W. of Juan Fernandez. Long. 86. W. lat. 26 S.

Fellein, a town of France, in the department of Creuse, with a manufacture of tapestry. It is 20 m. S. S. W. of Evaux, and 21 S. S. E. of Gueret.

Fellin, a town of Russia, in Livonia, on the river Pernau, 62 m. S. E. of Revel.

Felsberg, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel with an ancient castle on a rock, 12 m. S. of Cassel.

Felso-Banya, a village of Upper Hungary, near the frontier of Transylvania, celebrated for a gold mine in its vicinity.

Feltri, a town of Italy, capital of Feltrino, and a bishop's see. It is fortified, and seated on the Asona, a small stream, falling into the Piave from the W., 30 m. N. W. of Treviso. Long. 11. 55. E., lat. 46. 3. N. Pop. about 5,000.

Feltrino, a district of Italy, lying between Bellunese, Trevisano, Vicentino, and the principality of Trent. It abounds in mountains, in which are iron mines. Feltri is the only place of note.

Femern, a fertile island of Denmark, at the entrance of the Baltic, from the passage of the Great and Little Belt. It is 10 m. long and 5 broad, separated from the coast of Holstein by a narrow channel, called the Femern Sound, Borg is the chief town. Pop. of the island about 7,500.

Femme Osage, a village in St. Charles Co. Missouri.

Fenestrage, or Penestrage, a town of France, in the department of Meurte, on the river Sarre, 40 m. E. by N. of Nancy.

Fenestrelle, a town and fort of Piedmont, seated on the Cluson, 18 m. W. of Turin.

Fenner, p.t. Madison Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,017.

Ferabad, a town of Persia, capital of the province of Mazenderan. The environs produce sugar, cotton, and silk. The inhabitants, about 16,000, are principally descendants of Georgians and Armenians. It is seated among the mountains which bound the Caspian sea to the S., 12 m. from that sea, and 250 N. of Ispahan. Long. 52. 21. E., lat. 36. 54. N.

Fercula, or Forcula, a town of the kingdom of Taflet, E. of Morocco, and the principal place of a district. It is 50 m. W. of Sigilnessa. Long. 4. 30. W., lat. 31. 40. N.

Ferdinand, a township, in Essex Co. Vt. Also a township in St. Louis Co. Missouri.

Fere, a town of France, in the department of Aisne, famous for its powder mill and school of artillery. Near it is the castle of St. Gobin, in which is a manufacture of fine plate-glass. Fere is seated at the conflux of the Serre, with the Oise, 20 m. N. of Soissons, and 75 N. E. of Paris.

Ferentino, or Fioranzo, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, 3 m. W. of Alatri, on the high road from Rome to Naples.

Ferette, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on the river Ill, near its source, 40 m. S. of Colmar.

Ferguson, a township in Centre Co. Pa.

Ferranagh, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, bounded on the N. by the counties of Donegal and Tyrone, E. by Monaghan, S. by Cavan, and W. by Leitrim, the N. W. end jetting upon Donegal Bay; it extends from the S. in a N. W. direction about 36 m. being about 24 in mean breadth, one-fourth of its area is occupied by Lough Erne, which discharges its waters into Donegal bay, dividing the county into nearly two equal parts. In the centre of the county, the water narrows so as to admit of the two parts being united by a bridge, see Enniskillen. The linen manufacture, and the raising of cattle, and hemp, are the chief employ of the inhabitants. The county is navigable throughout, by means of Lough Erne, but its uneven surface, and numerous bogs, render it difficult for travelling. Enniskillen is the capital and only town of importance in the county.

Fermo, a town of Italy, in the marquiseate of Ancona, and an archbishop's see, with a good trade in corn, wool, &c. It has a harbour on the gulf of Venice, and is 17 m. S. E. of Macerata. Long. 13. 50. E., lat. 43. 7. N. Pop. about 7,000.

Fremosella, or Fornosella, a town in Spain, in the province of Leon, seated on the N. bank of the Tornes, near its entrance into Douro.

Fermoy, a town of Ireland in the county of Cork, seated on the banks of the Blackwater, 106 m. N. W. of Dublin, on the road to Cork, from which it is distant 17 m. This place has risen from an inconsiderable village since the commencement of the war in 1793, to a town of 6,702 inhabitants in 1821.

Fernando Noronha, an island in the S. Atlantic, 100 leagues from Cape St. Roque, the N. E. point of the province of Pernambuco. Long. 32. 33. W., lat. 3. 56. S.

Fernando Po, an island of Africa, on the coast of Benin, 30 m. long and 20 broad. Long. 7. 36. E., lat. 3. 6. N.

Ferney, a village of France, in the department of Ain, a few m. N. W. of Geneva, celebrated as having been the residence of Voltaire.

Ferns, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, and a bishop's see united to Leighlin. It is seated on the Bann, near its conflux with the Slaney, 17 m. N. of Wexford, and 30 S. S. W. of Wicklow.

Ferree Islands, a cluster of 22 small islands in the Northern Ocean, between the Shetland Islands and Iceland, in 5. and 8. W. long., and 61. and 63. N. lat. subject to Denmark. Seventeen are habitable, each of which is a lofty mountain, divided from the others by a deep and rapid current. Some of them are deeply indented with secure harbours all of them steep, and most of them faced with tremendous precipices. They produce agate, jasper, and beautiful zeolites. The surface consists of a shallow soil of remarkable fertility; yielding plenty of barley and fine grass for sheep. No trees above the size of a juniper, or stunted willow will grow here; and the only quadrupeds are sheep. Vast quantities of sea fowls frequent the rocks, and the taking of them furnishes a perilous employment for the inhabitants. The exports are salted mutton, tallow, goose-quills, feathers, ciderdown, knit woolen waistcoats, caps, and stockings. To the S. of these islands is a considerable whirlpool. Pop. in 1820, 5,265.

Ferzabad, or Firuzabad, a city of Persia, in Farsistan, formerly of considerable repute, and yet contains a number of fine tombs, gardens, and buildings. It is seated in a fertile country, 60 m. S. by W. of Shiras, on the route to Ormus. Long. 53. 0. E., lat. 28. 50. N.

Ferrara, a city of Italy capital of a duchy of the same name, and an archbishop's see, with a strong citadel, and a university. Its broad streets and number of fine buildings, evince that it was formerly a flourishing place, but the present inhabitants are few in proportion to its extent. In the middle of the city is a palace, surrounded by walls flanked with towers and ditches. The cathedral is remarkable for its antiquity. In the Benedictine church, Ariosto the poet is interred. Ferrara was taken by the French in 1796; in 1799 it was retaken by the Austrians, but shortly after surrendered to the French. It is seated near the Po, 25 m. N. E. of Bologna. Long. 12. 36. E., lat. 44. 50. N.

Ferrara, or Ferrarese, a duchy of Italy, bounded on the N. by the Po, which divides it from Polesino di Rovigno, W. by the Mantuan, S. by the Bolognese and Romagna, and E. by the gulf of Venice. It had its own dukes till 1597, when Clement VIII. united it to the apostolic chamber. The air is unwholesome, on account of the marshes which the abject condition of the inhabitants precludes from draining. Ferrara is the capital.

Ferrendina, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, near the river Basiento, 25 m. S. W. of Matera.

Ferrisburg, a township in Addison Co. Vt. Pop. 1,522.

Ferro, or Hierro, the most westward of the Canary Islands, above 18 m. in circumference. It is not fertile, but produces some corn, sugar, fruits, and legumes. The inhabitants make use of water collected in cisterns during the rainy seasons, for there is no spring in the island. Voyagers speak of a fountain tree in the middle of the island, and say that in the night much water distils from its leaves. Some geographers have taken their first meridian from the W. extremity of this island. Long. 17. 52. W., lat. 27. 47. N.

Ferrol, a sea port of Spain, in Galicia, on a bay of the Atlantic. Its harbour is one of the best in Europe, and here the Spanish squadrons frequently rendezvous in time of war. The town is surrounded on three sides by the sea, and strongly fortified on the other. In 1800 the English made an unsuccessful attempt on this place. It is 20 m. N. E. of Corunna, and 305 N. W. of Madrid. Long. 8. 4. W., lat. 43. 28. N.

Ferrysbridge, a large village in West Yorkshire, Eng. on the S. side of the Aire, over which is a noble bridge, 21 m. S. by W. of York, and 174 N. by W. of London.

Ferryport, a village of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on the frith of Tay, 4 m. below Dundee, and 9 N. N. W. of St. Andrews. It has a considerable manufacture of brown linens; and a ferry over the Tay, well frequented before the bridge at Perth was built.

Ferte sur Aube, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne, seated on the Aube, 22 m. W. by S. of Chaumont, and 33 E. S. E. of Troyes.

* * * There are seven or eight other towns in France named Ferte, all prefixed to some other name, as in the case of Aube, to distinguish them from each other.

Festenberg, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Oels, 14 m. N. W. of Wartenburg.

Fethard, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Tipperary, 8 m. S. E. of Cashel, and 86 S. S. W. of Dublin. Pop. in 1820, 2,578.

Fethard, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, on the W. side of Bannow bay, 14 m. S. by E. of New Ross.

Feverham, a town in Kent, Eng. on a creek falling into the mouth of the Thames, much frequented by small vessels. It is a member of the port of Dover, and governed by a mayor. The church is in the form of a cross, and the interior well worthy of observation; and here is a free grammar-school founded by queen Elizabeth. It has a market on Wednesday and Saturday; is famous for the best oysters for laying in stews; and has several gunpowder mills in its neighbourhood. Here are the remains of a stately abbey, built by king Stephen, who was interred in it with his queen and son. James II. embarked here in disguise, after the success of the prince of Orange; but the vessel was detained by the populace, and the king conveyed back to London. Feverham is 47 m. E. by S. of London. Pop. in 1820, 3,912.

Fears, a town of France, in the department of Loire, seated on the Loire, 13 m. E. N. E. of Montbrison.

Feystritz, or Windisch Fistritz, a town and castle of Germany, in Lower Stiria, on a river of the same name, 17 m. N. N. E. of Cilly.

Fez, a kingdom of Barbary, at the N. W. extremity of North Africa, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Algiers, and S. by Morocco and Taflet. It extends upwards of 400 m. from E. to W. and is about 150 in breadth; is divided into 9 provinces, and forms part of the empire of Morocco. The country is full of mountains, particularly to the W. and S. where Mount Atlas lies; but it is populous and fertile, producing citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, almonds, olives, figs, raisins, honey, wax, cotton, flax, pitch, and corn in abundance. The inhabitants breed camels, bees, sheep, and the finest horses in Barbary. At the extreme N. point is the town and fortress of Ceuta, garrisoned by the Spaniards, (see Ceuta): the principal places on the Atlantic coast are Salee and Larache; Melitta and Tangier, on the coast of the Mediterranean; and in the interior Mequinez, Fez, and Teza.

Fez, the capital of the kingdom of Fez, and one of the largest cities in Africa. It is composed of three towns called Beleyde, Old Fez, and New Fez. Old Fez is the most considerable, and contains about 80,000 inhabitants. New Fez, founded about the 13th century, is principally inhabited by Jews, who trade with the Moors, notwithstanding the contempt with which they are treated by them. Old Fez was founded in 793 by Sidy Edris, a descendant of Mahomet and Ali, whose father fled from Medina to avoid the proscriptions of the caliph Abdallah. The palaces are magnificent; and there are numerous mosques, one of which, called Carubin, is one of the finest edifices in the empire. The houses are built of brick or stone, and adorned with mosaic work: those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours like Dutch tiles, and the wood-work and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. The roofs are flat; and every house has a court, in which is a square marble basin. Here are two colleges for students, finely built of marble, and adorned with paintings. The hospitals and public baths are numerous, many of which are stately structures. All the traders live in a separate part of the city; and the exchange, full of all sorts of rich merchandise, is as large as a small town. The gardens are full of all kinds of fragrant flowers and shrubs. The Moors of Fez are clothed like the Turks; and though more polished than their countrymen, are vain, superstitious, and intolerant. The saints, whom they pretend to have been buried in the city, serve them for a pretext to forbid its entrance to Jews and Christians; and an order from the emperor is necessary to gain admission. Arabic is better spoken here than in other parts of the empire; and the rich Moors send their children to the schools at Fez, where they gain more instruction than they could do elsewhere. Fez is the centre of the trade of this empire; and hence caravans go to Mecca, carrying ready-made garments, leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostriches feathers, for which they bring in return silks, muslins, and drugs. Other caravans go to Tombuctoo, and the river Niger. They travel over such dry barren deserts, that every other camel carries water. Their commodities are salt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woolen manufactures of Barbary. Fez is seated in a circular valley, watered by a river, and surrounded by mountains, 160 m. S. S. W. of Gibraltar, and 240 N. E. of Morocco. Long. 4. 45. W., lat. 33. 40. N.

Fezzan, an interior kingdom of North Africa, lying between the great deserts of Zahara and Libya bounded on the N. by Tripoli to the Bashaw of which province Fezzan pays an annual tribute of 4,000 dollars. It is an extensive plain, encompassed by mountains, except to the W.; and to the influence of these heights it may be owing, that here, as well as in Upper Egypt, no rain is ever known. Though the character of the surface (which in general is a light sand) and the want of rain, may seem to announce sterility, yet the springs are so abundant, that few regions in the N. of Africa, exhibit a richer vegetation. The greatest length of the cultivated part is about 300 m. from N. to S., and 200 from E. to W. From wells of 10 or 15 feet deep, with which every garden and field is furnished, the husbandman waters the productions of his land; among these are the date tree, the olive, lime, apricot, pomegranate, fig, maize, barley, wheat, pumpions or calabash, carrots, cucumbers, onions, and garlic. Among the tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, ass, and a species of the domestic fowl of Europe. The wild animals are the ostrich, and antelopes of various kinds. A multitude of noxious animals infest the country; adders, snakes, scorpions, and toads, swarm in the fields, gardens, and houses; the air is crowded with mosquitos; and persons of every rank are over-run with vermin. The heat of the climate in summer is intense, and the S. wind is scarcely supportable even by the natives; and in winter a penetrating N. wind prevails, which drives to the fire even the natives of a northern country. Tempests of wind are frequent, which whirl up the sand and dust so as to give a yellow tinge to the atmosphere. The towns are chiefly inhabited by husbandmen and shepherds; for though they also contain merchants and artificers, yet agriculture and pasturage are the principal occupations. The houses are built of clay, with a flat roof composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; their hair a short curly black, their lips thick, their noses flat and broad, and their skin emits a fetid effluvia; they are tall, and well shaped, but weakly, indolent, and inactive. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors of Barbary. In their common intercourse, all distinctions of rank seem forgotten; the sheereef (or governor) and the lowest plebeian, the rich and the poor, the master and the servant, converse familiarly, and eat and drink together.

Generous and hospitable, let his fare be scanty or abundant, the Fezzaner is desirous that others should partake of it; and if twenty persons were unexpectedly to visit his dwelling, they must all participate as far as it will go. When they settle their money transactions, they squat upon the ground, and having levelled a spot with their hands, make dots as they reckon; if they are wrong, they smooth the spot again, and repeat the calculation. Gold dust constitutes the chief medium of payment; and value in that medium is always expressed by weight. In religion, they are rigid, but not intolerant Mahometans. The government is monarchical; and its powers are administered with such a temperate hand, that the people are ardently attached to their sovereign Mourzouk, is the capital.

Fiano, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St Peter, on the Tiber, 15 m. N. of Rome.

Fianono, a town of Istria, on the S. W. coast, 17 m. N. of Pola.

Fiascone, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, noted for fine muscadine wine; seated on a mountain near lake Bolsena. 12 m. N. W. of Viterbo.

Ficalololo, a fortified town of Italy, in the Ferrarese, seated on the Po, 12 m. W. of Ferrara.

Fichtelberg, a mountain in Franconia, one of the highest mountains in Germany. It extends from near Barenth, to Eger in Bohemia, about 16 m., and is covered with pines and other trees.

Fielericer, an island near the W. coast of Norway, 22 m. long and 4 broad, with a town of the same name, 48 m. W. N. W. of Drontheim. Long. 10. 40. E., lat. 63. 44. N.

Fife, a maritime county on the E. coast of Scotland, forming a peninsula between the frith of Forth and Tay, it extends from the mouth of the river Forth, in a N. N. E. direction, about 40 m., and is about 12 m. in mean breadth. Some linen manufactures are carried on in the S. W. parts of the county, (see Dumfrevline), but as a whole it is an agricultural rather than a manufacturing district; it produces coal and lime in abundance, and copper, lead, iron, and other minerals are also found in different parts of the county though but partially worked; a beautiful grey marble, cornelian, agates, and jasper, are occasionally met with, and fishing on its coasts and its rivers is assiduously pursued by the inhabitants. For divisions, rental, population, &c. see Scotland. Cupar is the assize town.

Figaruolo, an island in the gulf of Venice, near the coast of Istria. Long. 13. 47. E., lat. 45. 18. N.

Figac, a town of France, in the department of Lot, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Selle, 22 m. E. of Cahors. It is the seat of a prefect, and in 1825, contained 6,153 inhabitants.

Fihig, or Fihig, a town of Barbary, in Bile d'egerid, at the foot of the mount Atlas on the S. The inhabitants carry on a great trade with the merchants of Morocco and Fez, and with the negroes. It is 240 m. E. S. E. of Mequinez. Long. 1. 5. W. lat. 32. 20. N.

Figueras, or St. Fernando de Figueras, a strong town and important fortress of Spain, in Catalonia. It surrendered to the French in 1794, without firing a shot. It is 10 m. S. by W. of Roses, and 25 due S. of Perpignan.

Figuro dos Vinhos, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, celebrated for its wine; seated among mountains, near the frontier of Beira, and the river Zezere, 22 m. E. of Thomar.

Finale, a sea-port of Genoa, with a strong citadel, two forts, and a castle. It was the capital of a marquisate, and annexed to the duchy of Milan in 1602, but sold to the Genoese in 1713. In 1746, it was taken by the king of Sardinia, and restored in 1748. It is 30 m. S. W. of Genoa. Long. 8. 25. E., lat. 44. 14. N. Pop. about 7,000.

Finale, a town of Italy in the Modenese, on an island formed by the river Panaro, 22 m. N. E. of Modena.

Fincastle, p.v. a village of Bottetourt Co. Va. 190 m. N. W. of Richmond.

Finisterre, Cape, a cape of Spain, forming the extreme N. W. point of that country, projecting into the Atlantic Ocean, from the province of Galicia. It was thought by the ancients, to have no country beyond it, and therefore they gave it this name which signifies the Land's-end. Long. 9. 17. W., lat. 42. 54. N.

Finisterre, a maritime department of France, which includes part of the late province of Bretagne. It is the most westerly part of France, and bounded on three sides by the sea; on the N. it forms the boundary to the entrance of the English channel. It is divided into five arrondissements, of which Quimper, Brest, Morlaix, Chateaulin, and Quimperle, are the seats of the prefects. The other principal towns are Lesneven, Landerneau, and Carhaix. For pop. &c. see France.

Finland, a country of the North of Europe, extending from the lat. of 60. to 66. 30. N., and in its extreme breadth from the long. of 21. to 31. 30. E. It is bounded on the S. by the gulf of Finland, and W. by the gulf of Bothnia; N. by Lapland, and E. by the Russian provinces of Wilburg and Olonetz; it formerly belonged to Sweden and was divided into two great parts, the N. called E. Bothnia, (see Bothnia.) and the S. Finland Proper, which contains several considerable towns, of which Abo is the chief and capital of the whole country. (see Abo.) The other towns are Nystadt, Raumo, and Biornborg, on the shore of the gulf of Bothnia, and Helsingfors, Borgo and Louisa, on the shore of the gulf of Finland. There are also 4 or 5 considerable towns in the interior. About one-third of the area of Finland Proper is composed of lakes. The contiguity of Finland to the maritime capital of the Russian empire, had long rendered it an object of jealousy to the Russians, and in 1808 they overran it with so formidable a force as to compel the Swedes to consent to a formal cession of the whole country, and it now forms one of the 50 governments of the Russian empire. It is divided into 13 districts, containing together in 1825, a pop. of 980,000, who contributed a revenue of 3,200,000 rubles, equal to about £130,000.

The Finns have been supposed to be nearly related to the Lapps; but though they are equally diminutive in stature, the fair hair, either yellow, flaxen, or almost white, added to the brave and warlike character of the Finn, evidence him to be of a different origin.

Tacitus describes the ancient Finns as a people "whose ferocity was extraordinary, and poverty extreme; having herbs for their food, skins for their covering, and the ground for their couch; regardless of man and of gods," continues he, "they have attained the very difficult condition of not having a single wish to form."

The modern Finn is honest, laborious, and capable of enduring great hardship; but he bears the reproach of being sometimes obstinate and inflexible. The Lutheran form of Christianity was introduced among the Finns by the Swedes; and since the annexation of their country to Russia, no attempt has been made to change their mode of religious worship.

Dr. Clarke describes the costume of the Finnish peasants as very elegant. Among the men it consists of a jacket, with pantaloons, buskins, and a sash, worn as a girdle, round the loins. The sash, though generally yellow, is sometimes red, and sometimes variegated with flowers. The buskins are bound about the ankles with scarlet garters, ending in a black tassel. The jacket and pantaloons are generally white; though blue, black, and grey, are also used. A few of the men appear in long white coats bound with the Don Cossack sash. The women wear a short scarlet or striped vest, made as gaudy as possible, with large and loose sleeves of very white linen, and white hoods or kerchiefs upon their heads. The vests are often of silk or rich damask, embroidered with large brocade flowers.

The Finns, like their neighbours, exhibit a scattered population, and a rude state of society. The cottages consist of dismal huts, with walls made of the round trunks of trees, barely stripped of their bark, and rather resembling a casual pile of timber, than a human dwelling. The interstices are caulked with clay and moss; a few glazed windows are occasionally seen; but their place is more generally supplied by square open cran- nines. "In fact," says Mr. James, from whom this account is derived, "the felling of the timber is the only part of the labour which a peasant thinks it behoves him to calculate upon, when about to erect his habitation."

Of the Finns who inhabit the islands of the Baltic, the last quoted writer thus speaks:—"The cottages of the islanders are rough-hewn log-houses; and they are themselves a people apparently of such simple manners and habits, as their secluded situation and scanty number might lead one to expect; each rustic householder is provided with the tools and implements of a dozen necessary arts or professions; performing for himself, with equal address, the duties of carpenter, shoemaker, tailor, fisherman, miller, baker, &c. Their corn mills are of simple form, and driven by sails constructed of wooden planks; and their mill-stones are shaped like the querne, or old Celtic machine for grinding with the hand. Luxuries, such as ochre paint for their cabins, or coats of woollen cloth, where sheepskins will suffice are not common. Caps of the most ordinary fur serve as a covering for their heads; and for their feet, the want of shoes is supplied by a mis-shapen bag of dried seal-skin. The harness of their horses consists of nothing more than a plain collar attached to the shafts of the cart or sledge, through which, when the horse's neck is thrust, he has only to proceed: this contrivance answers all the purposes of draught, for neither here nor in Sweden is the animal trained to resist the weight of a carriage on the descent, however steep it may be."

Fialayrille, a village of Mecklenburgh Co. N. C.

Fincley, a township of Washington Co. Pa.

Finneysville, p.v. Rutland Co. Vt.

Finmark, the most northern section of Europe, jutting into the Arctic Ocean; it formerly belonged to Denmark, but with Norway was ceded to Sweden, in 1815. The coast is flanked with islands, and indented with bays. It comprises about 400 sq. m. of surface, but the inhabitants, a mixed race of Finns, and Laplanders, do not exceed 26,000, who principally inhabit the coast, fishing and hunting constituting their chief employment: the S. part bordering on Lapland is mountainous. North Cape, its extreme northern limit, and also of Europe, is in the lat. of 71. 10. N., and 25. 50. of E. long.

Finoe, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark. It has a canal, by which the Oder and Havel are united. It is 28 m. N. W. of Custrin.

Fionda, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, and a bishop's see, on the gulf of Satalia, 25 m. S. W. of Satalia.

Fiorenzo. See Ferentino.

Fiorenzo, St. a sea-port on the N. W. coast of Corsica, defended by walls and a tower. It was taken by the English and Corsicans, from the French, in 1794. It is 7 m. W. of Bastia.

Firesepour, a town of Hindoostan, in Moulton, seated on the Setlege, at the influx of the Beyah, 20 m. W. of Depalpour, and 150 E. by N. of Moulton.

Fishback, a town of Switzerland in the Valais, 27 m. E. of Sion. A battle was fought in this neighborhood between the Swis, and Amadeus, Duke of Savoy in which the Swiss were victorious.

Fishers Islands, in Long Island Sound, opposite to Stonington harbour in Connecticut. It is 10 m. long and 2 broad, with a fertile soil, and is annexed to the township of Southold, in Long Island, and belongs to the State of New York.

Fishguard, a town of Wales in Pembrokeshire. Here is a good pier, with every convenience for ship-building, and a considerable trade in herrings, corn, and bu ter. It is situate on a steep cliff, on a bay of St. George's channel, 16 m. N. E. of St. David, and 249 W. by N. of London. Pop. in 1821, 1,837.

Fishausen, a town of Prussia, with a royal castle, seated on the Frische Haff, 21 m. W. of Konisberg, and 5 N. N. E. of Pillau.

Fishkill, a town of New York, in Dutchess county, on a creek of the same name. 5 m. E. of Hudson river, and 66 N. of New York. Pop. of the township 8,222.

Fishkill Landing, a village of Dutchess Co. N. Y. on the Hudson opposite Newburg.

Fish Lake, p.v. Delaware Co. N. Y.

Fish River, Great, a river of Southern Africa flowing South into the ocean East of the Cape of Good Hope. The limits of the Cape Colony extend a little beyond it to the East.

Fissato, a sea-port of Barbary, in the province of Tripoli, 90 m. N. W. of Tripoli. Long. 12. 10. E., lat. 33. 50. N.

Fistella, a fortified town of Morocco. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in fine garments. It is 125 m. N. E. of Morocco. Long. 5. 55. E. lat. 32. 27. N.

Fitchburg, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 48 m. N. W. Boston. It has some manufactories. Pop. 2,180.

Fitzwilliam, p.t. Cheshire Co. N. H. on the Massachusetts border, 65 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 1,220.

Fiume. See Fayoum.

Fiume, a sea-port of Austrian Istria, with a castle, and many fine churches and convents. It is noted for wine, good figs, and other fruits; and has a sugar refinery, and a wax manufacture. The harbour is formed by the river Fiumara which enters the bay of Carnero, at the extremity of the Adriatic. It is 37 m. E. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 14. 12. E., lat. 45. 38. N. Pop. about 12,000.

Fladstrand, a sea-port of Denmark, in North Jutland, with a harbour defended by three forts, just within the entrance to the Cattgat. It is 30 m. N. N. E. of Alburg. Long. 10. 29. E., lat. 57. 33. N.

Flaggtown, p.v. Somerset Co. N. J.

Flamborough, a factory of the Hudson Bay Company, on Hayes river, 70 m. from its mouth, on the W. side of Hudson Bay. Long. 90. 5. W. lat. 56. 8. N.

Flamborough Head, a lofty promontory on the coast of Yorkshire, Eng. whose snow-white cliffs, rising from 300 to 450 feet above the level of the sea, are seen at a great distance from shore, and afford shelter to innumerable multitudes of sea-fowls. The lower parts contain vast caverns, and on the summit is a light-house, 5 m. E. N. E. of Burlington. Long. 0. 2. W., lat. 54. 8. N. There is a village of the same name, contiguous to the cliffs. Pop. in 1821, 917. Off this headland the celebrated John Paul Jones in the American Frigate Bonne Homme Richard, captured the British Frigate Serapis after one of the most desperate battles ever fought.

Flamsteed, a village in Hertfordshire, Eng. Pop. in 1821, 1,392. It was a place of some importance at the time the Romans were in possession of England. The house in Greenwich Park, in which is the Royal Observatory, and from whence the English meridional line of longitude is drawn, is commonly called Flamsteed House after the name of its first astronomer. See Greenwich.

Flanders, a country of Europe, bounded on the N. by the mouth of the Scheldt, and N. W. by the North Sea or German Ocean, lying between the lat. of 50. 40. and 51. 20. N. and 2. 15. to 4. 15. of E. longitude. The early history of this country is involved in considerable obscurity; it has, however, for several centuries ranked among the most fertile, populous, and civilized parts of Europe, it was formerly known under three divisions, of French, Austria, and Dutch Flanders; the French, or S. part, was comprised in the late province of Artois, now the department du Nord, or N. The Austrian comprised the centre from

E. to W.; and the Dutch the coast off the mouth of the Scheldt; the whole country was overrun by the French in the early part of the war which commenced in 1793, and continued to them by the treaty of Campo Formio in 1797. After the treaty of Luneville in 1801 Austrian and Dutch Flanders were divided into two departments; Lys on the W. and Scheldt on the E. and incorporated with the French Empire. At the general partitioning of this part of Europe, which followed the peace of 1814, those two departments were ceded to the new kingdom of the Netherlands, and were called the East and West Flanders. For their subsequent history, see Netherlands. The area of the E. part comprises about 1,080 square m., and contains about 600,000 inhabitants. It is divided into four circles, of which Ghent, Dendermonde, Oudenarde and Eecloo, are the chief towns; the other places of note are Sluys, Ardenberg, Phillipina, and Sas Van Ghent on the shore of the mouth of the Scheldt; and Deynse, Renaix, Grammont, Sotteghem, Alost, and Watteren in the S. The river Scheldt which rises in the French department, of Aisne enters the S. W. corner running N. by E. to Ghent in the centre of the province, and then nearly due E. till it changes its course to the N. forming the boundary of the province on the side of Brabant; towards the S. the surface is slightly undulated, but northward it is an entire level intersected by canals, communicating both with the North Sea and the mouth of the Scheldt.

West Flanders is bounded on the S. and S. W. by the French department; on the N. and N. W. by the North Sea; the area of this province is about 1,509 square m., containing 530,000 inhabitants. It is also divided into four circles, of which Bruges, Furnes, Ypres, and Courtray are the chief towns, the other places of note are the sea-ports of Nieuport and Ostend; the latter is regarded as the maritime portal of this part of Europe. This like E. Flanders is a level country; in the S. E. part, fine thread, lace, and linen cambrics are manufactured to a great extent for exportation; over all the other parts of the two provinces, fishing, agriculture and manufactures are assiduously pursued, and tend to render the inhabitants among the most social and best conditioned in Europe. The language of the common people is peculiar, a mixture of Dutch and French; but in the towns the French is most generally spoken. The Catholic religion prevails through both provinces; the clergy are a tolerant and respectable body.

Flanders, p.v. Morris Co. N. J.

Flatbush, a town of N. Y., chief of King's county, Long Island. The Americans were defeated near this place by the British in 1776. It is situated amid garden-grounds, 5 m. S. by E. of New York. Pop. 1,143.

Flatlands, a township of Kings Co. N. Y. on Long Island. Pop. 596.

Flattery, Cape, on the W. coast of North America, discovered by Cook, in 1778; and so named, because he was disappointed at not finding a harbour. Long. 124. 57. W., lat. 43. 25. N.

Flainigny, a town of France, in the department of Cote d'Or, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on a mountain, by the river Ozerain, 27 m. W. N. W. of Dijon.

Fleche, La, a town of France, in the department of Sarthe. Here was a noble college, built by Henry IV., at which Descartes was educated; the centre is now converted into a town-house, and one of the wings rebuilt as a prytaneum, or military school for soldiers' children. It is seated on the N. bank of the Loire, and is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1825, 5,387. It is 80 m. E. N. E. of Nantes.

Fleckerøe, Justerøe, or Fleckeren, an island in the Scagerrack, near the coast of Norway, a few m. E. of Christiansand. Between the island and the continent is a most excellent harbour, defended by a fortress. Long. 8. 18. E., lat. 58. 4. N.

Fleet, a river of Scotland, in Kirkenbrightshire which issues from a small lake of the same name, and enters Wigton bay, below Gatehouse. On its W. side are the vestiges of a camp, a druidical circle, and a vitrified fort.

Fleming, a county of Kentucky. Pop. 13,403. Flemingsburg is the capital, 50 m. N. E. of Lexington.

Flemington, p.v. Hunterdon Co. N. J.

Fletcher, a township of Franklin Co. Vt. Pop. 793.

Flensburg, a seaport of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a strong citadel, and a harbour at the head of a bay in the Little Belt, at its entrance into the Baltic. It is a place of great commerce, 15 m. N. N. W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 47. E., lat. 54. 52. N. Pop. about 15,000.

Flurance, a town of France, in the department of Gers, on the river Gers, 3 m. N. of Auch.

Fleurus, a village of the Netherlands, in Namur, 6 m. N. E. of Charleroy. Here, in 1690, a victory was gained by the French over the allies; and in 1794, the Austrians were defeated in a general attack of the French posts.

Flie, or Vieland, an island on the coast of Holland, N. of the Texel, at the middle of the entrance of the Zuider Zee.

Flint, a county at the N. E. extremity of Wales, bounded in a N. W. direction by the estuary of the river Dee, and N. by W. by the Irish sea. It is the smallest county in Wales, its superficies being only 243 sq. m. It is, however, rich in coal, copper and lead, and since the commencement of the present century, the cotton manufacture has been introduced, and the pop. during the 20 years, 1801—1821 has increased 36 per cent. The principal towns are Mold, Holywell, Hawarden, and St. Asaph (each of which see), there is also a town called Flint, formerly the chief town of the county, though now a small place. It has the county-goal, but the assizes are held at Mold. Here are the remains of a royal castle, in which Richard II. took shelter on arriving from Ireland; but on leaving it he was delivered into the hands of his rival, afterward Henry IV.: it stands on a rock close to the sea, and is governed by a constable, who is also mayor of the town. Flint has no market, but is well frequented as a bathing-place. It is seated on the estuary of the Dee, 12 m. W. N. W. of Chester, and 195 N. N. W. from London. Pop. in 1821, 1,612.

Flint, a river of the state of Georgia, which rises in the country formerly occupied by the Creek Indians, runs S. W. and joining the Chatahoochee, at its entrance into E. Florida, forms the Apalachicola.

Flintstone, p.v. Alleghany Co. Maryland.

Flix, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, strong both by nature and art. It stands on a peninsula formed by the Ebro, and the side where the river does not pass is covered by mountains, and defended by a castle. It is 23 m. N. of Tortosa.

Floddon, a field in the parish of Kirknewton, Northumberland, Eng. 5 m. N. N. W. of Woot.

er, on which a battle was fought between the English and Scots in 1513, in which James IV. was killed, with many of his nobility, and 10,000 men.

Florac, a town of France, in the department of Lozere, 13 m. S. of Mende, and 55 N. of Montpelier. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1825, 2,082.

Florence, a celebrated city of Italy, capital of Tuscany, and an archbishop's see, with a citadel, and a university. It was first founded by the soldiers of Sylla, embellished and enlarged by the triumvirs; destroyed by Totila, and rebuilt by Charlemagne. The circumference is about 6 m. and the fortifications consist of only a wall and a ditch, with two or three forts which command a part of the town. It is divided into two unequal parts, by the river Arno, over which are four handsome bridges. The quays, the buildings on each side, and the bridges, render the part through which the river runs by far the finest; but every part is full of wonders in the arts of painting, statuary and architecture. The environs are beautiful, rich, and populous. Some of the Florentine merchants, formerly, were men of great wealth; and one of them, in the middle of the fifteenth century, built that noble fabric, which, from the name of its founder, is still called the Palazzo Pitti. It was afterwards purchased by the Medici family, who made some enlargements; and it thence became the residence of the grand dukes of Tuscany. The Palazzo Vecchio, or old palace, contains a room 172 feet long, and 70 wide, for public entertainments. The beauties and riches of these palaces, in all that is masterly in architecture, literature, and the arts, especially those of painting and sculpture have been often described. The celebrated Venus of Medici, the standard of taste in female beauty and proportion, stood in a room called the Tribune; this, with other masterpieces of sculpture, was carried away to Paris, but restored with most of the other works of art at the general peace in 1815. There are other rooms, whose contents are indicated by the names they bear; as the cabinet of arts, of astronomy, natural history, medals, portraits, porcelain, antiquities, &c. Beside the Medicean library begun by Julius de Medici, and greatly augmented by duke Cosmo I., there are several other copious libraries, especially those in the two Benedictine and Carmelite convents. The Florentine Academy and the Academia della Crusca were instituted to enrich the literature and improve the language of Tuscany; the latter is so named because it rejects like bran all words not purely Tuscan. The cathedral, the churches, and other public buildings, contain paintings and sculpture by the first masters in Italy; and the chapel of Lorenzo is perhaps, the most expensive habitation that ever was reared for the dead, being incrusted with precious stones, and adorned with the workmanship of the best modern sculptors. The manufactures of Florence are chiefly silks, satins, gold and silver stuffs, and damask table cloths. It has a considerable trade in fruits, oil, and excellent wines. Florence is 45 m. E. N. E. of Leghorn, which is its out-port, and 125 N. W. of Rome. Long. 11. 3. E., lat. 43. 46. N. Pop. in 1825, 75,207.

Florence, p.t. Oneida Co. N. Y. Pop. 964. Also a village in Alabama, the capital of Lauderdale Co. on the Muscle Shoals of Tennessee River. Also a village in Huron Co. Ohio.

Florent, St. a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Loire, 20 m. W. S. W. of Angers.

Florentin, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, at the conflux of the Armanche and Armancon, 15 m. N. E. of Auxerre, and 80 S. E. of Paris.

Florentino, or Fiorentino, a province of Tuscany; bounded on the N. W. by the republic of Lucca and the Modenese; N. E. by the Apennines, and S. by the Siennese. Pop. about 580,000: besides Florence the capital, the other principal towns are Leghorn, Pisa, and Pistoia.

Flores, or Mangrove, an island of the East Indies, one of the chain that forms the S. boundary of the Java and Banda seas, 108 m. long and 45 broad, lying to the E. of that of Sumbawa. On the S. side, near the E. end, is a town named Larantuea. Long. 121. 56. E., lat. 8. 50. S.

Flores, a fertile island, one of the Azores, so called from the abundance of flowers found upon it. Lagens is the most populous town, but St. Cruz is the capital. Long. 31. 0. W., lat. 39. 34. N.

Florida, a Territory of the United States, and the most southern portion of the country. Its southern point is in 25. N. lat., and it extends N. to 31. It lies between 80. 25. and 87. 20. W. long. and contains, about 45,000 sq. m. It is shaped somewhat like an L, the southeastern part being a peninsula washed by the ocean on the E., and the Gulf of Mexico on the W. Its boundaries on the N. are Georgia and Alabama. It has been usual to consider this territory as consisting of two divisions, East and West, but there is at present no political distinction.

The land is low and generally either sandy or swampy. On the coast it is mostly barren. There are many savannas covered with a thick growth of grass and flowers. In the swampy tracts the cane brakes are of an enormous height and thickness. The reed canes are sometimes 30 and 40 feet high. The ponds and bayons are in summer covered with aquatic plants, and abound with alligators. The uplands of the interior are the most fertile and bear the name of hammock lands from the tufts or swells which they exhibit. The greater part of the surface is a pine barren; this is a land with a grey and reddish soil producing coarse grass and a scanty growth of pine trees. Almost every part of the county affords abundance of timber, as pitch pine, live oak, cypress, &c. Two thirds of the country are covered with pine forests.

The magnolia is a very common and beautiful tree, and grows to the height of 100 feet with a straight trunk surmounted by a conical mass of dark green foliage covered over with large milk-white flowers. Orange trees also flourish here, and about St. Augustine and on the borders of many of the lakes and savannas are many beautiful groves of them. Limes, grapes, and figs, grow wild. The long moss or Spanish beard which hangs in festoons upon the branches of the live oak and pine, affords a good material for stuffing.

This country is very thinly inhabited, and hardly any thing is known from experience as to its capabilities for agriculture; but it is thought to be excellently adapted to the culture of tobacco, cotton, indigo, rice, and sugar. At present the chief objects of attention among the planters, are maize, rice, potatoes, beans, melons, &c. The olive and coffee have been tried here and the former will undoubtedly succeed.

The climate is very hot, although in the northern parts water sometimes freezes. In the peninsula the most delicate orange trees bear fruit in full perfection. In the lower parts the air is moist, and in the neighbourhood of the rice fields it is unhealthy. From October to June the weather is most delightful. The southern extremity is subject to the hurricanes of the West Indies.

The largest river is the St. Johns, which rises in the centre of the peninsula and flows north-easterly to the sea; it passes through several lakes and its current is gentle. The Apalachicola passes through West Florida into the Gulf of Mexico. Many small streams rise in the pine forests and fall into the inlets of the Gulf. The springs which give rise to these rivers are very remarkable for their size and depth. See Wakulla Fountain.

The only towns of consequence are St. Augustine on the eastern coast, and Pensacola on the western. There is a chain of low islands or sand banks skirting the whole coast, but they afford few good harbours. Off cape Sable, which is the southernmost point of the peninsula, are a cluster of islands at some distance from the land, on one of which, called Key West, was lately established a naval station of the United States.

Florida is divided into 15 counties. The Governor is appointed by the United States, and there is a legislative council of 16 members. Tallahassee is the seat of government. It has one delegate in Congress. The Pop. is 34,723, of whom 15,510 are slaves. The commerce of the territory is inconsiderable. The shipping in 1825 amounted to 2,781 tons. The imports for 1829 were 153,642 dollars. The exports of domestic produce, 38,163 dollars. Total exports 56,986 dollars.

This territory was discovered in 1497. It was first settled by the Spaniards in 1524. Some settlements were made by the French about 30 years afterwards, and they established themselves in the neighbourhood of the spot where St. Augustine now stands in 1564. The Spaniards however, expelled the French. In 1763 Florida was ceded to Great Britain, and retained by that power till 1781 when it was reconquered by the Spaniards. In 1821 Spain ceded it by treaty to the United States as an indemnity for spoiliations upon our commerce; and the following year it was made a territorial government.

Florida Cape, is on the E. coast of East Florida, in the gulf of the same name, in the lat. of 25. 41. N., and 80. 5. of W. long.; 90. m. N. E. of Cape Sable, and about 30 W. of the N. W. end of the Great Bahama Bank.

Florida, Gulf of, is the passage out of the gulf of Mexico into the Atlantic Ocean, between the N. W. coast of the Island of Cuba, and the Bahama Bank and islands on the E., and the promontory of East Florida on the W. Through this passage the great body of waters flowing into the gulf of Mexico from the Mississippi, Colorado, and Rio del Norte, set, in a continual stream, running at the rate of 4 to 5 m. per hour: the stream continues to run along the eastern coast of North America, to the lat. of 42., when the current is dispersed by the great bank of Newfoundland. The gulf passage is from 30 to 130 m. wide, the narrowest part being between Cape Florida, and the Great Bahama Bank before mentioned.

Florida Keys, or Martyrs Islands and Reefs, are the shoals and sand-banks flanking the southern extremity and E. coast of the promontory of East Florida, as previously described.

Florida, p.t. Berkshire Co. Mass. Pop. 454. Also a p.t. Montgomery Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,838.

Florisant, a village in St. Louis Co. Missouri, on the Missouri.

Flour, St. a city of France, in the department of Cantal, and a bishop's sec. Good knives are made here, and it has a considerable trade in corn. It is seated on a mountain, 35 m. S. of Clermont, and 108 N. by W. of Montpelier. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1820, 6,372.

Flour Town, a village in Montgomery Co. Pa.

Floyd, a county of Kentucky. Pop. 4,262. Prestonburg is the capital. Also a county of Indiana. Pop. 6,363. New Albany is the capital.

Floyd, p.t. Oneida Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,699.

Floydsburg, a village in Jefferson Co. Ken.

Flushing, a strong sea-port of Dutch Zealand, in the island of Walcheren, on the N. side of Western Scheldt, the entrance of which it defends. It has a good harbour, and a great canal runs through the town, which is deep enough to admit loaded vessels. The stadthouse is a superb building, after the model of that of Amsterdam. Flushing was the birth place of admiral De Ruyter, and has a capacious harbour and basin for ships of the largest burthen. It is one of the naval depots of the Netherlands. Its trade is chiefly smuggling. Pop. about 6,000. It is in lat. 51. 27. N., and 3. 34. of E. long.

Flushing, a town of New York, in Queen's county, Long Island, situate on the E. side of Hell-gate, 7 m. E. by N. of New York. Pop. 2,820.

Flushing, p.v. Belmont Co. Ohio.

Fluvanna, a county of the E. District of Virginia, N. of James river, at the foot of the first ridge of the Alleghany mountains. Pop. 8,221. Palmyra is the chief town.

Fochabers, a town of Scotland belonging to Murrayshire, though seated on the E. side of the river Spey. It is 8 m. E. by S. of Elgin, and 22 W. of Banff.

Fochan, a populous village of China, in the vicinity of Canton.

Fochea, or Foggia, a sea-port of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, with a castle. The Venetians beat the Turkish fleet near this place, in 1650. It is seated on the gulf of Smyrna, at the influx of the Hermus, 28 m. N. W. of Smyrna. Long. 26 39. E., lat. 38. 44. N.

Foddear, a town of Hungary, seated on the W. bank of the Danube, opposite Coloczca, 40 m S. of Buda. Pop. 2,500.

Fogaras, a town and castle of Transylvania, on the river Alauta, 30 m. N. by E. of Hermadstadt.

Foggia, a town of Naples, in Capitanata. It is a staple for corn and wool, and seated near the Cerbero, 20 m. S. of Manfredonia; it suffered greatly by an earthquake, in 1732. Pop. about 17,000.

Foglesville, a village in Lehigh Co. Pa.

Foglia, a river of Italy, which rises on the confines of Tuscany, crosses the duchy of Urbino, and enters the gulf of Venice, at Pesaro.

Foglizzo, or Fogolino, a town of Piedmont, 5 m N. W. of Chivasso, and 13 W. of Crescentino

Fogo. See Fuego.

Fohr, or Fora, an island of Denmark, about 12 m. in circumference, near the coast of Sleswick, in the German Ocean, 65 m. N. of Heligoland. Pop. about 5,500. Long. 8. 31. E., lat. 54. 44. N.

Foir, a late district of France, in Languedoc, adjoining the Pyrenees. It now forms, with Couserans, the department of Arriege.

Foix, a town of France, capital of the department of Arriège. Here is a manufacture of coarse woolen cloths, with some copper-mills. It is seated on the Arriège, near the foot of the Pyrenees, 42 m. S. by E. of Toulouse.

Fo-kien a maritime province in the S. of China, bounded on the N. by Tehe-kiang, W. by Kiang-si, S. by Quang-tong, and E. by the China Sea. The climate is warm; and yet the air is so pure, that no contagious diseases ever prevail. It produces musk in abundance, precious stones, quicksilver, iron, and tin; also gold and silver, but it is forbidden to dig for these. It has fine plains; and industry fertilizes even the mountains, the greater part of which are cut into terraces, rising above each other. Its valleys are watered by springs and rivers from the mountains, which the husbandman distributes with great skill, to refresh his rice: he has even the art to raise his water to the tops of the mountains, and to convey it from one side to the other, by pipes made of bamboo. The people speak a different language in most of the cities, each of which has its particular dialects. The language of the mandarins is that which is spoken every where; but few understand it in this province: however, it produces a great number of literati. It contains 9 cities of the first and 60 of the third class. Fou-tcheo is the capital.

Foleshill, a parish in the county of the city of Coventry, Eng. lying on the N. side of the city, and intersected by the Coventry canal. Pop. in 1820, 4,937, almost exclusively employed in the riband manufacture.

Foligno, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Umbria, famous for its sweetmeats, paper mills, and silk manufactures. It is seated on the W. side of the Apennines, near a fertile plain, 69 m. N. of Rome.

Folkingham, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng. Here are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on a rising ground, 18 m. W. S. W. of Boston, and 106 N. of London. Pop. 759.

Folkstone, a town in Kent, Eng. It had once five churches, four of which have been destroyed by the incursions of the sea. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in fishing. Dr. Wm. Harvey, the celebrated discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was born here in 1578. It is a member of the port of Dover, governed by a mayor, and a little to the W. is Sandgate castle, built by Henry VIII. It is seated on the English channel, 8 m. S. W. of Dover, and 72 E. by S. of London. Pop. in 1821, 4,232, chiefly dependent on fishing and smuggling for support.

Fondi, a town of Naples, in the Terra di Lavoro, seated on the Appian Way near the sea coast, 65 m. S. S. W. of Rome.

Fong-tsiang, or Fontcheou, a city of China, in the province of Chen-si. Its district contains eight cities of the second and third class. It is seated on the Hoie Ho, which falls into the Yellow river, 560 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 106. 57. E., lat. 34. 36. N.

Fong-yang, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It incloses within its walls several fertile little hills; and its jurisdiction comprehends five cities of the second, and 13 of the third class. It is seated on a mountain which overhangs a river falling into the Hongts Hoi, 70 m. N. E. of Na-king. Long. 116. 58. E., lat. 32. 52. N.

Fons, a town of France, in the department of Lot, 5 m. N. W. of Figeac.

Fontainebleau, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne, celebrated for its fine palace, and a hunting seat of the sovereigns of France. It stands in the midst of an extensive forest, 35 m. S. S. E. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1820, 6,439.

Fontaine l'Ereque a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, 6 m. W. of Charleroi.

Fontanetto, a town of Piedmont, 7 m. E. of Crescentino.

Fontarabia, a sea-port of Spain, in Biscay, on the frontiers of France, from which it is separated by the river Bidassoa, which forms a harbour at its mouth, in the bay of Biscay. It stands on a peninsula, at the foot of the Pyrenean mountains, and is so strong both by nature and art as to be accounted the key of Spain, on that side; but it opened its gates to the French in 1794. It is 22 m. S. W. of Bayonne, and 62 E. by N. of Bilbao. Long. 1. 47. W., lat. 43. 23. N.

Fontenay le Comte, a town of France, in the department of Vendée. It has a woolen manufacture, and its fairs are famous for cattle. It is seated on the Vendée, 25 m. N. E. of Rochelle, 55 W. by S. of Poitiers, and 215 S. E. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1820, 7,470.

Fontenoy, a village of the Netherlands, in Hainault, 4 m. S. E. of Tournay. It is celebrated for a battle between the allies and the French in 1745, in which the former were defeated.

Fonterault, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire. Here is a famous abbey, in the church of which, several kings and queens of France lie interred. It is 7 m. S. E. of Saumur.

Foru, an island of Denmark, on the W. coast of S. Jutland, between those of Sylt and Nordstrand. It is of an oval form, 20 m. in circumference, and the chief place is Utersen. See Fohr.

Forcheim, a strong town of Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg, with a fine arsenal. It surrendered to the French in 1796, but the Austrians compelled them to abandon it soon afterward. It is seated at the conflux of the Wisent and Rednitz, 16 m. S. S. E. of Bamberg, and is now included in the territory of the king of Bavaria.

Fordingbridge, a town in Hampshire, Eng. with a manufacture of checks and bed-ticks; seated on the Little Avon, 10 m. S. of Salisbury, and 88 W. by S. of London. Pop. in 1820, 2,444.

Fordseille, a village in Pearl River, Marion Co. Mississippi.

Foreland, North, a promontory of Kent, Eng. the E. point of the isle of Thanet. It is the most southern point of the port of London; and a line thence extended N. to the point called the Nase, in Essex, forms the mouth of the Thames. Here is a round brick tower, nearly 80 feet high, erected by the Trinity-house for a sea-mark. Long. 1. 29. E., lat. 51. 22. N.

Foreland, South, another promontory of Kent. It is called South, in respect to its bearing from the other Foreland, which is 13 m. to the N. Between these two capes is the noted roadstead, called the Downs.

Forest Towns, four towns of Suabia, in Brigau, situate on the Rhine and the confines of Switzer land, at the entrance of the Black Forest. Their names are Waldschut, Lauffenburgh, Seckingen, and Rheinfelden.

Forestville, a village in Burlington Co. N. Y.

Forfar, a borough of Scotland, capital of Angusshire. It contains many neat modern houses and has manufactures of coarse linens and shoes. It is situate in an extensive plain, nearly in the centre of the county, 14 m. N. by E. of Dundee.

Forfarshire. See Angusshire.

Forges, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, celebrated for its mineral waters. It is 24 m. N. E. of Rouen.

Forio, or Fontario. See Ischia.

Forli, a town of Italy, in Romagna, seated on the frontier of Tuscany, in a fertile country, near the river Roncs, 11 m. S. S. W. of Ravenna.

Formentera, an island in the Mediterranean, belonging to the crown of Spain. It is situated to the south of Ivica, from which it is separated by a channel 4 m. wide.

Formosa, an island in the China Sea, lying between 120. and 122. E. long., and 22. and 25. N. lat., and separated from the province of Fo-kien, in China, by a channel about 80 m. where narrowest. It is 250 m. from N. to S., and 70 in its broadest part, but is greatly contracted at the S. extremity. It is subject to the Chinese, who, however, did not know of its existence till the year 1430. A chain of mountains, running its whole length, divides it into two parts, the E. and W. The Dutch built the fort of Zealand, on the W. part, in 1643. They were driven thence, in 1661, by a Chinese pirate, who made himself master of all the W. part. In 1682 the whole island submitted to the emperor of China. It contains extensive and fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivulets from the mountains. It produces abundance of corn and rice, most of the Indian fruits, many of those of Europe, tobacco, sugar, pepper, camphire, and cinnamon. Wholesome water is the only thing wanting in Formosa. The inhabitants rear a great number of oxen, which they use for riding, from a want of horses. This island was almost totally destroyed by a furious hurricane and dreadful inundation of the sea. Taiouang, at the S. W. end of the island, is the capital.

Formosa, Cape, the point of land between the bights of Benin and Biafra, in the gulf of Guinea. Lat. 4. 15. N., and 5. 10. of E. long. One of the Bissagos Isles on the W. coast of North Africa, is also called Formosa. Lat. 11. 30. N., long. 16. 10. W.

Fornovo, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma; near which, in 1495, Charles VIII. of France obtained a victory over the princes of Italy. It is 8 m. W. S. W. of Parma.

Forres, a royal burgh of Scotland, in Murrayshire, neatly built on an eminence, on the river and near the bay of Findhorn, which is its port. It has manufactures of linen and thread, and a valuable salmon fishery. A little W. of the town is a column, called Sweno's stone, covered with antique sculpture, and said to have been erected in memory of a victory obtained over the Danes, in 1008. Forres is 12 m. W. by S. of Elgin, and 12 E. of Nairn. Pop. in 1821, 3,540.

Forsta, a town of Lusatia, with a castle. It has manufactures of woollen and linen cloths and carpets, and stands on a little island in the Neissa, 15 m. S. S. W. of Guben, and 54 N. E. of Dresden.

Forteventura, or Fuerteventura, one of the Canary Islands, 65 m. in length, and of a very irregular breadth, consisting of two peninsulas, joined by an isthmus 12 m. in breadth. Its chief product is the barilla plant, it also produces some wheat, barley, beeves, and goats. The S. W. point is in long. 14. 31. W., lat 28. 4. N

Forth, a river of Scotland, which rises in the mountain Ben Lomond, in Dumbartonshire, flows E. in a sinuous course by Stirling and Alloa, and meets the German Ocean a little below Alloa, where it forms a noble estuary, called the Frith of Forth. The Forth is navigable for vessels of 80 tons, as far as Stirling bridge, and for merchant vessels of any burden, as far as Grangemouth, where there is a communication between this river and the Clyde, by a canal.

Forth, Frith of, the estuary above mentioned, is about 10 m. in mean breadth, that is, reckoning the entrance from North Berwick on the S., to Elie Ness on the N., the distance from which two points is about 8 m.; from this line to the Queensferry, where it narrows to a m. and a half, the distance is about 23 m. and from Queensferry to Grangemouth the distance is about 12 m. the water spreading again to the extent of 3 to 4 m. Between Queensferry and the line of Elie Ness are a number of islands, the most celebrated of which, are Inch Garvie, Inch Colm, and Inch Keith; on the latter, and on the Isle of May, without the line of Elie Ness, are light-houses, and these, as well as most of the other islands, contain ruins of castles or religious houses. St. Abb's head on the S., and Fife Ness on the N., distant from each other 35 m. are by some considered as forming the points of entrance to the Frith of Forth.

Fortrose, a borough of Scotland, in Rosshire, situate on the Murray Frith nearly opposite Fort George, to which there is a regular ferry. It is composed of two towns, Rosemarkie, and Chanonry; the former a very ancient borough, and the latter one, a bishop's see. Two small parts of the ancient cathedral remain, one used as a burial-place, the other as a court-house and prison. It is 9 m. S. S. W. of Cromarty.

Fort Ann, a township of Washington Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,210.

Fort Edward, in the same Co. Pop. 1,816

Fort-Royal, the capital of Martinique, on the W. side of the island, with one of the best harbours in the West Indies, defended by a strong citadel. Long. 61. 9. W., lat 14. 36. N.

Fort-Royal, the capital of the island of Granada. See St. George.

Fossano, a town of Piedmont, with a citadel, seated on the Store, 10 m. N. E. of Coni. It has manufactures of silk.

Fosse, a town of the Netherlands, in Namur, situate between the Sambre and Meuse, 7 m. N. W. of Namur.

Fossombrone, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, with a castle on a mountain, near the river Metro, 10 m. S. E. of Urbino; the vicinity is very productive of silk.

Fossum, a town of Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys, noted for rich mines of cobalt, 35 m. W. of Christiania.

Foster, p.t. Providence Co. R. I. 15. m. W. Providence. Pop. 2,672.

Fotheringay, a village in Northamptonshire, Eng. 3 m. N. of Oundle, near the Nen. Here are the ruins of a castle in which Richard III. was born, and Mary Queen of Scots tried and beheaded. In the church are interred two dukes of York; Edward, killed at Agincourt in France, and Richard, slain at Wakefield.

Foue, or Faoua, a town of Lower Egypt, seated on the W. branch of the Nile, 25 m. S. by E. of Rosetto.

Fougeres, a town of France, in the department offle and Vilaine, with an ancient castle. In 1802, it was taken by John, king of England. It is seated on the Coesnon, 25 m. N. E. of Rennes, and 150 W. by S. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect.

Foula, or Fowla. See Fula.

Fouli, Pholey, or Foulah, a country of Africa, extending on both sides of the river Senegal about 500 m. from E. to W.; the boundaries from N. to S. are unknown. It is populous and fertile. The Foulahs are, in general, of a tawny complexion, though many of them are entirely black. Some lead a wandering life, and roam about the country with large droves of cows, sheep, goats, and horses: others are dexterous at hunting wild beasts; the teeth of elephants, and the skins of lions, leopards, and tigers, being articles of trade. Their arms are bows and arrows, lances, swords, daggers, and occasionally a kind of small fusc. They are praised by travellers for their hospitality: nor is their humanity in other respects less commendable; for if one of their countrymen have the misfortune to fall into slavery, the rest join stock to redeem him. The king of this country is called the Siratick; and though he seldom appears with the badges of majesty, he has great authority, and is as much respected as any one on the coast.

Foulness, a small island on the S. E. coast of Essex, Eng. formed by the river Crouch, at its entrance into the mouth of the Thames. It has a village, with a church, 8 m. E. by N. of Rochford. Pop. in 1821, 565.

Foulsham, a town in Norfolk, Eng. 3 m. N. E. of London.

Four Cantons, Lake of the. See Waldstædter Sea.

Fourncaux Island, a small island in the Pacific ocean. Long. 143. 2. W., lat. 17. 11. S.

Fou-tcheou, a city of China, in Fokien, and the most considerable in that province, on account of its trade, the convenience of its rivers and port, and the number of its literati. It is the residence of a viceroy, and has under its jurisdiction nine cities of the third class. It is seated near the mouth of a river falling into the China sea, 435 miles N. E. of Canton, and 1,030 S. by E. of Peking. Long. 119. 4. E., lat. 26. 4. N.

Fou-tcheou, another city of China in Kiangsî, formerly one of the most beautiful cities in China, but almost ruined by the invasion of the Tartars. It is 240 m. N.W. of the other Fou-tcheou, and 835 m. S. of Peking. Long. 115. 56. E., lat. 27. 55. N.

Fowey, or Fawcy, a river in Cornwall, Eng. which rises four miles S. E. of Camelford, passes by Lostwithiel, and after a winding course of about 40 m. enters the English channel, at Fowey.

Fowey, a borough and sea-port in Cornwall, Eng. with a considerable trade by the pilchard fishery. The harbour is defended by St. Catherine fort, on the summit of a steep pile of rocks, and an adjoining battery. The streets are so narrow, and with such sudden turnings, that no wheeled carriages can be admitted. The church is a spacious structure. It is seated at the mouth of the Fowey, which forms a capacious harbour, 32 m. S. W. of Launceston, and 239 W. by S. of London. Long. 4. 37. W., lat. 50. 19. N.

Fowler, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,447. Also a township in Trumbull Co. Ohio.

Foxborough, p.t. Norfolk Co. Mass. on a branch of Taunton river 25 m. S. Boston. Pop. 1,099.

Foxcroft, a township in Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 677.

Fox Islands, a group of islands in the Northern Archipelago. They are 16 in number, between the coast of Kamtschatka and the W. coast of America, between 52. and 55. N. lat. Each island has a peculiar name; but this general name is given to the whole group, on account of the great number of black, grey, and red foxes, with which they abound. The dress of the inhabitants consists of a cap, and a fur coat which reaches down to their knees: some wear a cap of party coloured bird-skin, upon which is left part of the wings and tail. On the forepart of their hunting and fishing caps, they place a small board, like a screen, adorned with the jawbones of sea-bears, and ornamented with glass beads, which they receive in barter from the Russians. They feed upon the flesh of all sorts of sea animals, and generally eat it raw. The provision intended for keeping, is dried without salt, in the air. Their weapons are bows, arrows and darts; and for defence, they use wooden shields. The most perfect equality reigns among them: they have neither chiefs nor superiors, neither laws nor punishments. They live together in families, and societies of several families united, which form what they call a race, who, in case of attack or defence, mutually aid each other. They have a good share of plain natural understanding; and seem cold and indifferent in most of their actions; yet if an injury, or mere suspicion, rouse them from this phlegmatic state they become furious and revengeful. The Russians call these islands the Lyssie Ostrova.

* * * There is a cluster of small but beautiful, fertile and romantic islands, called Fox islands, in Penobscot Bay, Maine.

Foxford, a town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, on the river Moy, 8 m. E. N. E. of Castlebar. Pop. in 1821, 1,024.

Foy, St. a town of France, in the department of Gironde, on the river Dordogne, 38 m. E. of Bordeaux.

Foyers, or Fyers, a river of Scotland, in the county of Inverness, which rises a few m. E. of fort Augustus, and flows into Loch Ness. About 2 m. before its entrance into the lake is the Fall of Floyers, one of the highest in the world, being 207 feet in height, in one unbroken stream.

Foyle, a river of Ireland, formed by the conflux of the Fin and the Mourne, at Lifford, in the county of Donegal. It passes by St. Johnstown and Londonderry, and 4 m. below expands into a bay, called Lough Foyle, of an oval form, 14 m. long and 8 broad, which communicates with the ocean by a short and narrow strait.

Fraga, a town of Spain, in Arragon, strong by situation, having the river Cinca before it, whose high banks are difficult of access, and at its back a hill, which cannot easily be approached with cannon. Alphonso VII., king of Arragon was killed here by the Moors, in 1134, when he besieged this town. It is 63 m. E. S. E. of Saragossa.

Fragos, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, 7 m. S. W. of Santarem.

Framingham, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 20 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 2,213.

Framingham, a town of Suffolk, Eng. It has the remains of a castle. To this place the princess Mary retired, when lady Jane Grey was proclaimed queen; and here she found that powerful support, which soon seated her on the throne. It is 30 m. E. of Bury, and 87 N. E. of London.

FrancaVilla, a town of Naples, in Terra di Otranto, with a trade in oil, cotton stockings, and snuff, 15 m. E. N. E. of Taranto.

FrancaVilli, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, on the river Sino, 20 m. W. S. W. of Trusi.

France, a country of Europe, extending in its extreme limits from the village of Peats de Mello, at the foot of the Eastern Pyrenees, in the lat. of 42. 25., in nearly a perpendicular line to Dunkirk, in the lat. of 51. 2. N.; this line gives a distance of 517 geographical, 593 British statute m.; the most important extreme point on the W. is Brest, in the long. of 4. 29. W., and 48. 23. of N. lat., and on the E. Strasburg in the long. of 7. 45. E. and lat. of 48. 35.; the distance between those two points is 12. 14. of W. long., which in the mean lat. of 48. 29. is equal to 490 geographical, or 576 British statute m., but a line exceeding this by about 40 m. might be drawn in this direction within the French territory, from Point Ras, 23 m. S. of Brest, to the extreme eastern limit, 45 m. S. by E. of Strasburg; the mean line, however, from N. to S. does not exceed 470, and from W. to E. 420 British statute m. This limit gives a superficies of 197,400 sq. m., equal to 126,336,000 British statute acres; a report made to the French government in 1817 computed the superficies to be equal to 128 millions of acres, of which about 92 millions were in a state of cultivation, and about 36 millions of acres reported as unproductive, and unfit for cultivation.

This fine territory is bounded from Dunkirk to the Rhine, in the lat. of 59. N. a distance of 290 m. in a direction E. S. E. of Netherlands and the Prussian provinces of the Rhine; about 100 m. of this frontier nearest to Dunkirk is an open plain without any natural barrier; further S. the inroad is more or less impeded by forests. From the lat. of 49. the Rhine in a direction S. by W. for about 110 m. divides France from the territory of the grand duke of Baden; from the lat. of 47. 40. to 43. 42. it is divided from Switzerland, Savoy, and Piedmont, by collateral ridges of the Alpine mountains; the S. E. extremity is bounded by the little river Var which divides France from the county of Nice. The meridional distance from this point to the eastern extremity of the Pyrenees is 220 statute m., but the indentations of the Mediterranean sea, give an extent of sea-coast on that side of France, near to, if not exceeding 300 m. The Pyrenean mountains in a direction W. by N. for 250 m. next form the southern boundary of France, dividing it from the Iberian peninsula of Spain and Portugal; the little river Bidassoa forms the boundary at the S. W. extremity, and W. from the mouth of this river in the lat. of 43. 22. and 1. 47. of W. long. to the isle of Ushant, in the lat. of 48. 28. and 5. 3. of W. long. France is bounded by the Atlantic Ocean; and N. W. from the Isle of Ushant to Dunkirk by the English channel. The meridional distance from the Bidassoa to Ushant is 390 m., and from Ushant to Dunkirk 350 m., but the indentations of the sea will give about 500 m. of coast on each side of the isle of Ushant, and with the S. E. boundary on the Mediterranean an aggregate extent of sea-coast of about 1,300 m., and a circumference of about 2,200 m. The sea-ports are Dunkirk, Calais, Boulogne, Dieppe, Fecamp, Havre, Caen, Cherburgh, St. Malo and Morlaix, on the coast of the English channel; Brest, Quimper, L' Orient, Nantes, Rochelle, Rochefort, Bordeaux, and Bayonne, on the coast of the Bay of Biscay or Atlantic Ocean, and Marseilles and Toulon in the Mediterranean; Cherburg, Brest, Rochefort, and Toulon are the chief stations of the French national marine.

Every part of France is intersected by rivers flowing in all directions. Taking them in geographical order from the N. the first entitled to notice are the Moselle and the Meuse, both of which rise in the N. E. part of France, and take circuitous courses northerly into the Netherlands, the former falling into the Rhine, and the latter into the N. Sea. The Somme is an inconsiderable river running W. N. W. into the English channel. The next in order and importance is the Seine which also runs in a W. N. W. direction into the English channel, being joined in its course by the Marne, Aube, and the Oise, on the N., and by the Yonne and the Eure on the S. The Orne, and two or three other rivers of inferior note also fall into the English channel. The noblest river in all France is the Loire, which rises in the S. and flows in a direction N. by W. for about 250 m., when it takes a direction nearly due W. for about 250 m. more, falling into the Atlantic Ocean. It receives in its course numerous tributary streams, the most considerable of which, are the Allier, running parallel with it from the S. for about 180 m., and the Cher, Indre, Creuce, Vienne, and Sevre, all from the S., and from the N. it receives the Lower Loire, Sarthe, Mayenne, and a few others of a smaller size. In the S. the united streams of the Lot, the Tarn, and Garonne, with several others of inferior note, form the Gironde which falls into the Bay of Biscay, being joined from the E. below Bordeaux by the Dordogne and Ille. Between the Loire and the Gironde the Charente, and between the Gironde and the Pyrenees the Adour, each with numerous tributary streams also fall into the Bay of Biscay. The Rhone rising near Mount St. Gothard in Switzerland, after forming the lake of Geneva it enters France on the S. E., and after a course of about 80 m. to Lyons, first S. and then W. it takes a course nearly due S. from Lyons, for about 150 m. falling into the Mediterranean; being joined at Lyons by the Saone from the N., and below Lyons from the E. by the Isere, the Drome, and the Durance. The Seine is united with the Loire by a canal as is the Garonne with the Mediterranean sea.

Since the revolution which commenced in 1789, France has been divided into 86 departments, each department into 3 to 6 arrondissements, the total being 368, the arrondissements into 2,669 cantons, and the cantons into 38,990 communes. According to censuses of the population taken in 1789, the numbers were 26,300,000, and in 1820, 30,451, 187; this number, taken in reference to the extent of surface over which it is spread, renders France, relatively, more than one-third less populous than England and Wales.

With the exception of the S. E. departments bordering on the Alpine territories of Switzerland, Savoy, and Piedmont which are elevated, France may be regarded as a level, rather than a mountainous country, and in many respects, alike in a geographical, political, and social sense, as bearing a similar relation to Europe that the fine and fertile plains and people of China do to Asia. Over all the S. E. part of the country the vine, almond, olive, and mulberry, luxuriate and bring forth fruit in the highest degree of perfection, and the vine and a variety of delicious fruits flourish over the greater part of the country, to the 49th degree of lat

Wild animals are not numerous in France, from the want of large forests and extensive mountains. The black and brown bears are found among the Pyrenees and the lynx among the Alps. The badger digs its den in the remotest woods, and the mole is abundant in the most fruitful fields. The forests of the Vosges and the woods upon the Moselle afford a shelter to several species of squirrels. And the Siberian flying squirrel, which issues from its retreat in the night and springs from branch to branch is not uncommon among the Alps. The hamster rat is one of the most pernicious of the tribes in existence. He makes extraordinary ravages among the crops and will sometimes amass in his den an hundred pounds of grain. All the large forests are inhabited by the wolf, the most destructive of the carnivorous animals in France.

Almost every species of bird common to Europe is found here. The flamingoes from Africa appear in flocks on the shores of the Mediterranean. The becafcicos or fig-peckers, so much esteemed by the picture are abundant in the south. That fine songster, the nightingale, is by no means rare. Larks are so abundant that the markets are often stocked with them for food, and the business of taking them with bird-lime affords employment to great numbers of people. The red partridge is common in the central and western departments, and the grey in the southern. Woodcocks and snipes frequent the woods and marshes. The ring ouzel is a bird of passage and feeds upon insects and berries, but is particularly fond of the grapes of this country. The goldfinch, the linnet and the bulfinch may be added to the list of singing birds. Of hawks there is a variety, and among them may be mentioned the goshawk who is of a slender and elegant figure and very destructive to small game. This bird is also found in Germany and occasionally in Great Britain.

The N. and N. W. departments are productive in every kind of grain, pulse and legumes; manufactures of silk, wool, linens, leather, and metals, are carried on over all parts of the country, and since the termination of the war in 1814, the cotton manufacture has been progressively increasing, and is now carried on to a great extent. In addition to these internal resources, France exclusively enjoys the abundant produce of the islands of Martinique and Guadalupe in the West Indies; she also holds in colonial possession Cayenne in South America; Goree and Senegal on the coast of Africa; and the isle of Bourbon in the Indian Ocean; and draws considerable supplies of produce from Brazil, the United States of America, parts beyond the Cape of Good Hope, the Levant, and other parts of the world, in exchange for her surplus produce of wines, brandy, silks, and various manufactures. Exempt from all those extremes of climate which in several parts of the world militate against physical exertion, as well as vegetation, France may be considered as possessing within itself all the means of commanding a higher degree of human enjoyment than can be obtained in any other part of Europe, and equal to what can be obtained in any other part of the globe.

For centuries prior to the Christian era, this part of Europe appears to have been inhabited by a numerous and hardy race of people, those occupying the interior being denominated Celts. The first important notice which history furnishes of them is in 225 B. C. when the Gauls who inhabited part of Piedmont and the north of Italy, invited the people then occupying the banks of the Rhone to aid them in repelling the aggressions of the Romans; and from thus being brought in contact with that powerful and enlightened people, they acquired the name of Transalpine Gauls, in reference to their territory lying W. of the Alps, and in contradistinction to the ancient Gauls, who were designated the Cisalpines. In 106 B. C. the Cimbr and Teutones from the north of Germany marched through Transalpine Gaul into Spain, ravaging the country on their way, but being driven back by the Celtiberians, they divided their forces with the view of penetrating into Italy in two directions: the Teutones directed their course to the S. E. when they were opposed by Marius, between the mouths of the Rhone and the Durance, and experienced a complete defeat, losing 200,000 men on the field of battle, and 80,000 more taken prisoners. From this period the Romans extended their arms and their arts over the greater part of the country, and in 59 B. C. the Roman senate conferred on Julius Cæsar the government of all Transalpine Gaul for five years; two years after this, the whole western coast from the Seine to the Loire became effectually subdued to Roman control, and in five years more, by awarding honorary distinctions to the principal cities, and distributing bribes to the leading chiefs, the whole country became reconciled to the Roman government. It was afterwards divided into 17 military divisions.

As the power of the Romans declined, Transalpine Gaul again became exposed to the inroad of the different tribes on the N. E. In the year 406, a tribe of Burgundians from the banks of the Vistula crossed the Rhine and took possession of that part of the country, afterwards named Burgundy, and in 420 another tribe from Franconia, under the command of Pharamond entered from the N. E. From 450 to 452 it was ravaged by the Huns under Attila, who on laying siege to Orleans was brought to battle by Meroveus, who defeated Attila with a loss of 200,000 men. In 482 Clovis, a Franconian and descendant of Meroveus, possessed himself of all the places in Transalpine Gaul, previously held by the Romans, and in 492 marrying Clotilda, daughter of Chilperic, king of the Burgundians, became king of the whole country now called France. Clotilda at the time of her marriage had embraced Christianity, and in 496 Clovis initiated himself in its mysteries through the means of St. Remi, and was baptized at Rheims on Christmas eve of that year: hence the custom of the coronation at Rheims of the kings of France through a period of more than 1,300 years. Clovis was the first of a race of 17 kings who reigned over France in regular succession, denominated the Merovingian race, in reference to their descent from Meroveus. In 732 France was ravaged by the Saracens under the command of Abdalrahman, when Eudes, duke of Aquitain, implored the assistance of Charles Martel, duke of Austrasia who brought Abdalrahman to battle between Tours and Poitiers, and defeated him, as history informs us, with the loss of 375,000 men, Abdalrahman himself being slain on the field of battle. In 737 the crown of France devolved to Charles Martel, whose manly spirit, however, disdained regal parade. He ruled France for four years under the title of duke; he died in 741, and was succeeded by an imbecile named Childeric, whose authority in 752 was superseded by Pepin, and this person became the first of a race of 13 kings denominated Carlovingians. Pepin died in 768, and was succeeded by Charlemagne the renowned, crowned emperor of the Romans, or of the West, at Rome, in 800. On the death of Louis V. in 936, after a reign of one year, the crown of France descended to Charles, an uncle of Louis, but in consequence of his having vassalated himself to the emperor Otho III. he was precluded from its accession, and the crown was conferred by election on Hugh Capet, who became the first of another race of 14 kings termed the Capetian. Charles IV. the last of the Capets in regular succession dying in 1334, without male issue, the crown devolved on Philip of Valois, who was the first of 7 kings of that race. In 1498 it devolved on the duke of Orleans, who became Louis XII. and was the first of another race of 6 kings. On the death of Henry III. in 1589, the succession was again broken, when the crown devolved on Henry of Bourbon, in whose line it continued until the decapitation of Louis XVI. on the 21st of January, 1793.

For some centuries antecedent to this period, France had been divided into 32 provinces of very unequal extent, each with a distinct local administration. The period of their formation does not appear. At the time the Romans first entered France, it was divided into four great parts, viz. Narbonensis, comprising the S. E., Aquitain the S. W., Celtica the interior, and Gallia Belgica the N. The division into 17 provinces took place under Augustus, the first emperor of Rome, and some of the Roman names continued as late as the 13th century, John, king of England, in the preamble to Magna Charta, being styled duke of Normandy and Aquitain. Austrasia, over which Charles Martel presided in the 8th century, appears to have comprised part of the N. E. of France, and what now forms part of the Prussian Provinces of the Rhine. Subsequent to the period of the accession of Clovis in 481, the country appears to have been exposed to a continuity of internal dissensions; and when these had subsided, the vain glory which France acquired under Charlemagne, increased the jealousy of the neighbouring powers, and excited external broils. In 912 the N. W. coast was invaded by a northern tribe called Normans who retained possession of that part of the country afterwards called Normandy; and in 1060, William the duke of this province, invaded, conquered, and became king of England. This event subsequently led to violent contests between England and France. Louis VII., in 1137, embarked in the crusading mania of that period, and in 1334 on Charles IV., the last of the Capets, dying without male issue, Edward III. of England, set up his claim to the French crown. The battles of Cressy and Poitiers in 1346 and 1355 resulted from this pretension. At the battle of Poitiers, John, king of France was taken prisoner, but afterwards ransomed for 3,000,000 crowns of gold, equal to £1,500,000. A respite from external war followed this negotiation, but internal broils again ensued, and in 1415 Henry V. king of England, availed himself of prevailing dissensions to renew the claim of Edward to the French crown, and on the 25th of October of that year, the French forces experienced a decisive defeat at Agincourt. Henry followed up his victory by the capture of several of the most important towns in Normandy, and in 1420 the succession to the crown was ceded to him by treaty. In 1422 he assumed the regency of France; but he dying at Vienne on the 30th of August of that year, his brother succeeded him in the regency during the minority of his son Henry VI. who was crowned king of France at Paris, on the 7th of December 1431. The English influence had, however, previously experienced a considerable check, by the singular and daring exploits of Jeanne of Arc, celebrated as the maid of Orleans, and by 1451, Calais was the only place in France held by the English. Her kings, however, retained the title of king of France until the peace of Amiens, in 1801-2. After having succeeded in driving the English from the French territory, France embroiled herself in the contentions of her northern and eastern neighbours; but a general peace pervaded all Europe during the latter part of the 16th century, by the treaty of Cambray in 1559. The restless spirit of the French government during the reigns of Francis II., Charles IX., and Henry III. the three last kings of the Orleans race, directed their wantonness and cruelty against their own protestant subjects. This persecution was allayed for a time by Henry IV. the first of the Bourbons, who ascended the throne in 1589, under whose conciliatory policy, the interests of France became more consolidated than at any former period. Henry, however, was assassinated by a fanatic in 1610, when fresh disorder ensued, and France again was seen involved in all the contentions of the European states, and of England with her American colonies, which took place in the interval of that period.

It was immediately after the general peace of Europe in 1763, when the English American colonies obtained an honorable independence, that the triple oppression of the crown, the nobles, and the clergy became intolerable to the French people.

The finances became extricably embarrassed, and the States General or assembly of the representatives of the people according to an ancient but disused custom, were called together in 1789. From the consideration of fiscal affairs they were led to the discussion of political rights and theories of government. The revolution followed, and its events form the most tragic and bloody page in all modern history. This occurrence involved France in a war with almost all Europe, and her efforts single handed against this tremendous odds excited the astonishment of the world. Among those who contributed more especially to the celerity of the French armies, was a young officer, Napoleon Bonaparte, who, on his return to Paris, after his successful campaign in Italy, was intrusted with the command of a vast armament to the shores of Egypt, and when he returned in 1799 was mainly instrumental in forming a new constitution under a Triumvirate consulate, senate and legislative body, in which he himself was appointed one of the consuls. In October, 1801, a peace was signed with England, which proved, however, of short duration. War was renewed in 1803, when Bonaparte was appointed Consul for life, with power to nominate his successor; this, however, fell short of his ambition, and in May of the following year he was proclaimed Emperor of France. On the 1st of October, 1805, he again headed a powerful army against the German States; detached the minor powers from the Germanic confederacy, and united them to his own interest, under the new title of the Confederation of the Rhine. In 1808, he marched an army of 80,000 men into Spain, and placed one of his brothers on the throne of that country; another brother he had caused to be crowned king of Holland; another king of Westphalia, and a brother-in-law king of Naples. The whole of the Netherlands he had annexed to France, in 16 departments; and on the king of Holland resigning his crown in 1809, the whole of that country, with the coast of Germany, as far as the Elbe; the states of the papal church, and the greater part of the north of Italy, were also decreed integral parts of the French empire, in 28 additional departments.

The emperor of Austria, imagining that the division of the French forces into Spain afforded him an opportunity of avenging the repeated defeats he had sustained, provoked a new contest in 1809, when Napoleon again took the field against the Austrians, and on the 5th of July completely defeated them. A treaty of peace followed, in which the daughter of the emperor of Austria was ceded in marriage to the conqueror of her father's capital. The birth of a son in 1811 seemed for a time to render permanent the fortunes of Napoleon and his family; but an ill-fated ambition led him, in 1812, to march an army of 300,000 men into Russia. After repeated and severe conflicts he reached Moscow, the ancient capital of that empire, on the 14th of September. By the order of the governor, this city was secretly set on fire, and the desolation by which Napoleon found himself surrounded induced him to withdraw his forces. They were overtaken with snow storms before they could reach the frontiers, whilst the Russians on their rear subjected them to continued disasters; and in the end destroyed the finest army which ever assembled in Europe. In the mean time the French troops in the peninsula were exposed to frequent defeats; and, by 1814, Napoleon and his troops had not only been driven within their own frontier, but a united Russian, Prussian, and Austrian army entered France from the N. E., the British, Spanish, and Portuguese armies entered it from the S. W., and Napoleon, seeing the tide of fortune completely set against him, immediately abdicated the sceptre. The island of Elba was assigned to him as a residence in full sovereignty for life, with an income of about £200,000 per annum. On the 3rd of May, 1814, Louis XVIII., who had been exiled in England during the consular and imperial dynasty, arrived in Paris to resume the throne of his ancestors. On the 5th of March, 1815, Napoleon secretly landed at Frejus, and marched without interruption to Paris, from which Louis fled at midnight on the 20th. Napoleon arrived the same evening; on the 27th the national council annulled his abdication, and called upon him to resume his imperial functions. On the 29th he abolished the African slave trade; on the 12th of June he left Paris, to take the command of an army on the N. E. frontier, but, after a whole day's severe fighting, on the 18th his line was broken, his troops thrown into confusion, and the palm of victory left with the allies, who marched again upon Paris, which they reached on the 6th of July. Napoleon again abdicated the imperial sceptre, and on the 29th of June quitted Paris never to return. Louis again resumed the sovereignty on the 18th of July; on the 25th of the same month Napoleon surrendered to the commander of a British ship of war, and was afterwards carried to the island of St. Helena, in the Atlantic Ocean, where he died on the 5th of May, 1821.

Louis XVIII. died in September 1824, and was succeeded by his brother Charles Philip (Count d'Artois) under the title of Charles X., whose increasing infringement of the rights of the people at length aroused universal indignation, and expelled him from the throne he had so unworthily filled, and the country he had laboured to enslave. The form of government since 1814 resembled that of Britain—the power being vested in the king, the chamber of peers, and the deputies. To strengthen himself in the chamber of peers, Charles X. increased it by creations: to weaken the people he invaded the elective franchise and shackled the press. In August 1829 he dismissed M. Martignac's administration because it would not go all lengths against the people, and appointed another of ultra royalists, under his natural son Prince Polignac. The first act of the deputies, on the meeting of the chambers in March 1830, was an address praying for the dismissal of the ministers. The king answered it haughtily and dismissed the chambers. Finding that the new chamber was likely to thwart his views still more than the former, he determined to strike a decisive blow, and on Sunday, July 25, he signed three ordinances—the first abolishing the freedom of the press—the second dissolving the chamber of deputies, which had never assembled—and the third abrogating the most important rights of the elective franchise.—This, however, was the last act of his misrule. A revolution ensued. The people were victorious. The government of Charles was overturned, and himself left to drag out the remains of his days in ignominious and unpitied banishment; while the sceptre was placed in the hands of a constitutional monarch, Louis Philippe I.—formerly the duke of Orleans. This revolution has already had a powerful influence on other states, and promises to open the way to the most important changes on the continent of Europe. A distinguishing feature of the present order of government is its perfect toleration in religious matters. The religion of the sovereign and the court is the Roman Catholic, but the teachers of all other sects of Christians are now supported by government. A considerable number of priests have recently separated themselves from the Romish pale, and the number of Protestants is increasing daily.

France exhibits an imposing picture of physical, moral, and social power, which the philosopher and philanthropist will view with mingled feelings of hope and fear; with hope, that she will henceforward be as assiduous to acquire glory in pursuing the arts of peace, and the attainments of social order, as she has heretofore been in the pursuit of conquest and political aggrandisement; and with fear, lest intrigue, priestcraft, and selfish ambition should again obtain an ascendancy, and predominate over the rights and interests of the people.

It is not easy for American readers to acquire any just knowledge of the character of the French. English travellers have written much upon this nation, but they are not to be trusted. The French people in many respects occupy the first rank among the European nations. The influence of this country may be compared to that of ancient Greece over the civilized world. The French language is the language of courts and ambassadors, and almost a common medium of intercourse among the different members of the great European family. This universality of their language with the affability and agreeable manners of the people their courtesy to strangers, the concentration of men of science and literature from all quarters at their capital, no less than geographical position of the country, all combine to render France more immediately central in point of influence and example than any other nation in the world. It was a true saying of Napoleon, that a revolution in France is a revolution in Europe.

The French are slender, active, well-proportioned, and rather shorter than their neighbours. Their eyes and hair are black, and their complexion brown or sallow, which it has been thought, gave rise to the custom of painting the face among the ladies. The women in France are celebrated more for their vivacity and wit, than for personal beauty. The superior people are very attentive to the exercises of dancing, fencing, and riding, in all which they generally excel in point of gracefulness.

Nothing appears to the French more odious than uniformity, on which account the changes among them are so frequent, that it is impossible to describe any particular dress as that which is adopted as a standard. Notwithstanding the fickleness of fashion at Paris, and other large cities of the empire, the great mass of the people in distant provinces, always faithful to ancient manners, smile, under the enormously large hat, at the new modes which rise and fall almost every day among their more polished compatriots.

Paris sets the fashions of all Europe, and an immense trade in articles of dress and new patterns is carried on by tailors, mantua-makers, and milliners. Every week has its new female fashions, and every month its new male fashions; all say they, for the good of trade.

Brutal battles, quarrels, and noisy drunken fellows, are nuisances seldom met with. The lower class of people behave to each other with a surprising degree of civility. The unhappy females who roam the streets at nights, are neither obtrusive, rude, nor riotous. At the theatres, the tranquillity of the audience is seldom interrupted: people go for the wise purpose of being pleased, and with the good-humoured disposition to be satisfied. These places of amusement are, doubtless, much indebted for their tranquillity to the national sobriety of the French.

Politeness and good manners may be traced, though in different portions, through every rank. This however, does not form a more remarkable and distinguishing feature in the French national character, than the vivacity, impetuosity, and fickleness, for which the ancient, as well as the modern inhabitants of Paris, have been noted.

Sunday is but slightly observed in France, at any season; and very slightly indeed in harvest. Some go to church for about an hour; but, before and after no great marks of Sabbath are perceptible. This is to be regretted: a day of rest is at least an excellent political regulation; good for man and beast; but in France all the theatres and places of amusement are open, and more frequented than on any other day in the week.

The scrupulous honesty of the lower and middling classes in restoring any lost property to its owner, is worthy of particular remark. The postilions, coachmen, servants, &c. may generally be trusted with confidence. The tradesmen also, though they ask more than they mean to take for their goods, would cheerfully and unasked, restore to you your purse, umbrella, cane, or any thing you might have left in their shop by accident, and this, if not reclaimed for a considerable time.

The temperate mode of life pursued by the French, their geographical position and agricultural pursuits, exempt them from any great variety and severity of disease. The fact is exem plified not less in the happy constitution of the people, than in the advanced age at which the majority of those persons die in France, whom it is an object to record, from the abilities of the individual, or the rank which he may have held in society. "He was only 56 or 60," is a common formula of French biography. The Cardinal de Fleury died at 90; the President d'Henault at 96; Crebillon, the son, at 70; Condamine at 74; Voltaire at 84; the Marquis du Deffand at 84. Men of 70 and 80 have usually as much life and playfulness in France, as their grand-children.

France, Isle of, a late province of France, so called, because it was bounded by the rivers Seine, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Ourque. It now forms the four departments of Oise; Seine; and Oise; Seine and Marne; Seine, and Paris.

France, Isle of, or Mauritius, an island in the Indian ocean, 400 m. E. of Madagascar. It was discovered by the Portuguese; but the first who settled here were the Dutch, in 1598. They called it Mauritius, in honor of the prince Maurice, their stadholder; but, on their acquisition of the Cape of Good Hope, they deserted it; and it continued unsettled till the French landed here in 1720, and gave it the name of one of the finest provinces in France. It is 150 m. in circumference. The climate is healthy; but the soil not very fertile. There are many mountains, some of which are so high, that their tops are covered with snow; they produce the best ebony in the world. The valleys are well watered with rivers, and are made very productive by cultivation, of which sugar is the principal object. The town and harbour, called Port Louis, are strongly fortified; but in the hurricane months the harbour cannot afford shelter for more than eight vessels. Here are large store-houses, and every thing necessary for the equipment of fleets. This island was taken by the British in 1801, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris, in 1814. In 1819 the pestilential cholera was introduced into this island from India and carried off 7,000 of the inhabitants. According to an account presented by the colonial department to the British parliament, in the session of 1825, the island was divided into 8 districts, containing a pop. of 87,503, m the proportion of 65,769 slaves, 13,475 free blacks, and 10,359 whites, exclusive of 1,310 troops. Port Louis on the N. W. coast of the island, is in lat. 20. 10. N. and 57. 29 of E. long. See Bourbon.

Francestown, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H., 60 m. from Boston. Pop. 1,540.

Franche Comte, a late province of France, bounded on the N. by Lorraine, E. by Alsace and Switzerland, W. by Burgundy, and S. by Bresse. It is 125 m. long and 80 broad, and abounds in corn, wine, cattle, horses, mines of iron, copper, and lead. It now forms the three departments of Doubs, Jura, and Upper Saone.

Franchemont, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, 12 m. S. E. of Liege.

Franciade. See Denis, St.

Francis, a village of St. Genevieve Co. Missouri.

Francis, St., a tributary stream of the great river Mississippi, rising in the state of Missouri, in the lat. of 37. 45. N., running parallel with the Mississippi on the W., at the distance of about 40 m. and enters it after a course of about 220 m., 45 m. above the entrance of the Arkansas.

Francis, St., a river of Lower Canada, rising in the lake Memphramagog, which spreads into the state of Vermont. The St. Francis, after a course of about 200 m. falls into St. Lawrence, about midway between Montreal and Quebec, and will probably some future day, be united by a canal with the Connecticut.

Francis, St., a river of Brazil, which rises W. of the Brazilian Andes, in the province of Minas Geraes, in the lat. of 20. S., runs N. through the province of Bahia, to the frontier of Pernambuco, when it takes a course E. by S., dividing that province from Bahia, and after a course of near 1,000 m. falls into the Atlantic ocean, in the lat. of 11. 20. S. It has a number of towns and settlements, chiefly on its head waters.

Francisco, St., a seaport of New Albion, and ital of a jurisdiction of its name, with a citadel. 1807. 122. S. W., lat. 28. 18. N.

* * * There are a number of other rivers, bays, towns, and settlements, in different parts of America, named after St. Francis by the Spaniards, Portuguese, and French.

François, a village of Wayne Co. Missouri.

François, Cape, now called Cape Haytien, the principal seaport and city of what was formerly the French part of St. Domingo. It is seated on the N. coast of the island, in the lat. of 19. 46. N. and 72. 15. of W. long. Before the sanguinary revolt of the negroes in 1793, it contained 8 to 900 houses of stone or brick, and 8,000 free inhabitants, exclusive of about 12,000 slaves: but in 1793, the whole of the white inhabitants, who could not effect their escape, were massacred by the blacks. It was named Cape Henry by Christophe in 1811, and during his reign it was deemed the principal port of the island, though inferior to Port au Prince in commercial importance. Its quota of the contribution towards the 30 millions of dollars be paid to France in ten years, from the 1st of January, 1827, as an indemnity for the sacrifice of their plantations by the revolt in 1793, is 208,451 dollars annually. It is 84 m. due N. of Port au Prince, and 134 W., 30 degrees N. of the city of St. Domingo. The harbour is secure and commodious, and the environs rich in tropical productions.

Franconia, one of the ten circles into which the German Empire was formerly divided, lying between the lat. of 48. 45. and 50. 55. N. It is bounded on the N. by Upper Saxony, E. by Bohemia and the palatinate of Bavaria, S. by Suabia and W. by the circles of the Rhine. The middle is fertile in corn, wine, and fruits; but the borders are full of woods and barren mountains. The Franks, who conquered France, in the early part of the 15th century, came from this province, and gave their name to that country. It comprises about 11,000 sq. m. and was formerly divided into 2 principalities, 3 bishoprics, 7 counties, and 3 lordships; but at the general partitioning of this part of Europe, after the peace of Paris in 1814, the greater part of Franconia was assigned to Bavaria, and the remainder to Wurtemberg, Baden, Hesse, and Saxe Coburg. The river Main, which falls into the Rhine, intersects it from E. to W., the Rednitz from S. to N., falling into the Mayne, and the Altmuhl, falling into the Danube, intersects the S. E. Nuremberg was considered the capital.

Francker, a town of Holland, in Friesland, with a castle and a university. The public buildings and palaces are magnificent, and it has 2 navigable canals, communicating with the Zuyder Zee and Leewarden, it is 5 m. E. of Harlingen. Pop about 4,000.

Franknau, a town of Germany, in Upper Hesse, 26 m. S. W. of Cassel.

Frankenburg, another town in Hesse, 5 m. W. S. W. of Franckenau.

Franconia, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H. 140 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 443. There are two iron manufactories in this town, consisting of blast furnaces, air furnaces, forges and trip hammers. The ore is taken from a mountain 3 m. from the furnace, and is the richest in the U. States, yielding from 56 to 63 per cent, and the mine is inexhaustible; 15 tons of iron are made in a week. There is a mineral spring 2 m. from the furnace, and in the neighbourhood are other iron works. The Profile Mountain in this town is a curiosity, being a rugged peak, 1,000 feet high, with a front of solid rock, representing in a side view a profile of the human face, every feature of which is conspicuous. Franconia is also the name of a township in Montgomery Co. Pa.

Frankenburg, a town in Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a considerable manufacture of woolen stuffs, 7 m. N. N. E. of Chemnitz.

Frankenthal, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. It has rich manufactures of stuffs, silks, cloths, &c., and a canal to the river Rhine. It was taken by the French in 1793, and retaken by the allies in 1794. It is seated 2 m. W. of the Rhine, and 7 S. of Worms.

Frankenhausen, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with some extensive salt-works; situate on a branch of the Wipper, 26 m. N. of Erfurt. Pop. about 3,000.

Frankenstein, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, 9 m. S. E. of Kayserslautern.

Frankenstein, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Munsterberg, on the river Bautze, 13 m. W. S. W. of Munsterberg.

Frankford, towns in Sussex Co. N. J., Phila. Co. Pa., Green Brier and Hampshire Cos. Va.

Frankfort, p.t. Waldo Co. Me. on the Penobscot. Pop. 2,457. Also a p.t. Herkimer Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,620. Also a p.t. Franklin Co. Illinois, 45 m. N. W. Shawneetown. Also villages and towns in Beaver Co. Pa., Morgan Co. Va., and Guernsey Co. Ohio.

Frankfort on the Maine, a fortified city of Germany, in the circle of the Rhine. It is divided by the river Maine, 25 m. above its entrance into the Rhine, into two parts, which communicate by means of a stone bridge; the larger part, on the N. side is called Frankfort, and the smaller Sachsenhausen. It contains several palaces and courts belonging to princes and counts; and here the kings of the Romans have generally been elected and crowned. The chief structure is the town-house, in which is preserved the golden bull, the origin of the fundamental laws of the empire. All religions are tolerated at Frankfort, under certain restrictions; but Lutheranism is the established faith; though the principal church is in the possession of the Roman Catholics. The Jews, 8 to 9,000 in number, were formerly confined to a particular corner of the city; but since 1796, they have resided indiscriminately in all parts. Frankfort is one of the most considerable trading places in Europe, and has two great fairs every year. It was taken in 1759, by the French, who evacuated it in 1763. It was several times taken and retaken by the French and Austrians, in the war of 1793—1814. Since the peace of the latter year, it has been declared the permanent seat of the Germanic diet; and as such most of the European states have a minister resident here. It was the birth place of Goethe; and also of the family of the Rothschilds, who, during the war between 1807 and 1815 and ten years subsequent thereto, became the greatest money jobbers in Europe. Frankfort is in lat. 50. 7. N. and S. 32. of E. long. Pop. about 40,000.

Frankfort on the Oder, a town of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, with a famous university and a noble academy. It has three great fairs, and the exclusive right of navigation up the Oder to Breslau. Here are two suburbs called Lebus and Guben, and a bridge over the Oder. In 1759, it was taken by the Russians and Austrians, and in 1806, it fell into the hands of the French; but fell to Prussia on the retreat of the French army from Moscow in 1812. It is 45 m. E. by S. of Berlin, and 72 S. of Stettin. Pop. about 12,000.

Frankfort, the chief town of Franklin county, Kentucky, and seat of the legislative assembly of the state. It is regularly laid out, and stands on the E. bank of the Kentucky, 60 m. from its conflux with the Ohio, and 415 m. W. by S. of Washington. Pop. 1,987.

Friendly Islands, a group of islands in the South Pacific ocean, so named by Cook, in 1773, on account of the friendship that appeared to subsist among the inhabitants, and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, a Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1653, and gave the name of New Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Cook explored the whole cluster, which he found to consist of more than 20 islands, the principal of which are Tongataboo, or Amsterdam; Eaooew or Middleburg; Annamooka, or Rotterdam; Ha-pae, and Lefooga. The first, which is the largest, lies in 174. 46. W. long., and 21. 9. S. lat. The general appearance of these islands, conveys an idea of the most exuberant fertility the surface at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are very large, particularly the tall cocoa, palm, and species of fig with narrow-pointed leaves. On closer examination, they are almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest productions of nature; such as bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees, plantains, yams, sugar-canes, and a fruit like a nectarine. The stock of quadrupeds are scanty; but they received from Cook some valuable additions, both to the animal and vegetable kingdom. Their domestic fowls are as large as those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and paroquets of various sorts which furnish the red feathers so much esteemed in the Society isles. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter for an endless variety of shell-fish. These islands are all inhabited by a race of people, who cultivate the earth with great industry. Nature, assisted by a little art, appears no where in greater splendour. Agriculture, architecture, boat-building and fishing, are the employments of the men; and to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth.

An old castle which commands the road stands on the top of a steep black rock, called the Loo Rock, surrounded by the sea at high water; there are also three other forts, and several batteries. The streets are narrow and dirty, though streams of water run through them. The houses are built of freestone, or of bricks; but they are dark, and only a few of the best are provided with glass windows; all the others have a kind of lattice-work in their stead, which hang on hinges. The beams and roof of the cathedral are of cedar; but the chief curiosity here is a chamber in the Franciscan convent, the walls and ceiling of which are covered with human skulls and thigh bones, said to be the relics of holy men who have died on the island. The town contains about 11,000 inhabitants. Long. 17. 6. E., lat. 32. 38. N.

Fundy, a bay of North America, between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, remarkable for its tides, which rise from the height of 30 to 60 feet, and flow rapidly. It extends about 200 m. in a E. N. E. direction; and with Vert bay, which pushes into the land in a N. W. direction from Northumberland strait, forms an isthmus of only 12 m. wide, which unites Nova Scotia, to New Brunswick.

Funen, an island of Denmark, 150 m. in circumference; separated from Jutland by a strait, called the Little Belt, and from Zealand, by the Great Belt. It is fertile in pasture and grain and exports to Norway, barley, oats, rye, and peas. Pop. about 130,000. Odensee on a bay at the N. end of the island, is the capital.

Funfkirchen, or Five Churches, an episcopal town of Hungary, situate in a fertile country, between the Drave and the Danube, 85 m. S. S. W. of Buda. Long. 18. 13. E., lat. 46. 12. N. Pop. about 11,500.

Fuorli, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Citeriore, 21 m. S. S. E. of Sulmona.

Furnace, p.t. Litchfield Co. Conn.

Furnes, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, seated near the German Ocean, on the canal from Bruges to Dunkirk. It was one of the barrier towns; but in 1781, emperor Joseph II. expelled the Dutch garrison. It was taken by the French, in 1793, and is 12 m. E. of Dunkirk.

Furruckabad, a town of Hindoostan, in the territory of Rohileund, capital of a small district, about 30 m. in length, on the W. bank of the Ganges, which belongs to a chief of the Patan Rohilla tribe. Holkar was defeated here by the British in 1804. It is seated on the Ganges, 70 m. E. of Agra, and 76 N. W. of Lucknow. Long. 79. 30. W., lat. 27. 28. N.

Furstenau, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Osnaburg, 13 m. S. W. of Quakenburg.

Furstenberg, a principality of Suabia, between the Black Forest and the principality of Constance. In this state the river Danube takes its rise.

Furstenberg, a town of Suabia, in the principality of the same name, with an ancient castle on a mountain, near the Danube, 27 m. E. by S. of Friburg. Long. 8. 35. E., lat. 47. 53. N.

Furstenberg, a town of Upper Saxony, in Lusatia, on the river Oder, 11 m. S. by E. of Frankfort.

Furstenberg, a town of Lower Saxony, in Mecklenburg-Strelitz, on the river Navel, 10 m. S. of Strelitz.

Furstenfeld, a town of Germany, in Stiria, with a castle, on the frontier of Hungary, 39 m. E. by S. of Graz.

Furstenwald, a town of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, seated on the Spree, 32 m. E. S. E. of Berlin.

Furstenwerder, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark, 12 m. N. W. of Prenzlau

Furth, a town and castle of Lower Bavaria, on the river Cham, 10 m. N. E. of Cham.

Furth, a town of Franconia in the principality of Anspach, seated on the Rednitz, 5 m. N. W. of Nuremberg. It is a populous place, and the seat of extensive manufactures, which the exclusive privileges of Nuremberg prevent from being carried on in that city. Pop. about 13,000.

Futcheepour, or Faitipoor, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, 24 m. W. of the city of Agra. It was a favourite place of Akbar.

Egers, a river of Scotland, in Invernesshire, which falls into the E. side of Lochness. It is celebrated for its fall, a height of 107 feet, forming one of the most romantic and interesting scenes in the world; the falls are 10 m. N. E. of Fort Augustus.

Fyne Loch, in Scotland, an inlet of the Atlantic in Argyleshire, nearly 40 m. in length. It receives and returns a tide on each side of the isle of Arran, which is opposite its entrance. It is indented with bays, and in the herring season is the resort of numerous fishing vessels.

Fyzabad, a city of Hindoostan, in the territory of Oude, of which it was once the capital. Here are the remains of a vast building, the palace of the nabob Sujah Addowlah, which, at the time of his death, is said to have contained 1,000 women and upwards of 50 of his children. The city is populous; but, since the removal of the court of Oude to Lucknow, it has greatly declined in wealth. It is seated on the Gogra, 76 m. E. of Lucknow. Long.  $\text{e. } 26^{\circ} \text{ E.}$ , lat.  $26^{\circ} 46' \text{ N.}$

GABARET, a town of France, in the department of Landes, seated on the Gelisse, 16 m. W. of Condom.

Gabel, a fortified town of Bohemia, which commands the pass into Lusatia. It is 8 m. S. of Zittau.

Gabes, or Gabs. See Cabes.

Gabian, a village of France, in the department of Herault, 9 m. N. W. of Beziers. It has a mineral spring; and near it is a rock from which issues petroleum.

Gabon, a country of Guinea, bounded on the N. by Majombo, E. by Anziko, S. by Loango, and W. by the Atlantic. It has a river of the same name, which enters the Atlantic a little N. of the equinoctial line. The chief town is Sette.

Gadamis, a town of Barbary, in Biledulgerid, capital of a country of the same name. It is 170 m. S. W. of Tripoli. Long.  $10^{\circ} 40' \text{ E.}$ , lat.  $30^{\circ} 40' \text{ N.}$

Gadbusch, a town of Lower Saxony, in Mecklenburg, near which the Swedes defeated the Danes and Saxons in 1712. It is 16 m. N. N. W. of Schwerin.

Gaeta, a strong town on the W. coast of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a fort, a citadel, and a harbour. It was taken by the Austrians in 1707, by the Spaniards in 1734, and by the French in 1806. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the gulf of Gaeta, 30 m. N. W. of Capua. Long.  $13^{\circ} 47' \text{ E.}$ , lat.  $41^{\circ} 30' \text{ N.}$

Gaibdorf, a town of Franconia, in the lordship of Linburgh, with a castle near the river Koehor, 13 m. W. of Elwangen.

Gaillac, a town of France, in the department of Tarn, celebrated for its wine. It is seated on the Tarn, which is here navigable, 10 m. S. W. of Alby. It is the seat of a prefect, and in 1825 contained 7,310 inhabitants.

Gaillon, a town of France, in the department of Eure, with a magnificent palace, belonging to the archbishop of Rouen. It is 11 m. N. E. of Evreux, and 22 S. S. E. of Rouen.

Gaines, p.t. Broome Co. Kentucky.

Gainesville, p.t. Venese Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,820.

Gainsborough, villages in Frederick Co. Va. and Jackson Co. Ten. Also a township of Lincoln Co. Upper Canada.

Gainsborough, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng. seated on the Trent, over which is a handsome stone bridge. It is a river-port of some consequence, being accessible to vessels of sufficient size to navigate the sea; and serves as a place of export and import for the N. part of the county, and for Nottinghamshire. It is 17 m. N. W. of Lincoln, and 149 N. by W. of London. Pop. in 1801, 4,506, and in 1821, 5,893.

Gainsburg, p.v. Christian Co. Ken.

Gairloch, a large bay of Scotland, on the W. coast of Ross-shire, which gives name to a tract of land near it. The fishing of cod, and other white fish, is here very considerable.

Galacz, or Gala, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia. In 1790, it was taken by the Russians, after a bloody battle. It is seated on a lake near the conflux of the Pruth with the Danube, 55 m. W. of Ismael, and 120 S. S. W. of Bender. Long.  $28^{\circ} 24' \text{ E.}$ , lat.  $45^{\circ} 24' \text{ N.}$

Galapagos, a cluster of islands, in the Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Colombia. They lie under the equator, and the centre island is in long.  $85^{\circ} 30' \text{ W.}$  They are uninhabited, but are frequently visited by the South Sea whale ships for fresh water and provisions. The largest is 60 or 70 m. long and 50 broad.

They are in general barren; but some of the highest have a stunted brushwood, and all of them are covered with the prickly pear-tree, upon which a large species of land-tortoise lives and thrives in a wonderful manner. The most accurate and full account of these curious animals is contained in a very amusing book, Delano's Voyages and Travels, printed at Boston, in 1817. Captain Delano says,—"The Terrapin, or as it is sometimes called, the Land-Tortoise, that is found at the Galapagos Islands, is by far the largest, best, and most numerous, of any place I ever visited. Some of the largest weigh three or four hundred pounds; but their common size is between fifty and one hundred pounds. Their shape is somewhat similar to that of our small land-tortoise, which is found upon the upland and is, like it, high and round on the back. They have a very long neck, which, together with their head, has a disagreeable appearance, very much resembling a large serpent. I have seen them with necks between two and three feet long, and when they saw anything that was new to them, or met each other, they would raise their heads as high as they could, their necks being nearly vertical, and advance with their mouths wide open, appearing to be the most spiteful of any reptile whatever. Sometimes two of them would come up to each other in that manner, so near as almost to touch, and stand in that position for two or three minutes, appearing so angry, that their mouths, heads, and necks appeared to quiver with passion, when, by the least touch of a stick against their necks or heads, they would shrink back in an instant, and draw their necks, heads, and legs into their shells. This is the only quick motion I ever saw them perform. I was put in the same kind of fear that is felt at the sight or near approach of a snake, at the first one I saw, which was very large. I was alone at the time, and he stretched himself as high as he could, opened his mouth, and advanced towards me. His body was raised more than a foot from the ground, his head turned forward in the manner of a snake in the act of biting, and raised two feet and a half above its body. I had a musket in my hand at the time, and when he advanced near enough to reach him with it, I held the muzzle out so that he hit his neck against it, at the touch of which he dropt himself upon the ground, and instantly secured all his limbs within his shell. They are perfectly harmless, as much so as any animal I know of, notwithstanding their threatening appearance. They have no teeth, and of course they cannot bite very hard. They take their food into their mouths by the assistance of the sharp edge of the upper and under jaw, which shut together, one a little within the other, so as to nip grass, or any flowers, berries, or shrubbery, the only food they eat. Those who have seen the elephant, have seen the exact resemblance of the leg and foot of a terrapin. I have thought that I could discover some faint resemblance to that animal in sagacity. They are very prudent in taking care of themselves and their eggs, and in the manner of securing them in their nests; and I have observed on board my own ship, as well as others, that they can easily be taught to go to any place on the deck, which may be wished for them to be constantly kept in. The method to effect this is, by whipping them with a small line when they are out of place, and to take them up and carry them to the place assigned for them; which, being repeated a few times, will bring them into the practice of going themselves, by being whipped when they are out of their place. They can be taught to eat on board a ship, as well as a sheep, or a goat; and will live for a long time, if there is proper food provided for them. This I always took care to do, when in a place where I could procure it. The most suitable to take on board a ship, is prickly pear-trees; the trunk of which is a soft, pithy substance, of a sweetish taste, and full of juice. Sometimes I procured grass for them. Either of these being strewed on the quarter-deck, the pear-tree being cut fine, would immediately entice them to come from all parts of the deck to it; and they would eat in their way, as well as any domestic animal. I have known them live several months without food; but they always, in that case, grow lighter, and their fat diminishes, as common sense teaches, notwithstanding some writers have asserted to the contrary. Their flesh, without exception, is of as sweet and pleasant a flavour as any that I ever eat. It was common to take out of one of them, ten or twelve pounds of fat, when they were opened, besides what was necessary to cook them with. This was as yellow as our best butter, and of a sweeter flavour than hog's lard. They are the slowest in their motions of any animal I ever saw, except the sloth. They are remarkable for their strength; one of them would bear a man's weight on his back and walk with him. I have seen them at one or two other places only. One instance was, those brought from Madagascar to the Isle of France; but they were far inferior in size, had longer legs, and were much more ugly in their looks, than those of the Galapagos Islands.

Galashiels, a town of Scotland, in Selkirkshire with a manufacture of woolen cloth, known by the name of Galashiels Gray. It is seated on the Gala, near its conflux with the Tweed, 5 m. N. of Selkirk.

Galbally, a village of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, 23 m. S. E. of Limerick. Pop 412.

Galen, a township of Seneca Co. N. Y.

Galicia, a late province in the S. W. part of Poland, lying between the lat. 48. and 51. N. and 19. and 26. of E. long. It is bounded on the S. in a direction W. by N. by the Carpathian mountains, which divides it from Hungary; the W. end jets upon Silesia, the Vistula river forms part of its northern, and the Bug part of its eastern boundary; the S. E. extremity is divided by the Bukowine district from Moldavia, and the Dneister river intersects the S. E. part. This territory was forcibly seized by the Austrians in 1772, and incorporated into the Austrian dominions, under the appellation of the kingdom of Galicia and Lodomeria. The mountainous parts possess fine pasture; the plains are mostly sandy but abound in forests, and are fertile in corn. The principal articles of traffic are cattle, hides, wax, and honey; the country also contains mines of copper, lead, iron, and salt, of which the latter are the most valuable. Its limits comprise upward of 32,900 sq. m., the pop. about 3,750,000. It is divided into East Galicia and West Galicia, of which the capitals are Lemberg and Cracoy.

Galicia, a province of Spain, forming the N. W. extremity of the Peninsula, bounded on the N. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E. by Asturias and Leon, on the S. by the Portuguese province of Tras-os-Montes, and on the S. W. by the river Minho, which divides it from the Portuguese province of Entre Douro e Minho. Its extreme length from the mouth of the Minho river in 41. 52., to Cape Ortegal, the extreme northern limit of Spain in 42. 46. N., is 133 statute m., and its extreme width from the frontier of Leon to Cape Fimisterre, the extreme western limit of Spain in the lat. of 42. 56. N., and 9. 17. of W. long, is about 120 m.; but the mean length and breadth does not much, if at all, exceed 100 m.: its area therefore comprises about 10,000 sq. m.: the pop. in 1810 amounted to 1,142,630. It is one of the most mountainous districts in Spain, yielding abundance of fine timber, and various minerals. The whole extent of its coast is indented with fine bays and harbours. Ferrol, 25 m. S. S. W. of Cape Ortegal, is one of the principal stations of the Spanish national marine the port of Corunna is on the S. W. side of the same bay, in which the harbour of Ferrol is situated: the most important harbour on the W. coast is Vigo bay, about 50 m. S. of Cape Finisterre, and a few m. N. of the mouth of the Minho. Santiago, or St. Jago de Compostella, 35 m. S. of Corunna, and 300 N. W. of Madrid, is the capital of the province; the other principal towns are Mondoneda and Betanzos in the N. E., Lugo 35 m. E. of Santiago, Orense on the S., and Ciudad Tuy on the N. bank of the Minho, and Bayona on a southern inlet of Vigo bay.

Gabitsch, a town of Russia, in the government of Kostroma, on the S. side of a lake of its name, 56 m. E. N. E. of Kostroma. Long. 42. 54. E., lat. 57. 56. N.

Gall, St. a small but populous canton of Switzerland, the E. end bordering on a lake of Constance, between the cantons of Thurgau, and Appenzel. Its population in 1825, amounted to 134, 000, its quota of troops 2,630.

Gall, St. or St. Gallen, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of St. Gall. It has a rich abbey, whose abbot formerly possessed the sovereignty of the town. The town is entirely protestant; and the subjects of the abbot whose territory is distinct, are mostly catholics. The abbey is situated close to the town; and in its library are many curious manuscripts. The town has an extensive trade, arising chiefly from its linen and cotton manufactures and bleaching grounds. It is seated in a narrow valley, on two small streams, 35 m. E. of Zurich. Long. 9. 18. E., lat. 47. 21. N. Pop. about 10,000.

Galla, an extensive territory of Africa, comprising all the S. part of Abyssinia; the limits on the S. and W. are very undefined: the inhabitants are among the rudest and uncivilized of any in Africa.

Gallam, a town of Negroland, capital of a kingdom of the same name, on the river Senegal. The French built a fort here, which was ceded to the English in 1763. During the American war it was taken by the French, but restored in 1783. Long. 10. 0. W., lat. 14. 35. N.

Gallatin, a county of Kentucky, bounded on the N. for about 35 miles by the Ohio river, which divides it from the state of Indiana. Pop. 6,650. Port William, on the east bank of the Kentucky river at its entrance into the Ohio, 45 m. N. N. W. of Frankfort, is the chief town.

Gallatin, is also the name of another county in the state of Illinois. Pop. 7,407. It is celebrated for its salt springs, from which vast quantities of salt are made. Equality is the chief town.

Gallatin, a township in Columbia Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,588. Also villages in Sumner Co. Ten. and Copiah Co. Mississippi.

Gallatin's River, one of the head water streams of the Missouri rising in the lat. of 44. N. and 110. 5. of W. long.; upwards of 3,000 miles by the course of the river, above the entrance of the Missouri into the Mississippi.

Gallia, a county on the S. E. border of the state of Ohio, bounded by the Ohio river, where it receives the great Kanawha from Virginia. Pop. 9,733. Gallipolis, on the Ohio is the chief town.

Galle, or Point de Galle, a sea-port on the S. coast of Ceylon, in a rich and beautiful district, with a strong fort and a secure harbour. It is populous, and in point of trade ranks next to Colombo. The chief branch of its traffic consists in the exportation of fish to the continent; but a great part of the products of the island are also shipped here for Europe. It is 85 m. S. by E. of Colombo. Long. 80. 10. E., lat. 6. 0. N.

Gallipoli, a strait between European and Asiatic Turkey, the ancient Hellespont. It forms the communication between the Archipelago and the sea of Marmora, and is defended at the S. W. entrance by two castles. It is here 2 m. over, and is 33 m. long. See Dardanelles.

Gallipoli, a town of European Turkey, which gives name to the preceding strait, is seated near its opening into the sea of Marmora. It is the residence of a pacha, and the see of a Greek bishop. It contains about 10,000 Turks, 3,500 Greeks, beside a great number of Jews. It is an open place, with no other defence than a sorry square castle. It was the first place in Europe possessed by the Turks; 100 m. S. W. of Constantinople. Long. 26. 59. E., lat. 40. 26. N.

Gallipoli, a sea-port of Naples, in Terra di Otranto, and a bishop's see. This place is a great mart for olive oil, and has a manufacture of muslins. It is seated on a rocky island, on the E. shore of the bay of Tarento, and joined to the main land by a bridge, protected by a fort, 23 m. W. of Otranto. Long. 18. 5. E., lat. 40. 20. N. Pop. about 9,000.

Gallipolis, p.v. Gallia Co. Ohio, on the Ohio river.

Galloway, a district of Scotland, now divided into East and West Galloway, or Kirkcudbright shire, and Wigtownshire. It was famous for a particular breed of small horses, called galloways.

Galloway, Mull of, the extreme S. W. point of Scotland, in the lat. of 59. 33. N., and 4. 50. of W. long. It forms the W. point of entrance to Luce bay, and the E. point of entrance to the North Channel, between the Irish Sea, and the Atlantic Ocean.

Galloway, New, a borough of Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire, on the river Ken, 13 m. N. of Kirkcudbright, and 80 S. W. of Edinburgh. Pop. in 1821, 941.

Galmier, St. a town of France, in the department of Loire; with a medicinal spring of a vinous taste, 18 m. E. of Montbrison.

Galston, a populous village of Ayrshire, Scotland, seated on the banks of the river Irvine, 3 m. S. S. E. of Kilmarnock.

Galum, p.v. Jackson Co. Illinois.

Galwey, a maritime county, in the province of Connaught, on the W. coast of Ireland, being about 100 m. in extreme length from E. to W. the W. part projecting into the Atlantic Ocean, is a mountainous and dreary district, but the inland part is in general fertile both in grain and pasture; next to Cork it is the largest county in Ireland, comprising 989,950 acres, and in 1821 contained a pop. of 337,374. It is bounded on the E. by the river Suck, which divides it from Roscommon, and the Shannon on the S. E. divides it from Tipperary, lake Corrib divides the W. from the E. part of the county; beside the county town of the same name, the other principal towns are Tuam, Athenry, and Loughrea.

Galwey, the chief town of the preceding county, is seated on the banks, of the outlet of lake Corrib into Galway bay, 126 m. due W. of Dublin. It was formerly surrounded by strong walls; the streets are large and straight, and the houses are generally well built of stone. The harbour is defended by a fort. Here is a coarse woolen and linen manufacture, and a considerable trade in kelp. The salmon and herring fishery is also considerable. It is divided into 3 parishes, and is a county of itself, having a separate jurisdiction. The principal church, which its collegiate, is a spacious gothic edifice; it has several catholic establishments of friars and nuns, a county infirmary, exchange, and several other public buildings. Pop. in 1820, 27,775.

Galwey Bay, extends about 20 m. from W. to E., and is from 7 to 20 m. wide; the South Arran Isles stretch across the entrance.

Galwey, p.t. Saratoga Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,710.

Gambia, a noble river in Africa, falling into the Atlantic Ocean by several channels between the lat. of 12. and 13. 45. N. Cape St. Mary, the S. point of entrance to the main channel, is in the lat. of 13. 8. N.; and 16. 33. of W. long. The banks for about 100 m. from the mouth are low and swampy, but higher up, the river flows through a delightfully fertile country, interspersed with numerous towns and villages. At a distance of about 400 m. from its mouth, the navigation is impeded by falls, and above them but little is known of its course.

Gambon. See Gombon.

Gana, Ganara. See Ghana.

Ganah, a town of the empire of Cassina, in the interior of North Africa, 280 m. N. by E. of Agades. Long. 14. 30. E., lat. 24. 40. N.

Gandersheim, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, with a celebrated convent, 17 m. S. W. of Goslar.

Gandia, a town of Spain, in Valencia, with a small university; seated on a river, near its entrance into the gulf of Valencia, 32 m. S. E. of Valencia, and 45 N. by E. of Alicante. Pop. about 6,000.

Gandicotta, or Wandicotta, a town and fortress of Hindocstan, in the circar of Cuddapa, near which is a diamond mine. It is seated on a lofty mountain, by the river Pennar, 33 m. W. N. W. of Cuddapa.

Gangapatnam, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, at the mouth of the Pannar, 94 m. N. of Madras. Long. 80. 12. E., lat. 14. 24. N.

Gangea, or Garja, a town of Persia, in the province of Eviron, 105 m. S. by E. of Tefflis. Long. 45. 50. E., lat. 41. 10. N.

Ganges, a celebrated river of Asia, which has its source in two springs, on the W. side of Mt. Kentaiffe, in Tibet, in the lat. of 34. N., and 82. of E. long. The 2 streams take a W. direction for 300 m. when meeting the ridge of Himmaleh, they turn S., unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges, from the Hindoo word Ganga, which signifies a river; a term given it by way of eminence. This great body of water now forces a passage through the ridge of Himmaleh at the distance of 400 m. below the place of its first approach, and rushing through a cavern, precipitates itself into a vast basin, at the higher foot of the mountain. The Ganges thus appears, to incurious spectators, to have its source from this chain of mountains. Superstition has given to the mouth of the cavern the form of the head of a cow; an animal held by the Hindoos in great veneration; and it is therefore called the Gangotri, or the Cow's Mouth. From this place it takes a S. E. direction through the country of Srinagur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes from this mountainous tract in which it has wandered 800 m. From Hurdwar, where it gushes through an opening in the mountains, and enters Hindoostan, it flows 1,200 m. with a smooth navigable stream, through delightful plains, to the bay of Bengal, which it enters by several mouths, that form an extensive delta, in the lat. of 22. N., and between 88. and 91. of E. long. In its course through these plains, it receives 11 rivers, some of them larger and none smaller than the Thames, besides many of inferior note; the principal of which are the Gogra, Cossy, and the Burampooter from the N., and the Jumna, Soane, and Dummooda from the S. In the annual inundation of this river, which on an average rises 31 feet, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 m. in width. The Ganges is, in every respect, one of the most beneficial rivers in the world; diffusing plenty immediately by means of its living productions; and by enriching the lands, affording an easy conveyance for the production of its borders, and giving employment to many thousand boatmen. It is no wonder, therefore, that the Hindoos regard this river as a kind of deity, that they hold its waters in high veneration, and that it is visited annually by a prodigious number of pilgrims from all parts of Hindoostan. See Hoogly.

Gangotri, a town of the country of Srinagur, seated on the Ganges, where that river rushes through a cavern of the Himmaleh mountains, 170 m. N. N. W. of Srinagur. Long. 76. 35. E., lat. 38. 8. N.

Gangpour, a town of Hindoostan, in Orissa, capital of a circar of its name. It is 50 m. N. N. E. of Sumbulpour, and 160 N. W. of Cuttack. Long. 84. 10. E., lat. 22. 2. N.

Ganjam, a town of Hindoostan, in the circar of Cicaole, on the bay of Bengal, at the mouth of a river which is rarely navigable, near the S. end of lake Chilca, 110 m. N. E. of Cicaole. Long. 85. 20. E., lat. 19. 22. N.

Gannat, a town of France, in the department of Allier, 30 m. S. of Moulins; it is the seat of a prefect.

Gap, a town of France, capital of the department of Upper Alps, and lately a bishop's see. It has a fort called Puymore, and is seated on the small river Bene, at the foot of a mountain, in which some mineral waters are found, 248 m. S. S. E. of Paris and 82 N. N. W. of Nice.

Gapsal, a town of Russia, in the government of Revel, on a small gulf of the Baltic, 36 m. W. S. W. of Revel.

Garak. See Karek.

Garde, a department of the S. of France, including part of the late province of Languedoc. It has its name from a rapid river which rises in the department of Lozere, flows S. E. through this department, and enters the Rhone, above Beaucaire. It is bounded on the E. by the Rhone; the S. point jets upon the Mediterranean; it partakes, however, more of the character of an interior than a maritime district. It is rich in mines of lead, calamine, antimony, manganese, gypsum, &c. The vine and olive, and especially the latter, flourish luxuriantly.

Garda, a town of Italy, in the Veronese, seated on the E. shore of a lake of its name, 17 m. N. W. of Verona.

Garda, Lake of, the largest lake in Italy, lying between the territories of Verono and Brescia. It is 30 m. long, and 20 where broadest; but not above four towards its northern extremity, which enters the principality of Trent; its outlet is by the Mincio, which runs past Mantua into the Po.

Gardefan, or Guardafui, a cape in the Indian Ocean, the most easterly point of Africa. Long. 51. 10. E., lat. 11. 40. N.

Gardeleben, a town of Brandenburg, in the Old

Mark, with manufactures of cloth, and a trade in beer, seated on the river Boise, 15 m. W. of Stendal.

Gardiner, p. t. Kennebec Co. Me. on the W. bank of the Kennebec River, 4 m. S. Hallowell. Pop. 2,030. This is a flourishing town with considerable trade in lumber and manufactories of cotton and iron. It has a fine gothic church built of granite; the handsomest specimen of architecture in the state.

Gardner, p. t. Worcester Co. Mass. Pop. 1,023.

Gardner's Island, lies in Gardner's Bay at the E. end of Long Island, N. Y. It is about 4 m. long and is a part of the township of East Hampton.

Gargnano, a town of the Bresciano, seated on the W. shore of lake Garda, 26 m. N. E. of Brescia.

Garland, t. Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 621.

Garmonth, a town of Scotland, in Murrayshire, at the mouth of the Spey, with a good harbour. Great quantities of ship-timber are floating down the river to the town, and many small vessels are built here. Wool is also a considerable article of commerce. It is 8 m. E. of Elgin.

Garonne, a river of France, which rises in the Pyrenees, and flows N. N. E. to Toulouse, and from thence N. W. past Valence, Agen, Marmande, and Bordeaux, into the bay of Biscay, receiving in its course from the E. the Tarn, Lot, Vezere, and Dordogne, from whence it is called the Gironde, and is united with the Mediterranean by a canal from Toulouse, called the canal of Languedoc.

Garonne, Upper, a department of the S. of France, containing part of the late province of Languedoc. The S. extends to the Pyrenees, and it is intersected its whole extent from S. to N. by the Garonne. It is fertile both in tillage and pasture; the vine is also cultivated to a great extent. It is divided into four arrondissements, of which Toulouse (the capital) Villefranche, and St. Gaudens are the chief towns.

Garvard, a county of Kentucky. Pop. 11,870. Lancaster is the chief town.

Garrettsville, p. v. Otsego Co. N. Y.

Garsis, a town of the kingdom of Fez, surrounded by walls, and the houses are built with blackstone. It stands in a fertile country, on the Mulu, 56 m. S. E. of Melilla.

Garstang, a parish and corporate town in Lancashire, Eng. Here are the ruins of Greenhough castle; and in the neighbourhood are several cotton works. The town is seated on the river Wyre, 10 m. S. of Lancaster, and 229 N. N. W. of London.

Gartz, a town of Hither Pomerania, seated on the Oder, 13 m. S. by W. of Stettin.

Gascony, a late province of France, bounded on the W. by the bay of Biscay, N. by Guienne, E. by Languedoc, and S. by the Pyrenees. The inhabitants are of a lively disposition, famous for boasting of their exploits, which has occasioned the name of Gasconade to be given to all bragging stories. This province, with Armagnac, now forms the departments of Landes, Gers, Upper Pyrenees, and parts of the Upper Garonne, and Arriege.

Gaspe, an extensive district of Lower Canada, lying between the river St. Lawrence on the N., and bay of Chaleur on the S., bounded on the E. by the gulf of St. Lawrence; it is at present but thinly inhabited; the population is, however, progressively increasing along the shore of the bay of Chaleur, which supplies abundance of fine tin-ber. The bay of Gaspe it at the eastern extremity of the district.

Gastein, a town of Bavaria, in the duchy of Salzburg, near the frontier of Carinthia, celebrated for its warm baths, and mines of lead, iron, and gold. It is 45 m. S. of Salzburg.

Gato, Cape, a promontory of Spain, on the coast of Granada, consisting of an enormous rock of a singular nature and appearance, 24 m. in circuit. Long. 2. 22. W., lat. 36. 43. N.

Gathouse, a town of Scotland, in Kirkeudbrightshire, near the mouth of the river Fleet. Here are considerable cotton works, and an extensive tannery. It is 9 m. N. W. of Kirkeudbrightshire.

Gates, a township of Monroe Co. N. Y. Pop. 7,484.

Gates, a frontier county of North Carolina, bordering on the Great Dismal Swamp, and bounded on the W. by the Chowan river; it comprises about 200 sq. m. Pop. 7,866.

Gateshead, a town in the county of Durham, Eng. seated on the Tyne, over which is a handsome bridge to Newcastle. It appears like a suburb to Newcastle, and is celebrated for its grindstones, which are exported to all parts of the world. It is 13 m. N. of Durham, and 269 N. by W. of London. Pop. in 1801, 8,597, and in 1821 11,767, chiefly employed in the coal trade.

Gatton, a borough in Surrey, Eng. It is 2 m. N. E. of Ryegate, and 19 S. by W. of London. In 1621 it had only 22 houses, chiefly cottages, inhabited by 135 persons; it nevertheless returns two members to parliament.

Gaudens, St. a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne, seated on the Garonne, 13 m. E. N. E. of St. Bertrand; it is the seat of a prefect.

Gavi, a town of the territory of Genoa, an important frontier place toward Montserrat and the Milanese; seated on the Lemo, 22 m. N. W. of Genoa.

Guar, or Zouf, a city of Usbec Tartary, capital of the province of Guar; seated on the river Zouf, 120 m. S. by W. of Balk. Long. 64. 40. W., lat. 35. 5. N.

Gauts. See Ghauts.

Gaza, a town of Syria, in Palastine, 2 m. from the Mediterranean, with a harbour and a castle. It is now very small; but, from the appearance of the ruins, it was formerly a considerable place. Here are manufactures of cotton; but the principal commerce is furnished by the caravans between Egypt and Syria. It stands in a fertile country, 50 m. S. W. of Jerusalem. Long. 34. 45. E., lat. 31. 28. N.

Gazypoore, capital of a fertile and populous district of Hindoostan, seated on the N. bank of the Ganges, 45 m. N. E. of Benares.

Gearon, or Jaron, a town of Persia, in Farsistan, in whose territory the best dates of Persia are produced. It is 80 m. S. by E. of Shiras. Long. 51. 17. E., lat. 28. 15. N.

Geauga, a county in the N. E. of Ohio; the N. end borders on lake Erie; it comprises about 600 sq. m. Pop. 15,813. Chardon, in the centre of the county, is the chief town.

Geddes, p. v. Onondaga Co. N. Y.

Gefle, a sea-port of Sweden, capital of Gestrucia, seated on an arm of the gulf of Bothnia, which divides the town, and forms two islands. The exports are principally iron, pitch, tar and deals. It is 90 m. N. N. W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 20. E., lat. 60. 40. N.

Gchol, or Zehol, a town of Chinese Tartary, with a large palace, and a magnificent temple of Budha. Here the emperor of China received the British embassy in 1793. It is 136 m. N. of Peking.

Gelderland, one of the provinces of Holland, and the largest of them all. It lies between the Zuyder Zee, the provinces of Holland, Utrecht, and Overijssel, the principality of Munster, the duchy of Cleves, and Dutch Brabant; and is divided into three quarters or counties, called Nimeguen, Arnheim, and Zutphen. from the principal towns. It is fertile in fruit and corn; and, in many parts, abounds in wood.

Gelderland, Upper, a territory of the Netherlands, lying in detached parts, on both sides the river Meuse, divided into Austrian, Dutch, and Prussian Gelderland. The Austrian part includes Ruremonde, and its dependencies; the Dutch comprehends the lordships of Venlo and Stevenswert; and the Prussian contains the capital, Gueldres, and its district, which is reckoned as a part of the circle of Westphalia; the Austrian and Dutch part, at the peace of 1814, were included in the kingdom of the Netherlands, and the remainder assigned to Prussia.

Gelders, a town of the Netherlands, and the capital of Prussian Gelderland. Here is a palace, the residence of the former dukes. It was taken in 1702, by the king of Prussia; and in 1713, the town and its district was ceded by France to that prince, in exchange for the principality of Orange. In 1757 it surrendered to the French, who restored it in 1764, after demolishing the fortifications; and in 1794, it again surrendered to them; and, at the peace of 1814, was assigned to Prussia. It is 20 m. S. S. E. of Cleves. Long. 6. 16. E., lat. 51. 31. N.

*Gelnhause*n, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, with a castle, seated on the Kintzig, 18 m. N. E. of Hanau.

Gemappes, a village of Hainault in the Netherlands, near the Scheldt, 2 m. from Mons, famous for a victory gained by the French republicans under Dumourier, over the Austrians, in 1792.

Gembloux, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, with an ancient abbey, seated on the Orneau, 22 m. S. E. of Brussels, on the road to Namur.

Geminiano, St. a town of Tuscany, in the Florentino, seated on a mountain, in which is a mine of vitriol, 25 m. S. S. W. of Florence.

Gemona, a town of Italy, in Friuli, near the river Tagliamento, 20 m. W. N. W. of Friuli.

Gemund, a town of Suabia, seated on the Rems, 24 m. N. by W. of Ulm, and 25 E. by S. of Stuttgart.

Gemund, a town of Germany, in the Duchy of Juliers; seated on the Roer, 24 m. S. W. of Cologne.

Gemund, a town of Upper Carinthia, with manufactures of iron and steel, 16 m. N. W. of Villach.

Gemunden, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Wurtzburg, on the river Maine, 22 m. N. of Wurtzburg.

Gemunden, a town of Austria, famous for its salt-works; seated at the N. end of a lake of the same name, on the river Traun, the outlet of the lake, 40 m. S. S. W. of Lintz, on the Danube.

Genap, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, with an ancient castle, seated on the Dyle, 15 m. S. E. of Brussels.

Genesee, a river of the United States, which rises on the N. border of Pennsylvania, and runs N. N. E. through the state of New York into Lake Ontario. It has three falls, which furnish excellent mill-seats; one of them at Rochester is 90 feet perpendicular. On its borders are the Genesee flats, 20 m. long and four broad, the soil rich and clear of trees.

Genesee, a county in the state of New York, the N. end of which borders on Lake Ontario; it comprises about 1,600 square m. and is intersected by the canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson river. The pop. which in 1810 was stated at only 12, 588, in 1830 was returned at 51,992. Batavia is the chief town.

Genesio, p.t. Livingston Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,675.

Geneva, a fortified city, capital of a territory of the same name, surrounded by the duchy of Savoy, of which it was formerly a part, and the see of a bishop, now resident at Annecy. In 1584, Geneva concluded an alliance with Zurich and Bern, by which it was an associate with Switzerland. During the greater part of the 18th century, there were frequent contests between the aristocratic and the popular parties; and the years 1768, 1782, 1789, and 1794, were distinguished by great revolutions. The last was effected entirely by the influence of the French; and not long after, this city and its territory was made a department of France, under the name of Leman; but in 1814, after the expulsion of the French, it was annexed to Switzerland. Geneva, which stands partly on a plain at the W. end of a lake, and partly on a gentle ascent, is irregularly built. It has a good arsenal, and an university founded in 1368. The houses are lofty; and many in the trading part of the city have areades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. The inhabitants, estimated at 26,000, carry on a great trade, and among others the watch-making business is particularly flourishing. The pop. of the district in 1825, was 41,560. Geneva is 40 m. N. E. of Chambery, 135 N. W. of Turin, and 256 S. E. by S. of Paris. Long. 6. 0. E., lat. 46. 12. N.

Geneva, Lake of, a large expanse of water, between Savoy and Switzerland, in a valley which separates the Alps from Mount Jura. Its length from the city of Geneva to Villeneuve, is 54 m., and the breadth in the widest part is 12. The water near Geneva is shallow; in other parts the depth is various; the greatest, yet found by sounding, is 160 fathoms. The river Rhone runs through it from the E. to the W. extremity.

Geneva, a duchy of Savoy, comprising an area of about 600 square m. bounded on the N. W. by the Rhone.

Geneva, a village in the township of Seneca, Ontario Co. N. Y. It stands on Seneca lake and is one of the neatest villages in the State. The neighborhood has a varied and pleasant scenery with many elegant country seats. The village contains 4 churches, a bank and a college. The college was founded in 1823. It has 6 instructors and a library of 1,500 volumes. It has 3 vacations of 10 weeks. Commencement is in August.

Geneva is also the name of a township in Ash-tabula Co. Ohio, and of a village in Jennings Co. Indiana.

Genetieve, St. a county in the state of Missouri, on the W. bank of the Mississippi river, comprising about 1,100 sq. m. of territory. Pop. 2,182. The St. Francis river intersects the S. W. part of the county, which contains an exceedingly rich bed of lead ore.

Gengenbach, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on a rivulet of the same name, which flows into the Kintzig, 20 m. N. of Friburg.

Genoa, a celebrated city and sea-port of Italy, distinguished for its trading importance as far back as the 11th century, about which period it began to take under its protection the towns and territory of the adjoining coast; but the most celebrated period of its history is from the close of the 13th to the middle of the 15th century, when the Genoese divided with the Venetians the exclusive commerce of Europe in the productions of Asia. Their success however in commerce and banking excited the jealousy of the Venetians, and ultimately involved them in open hostilities, and in 1746 it surrendered to the Austrian power, whose oppression of the inhabitants was such, that the latter suddenly rose and expelled their conquerors, who again besieged the city the next year, but without effect. In 1798, the French became masters of this city. In 1800, it sustained a siege by a British fleet and Austrian army till literally starved, and was evacuated by capitulation; but soon afterwards it was again delivered up to the French, on their victory at Marengo. Early in 1814, it was taken by the British, under lord Bentinck, but at the general partitioning of Europe which followed the peace of Paris, in that year, the city and territory of Genoa was assigned to the king of Sardinia, and incorporated as a state into his dominions. The harbour is commodious, protected by two moles of considerable length; the city is about 6 m. in circumference, surrounded on all sides by a strong wall, and on the land side is defended by a double fortification; most of the streets are narrow and irregular, but the Balbi, New Street, and Strada Nuovissima, are spacious and elegant. Prior to the French revolution it had upwards of 30 churches and 70 religious houses, three theatres, and several other public buildings. Many of the houses in the principal streets are adorned with marble porticos, and several of the churches are beautiful specimens of architecture, and their interior decorations exceedingly tasteful and rich. The bank of Genoa, established in 1345, considerably extended at the commencement of the following century, in 1751 became insolvent for a large amount, and in 1798 was finally abolished by Bonaparte. Although Genoa now holds an inferior rank, yet from its advantageous local position and maritime accommodation as the outport and depot for the whole of Piedmont and Sardinia, it must necessarily continue a place of considerable importance. Genoa is the see of an archbishop, and the seat of an university with a valuable library; a nautical and other public schools; has several manufactures of silk and jewellery, and is particularly distinguished for its manufacture of silk velvets. It is seated at the head of a spacious gulf of the Mediterranean, in the lat. of 44. 25. N., and 8. 58. of E. long., 80 m. in a meridional line S. E. of Turin, about the same distance S. by W. of Milan, 86 N. W. of Leghorn, 95 N. E. of Nice. Pop. 76,000. The territory which formed the republic of Genoa extends along the shore of the gulf for about 120 m.

Genoa, p.t. Cayuga County, New York. Population 2,768.

George, Fort, a fortress of Scotland, in Invernesshire, which has several handsome streets of barracks. It is seated on the point of a peninsula, forming the point of entrance into the Murray Frith, and completely commands the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. It is 10 m. N. E. of Inverness.

George, St. a small island in the Gulf of Venice, to the S. of Venice, to which it is subject. Here is a Benedictine monastery, whose church is one of the finest in Italy.

George, St. one of the Azores, which produces much wheat. In 1808 a volcano broke out here, which destroyed the town of Ursulina, several farming-houses, &c. The chief town is Vellas. Long. 23. 0. W., lat. 38. 39. N.

George del Mina, St. a fort of Guinca, on the Gold Coast, and the principal settlement of the Dutch in those parts. The town under it, called by the natives Oldenna, is very long, and pretty broad. The houses are built of stone, which is uncommon, for in other places they are composed only of clay and wood. It is 10 m. W. S. W. of Cape Coast Castle. Long. 0. 4. W., lat. 8. 46. N.

George, Fort, St. See Madras.

George, St. the largest of the Bermuda Islands. It is in the form of a hook, about 40 m. in length, but seldom 2 in breadth. It has a town of the same name, containing 500 houses built of freestone, which is the capital of all the islands. Long. 63. 35. W., lat. 32. 45. N.

George, St. the capital of the island of Grenada, formerly called Fort-Royal, which name the fort still retains. It is situate on the W. coast, not far from the S. end of the island, and has a safe and commodious harbour. Long. 61. 45. W., lat. 11. 50. N.

George's Key, St. a small island in the bay of Honduras, on the E. coast of Yucatan. It is likewise called Cassina, or Cayo Cassigo. By a convention in 1786, the English logwood-cutters were permitted, under certain restrictions, to occupy this island. Long. 88. 35. W., lat. 17. 40. N.

George, Lake, in the eastern part of the state of New York, between Lake Champlain and the Hudson. It is 31 m. long, but very narrow, never exceeding 4 m. Its waters pass by a narrow outlet into Lake Champlain. This is one of the most beautiful sheets of water in the world, being surrounded by mountains and diversified with a great number of islands. The water is deep and remarkably pure and transparent. A fish or a stone may be seen at a depth of 30 feet. The shores consist of abrupt and shelving points, and are bounded by two long ranges of mountains, sometimes rising boldly from the water and at others ascending with a gentle and graceful sweep, exhibiting naked and weather beaten cliffs, and wild forests intermixed with fine cultivated fields, lawns, and pastures. The village of Caldwell stands on the south-eastern side of the lake, and is much visited by travellers who come to enjoy the fine scenery in the neighbourhood. A steamboat plies upon the lake in summer.

The islands of the lake are said to be 365 in number. They are of all sizes and forms, and contribute greatly to the romantic beauty of its surface. Some of them are covered with trees, others are thinly wooded, and others are abrupt and craggy rocks. Diamond Island, abounds in crystals of quartz. Long Island contains 100 acres and is under cultivation. At a place called the Narrows, the lake is contracted, and its surface is covered with a most beautiful cluster of islands which extends for several miles.

These are of various sizes, but generally very small, and of little elevation. A few of them are named, as Green, Bass, Lone-tree islands. Some of them are covered with trees, others with shrubs, some show little lawns or spots of grass, heaps of barren rocks, or gently sloping shores; and most of them are ornamented with graceful pines, hemlocks, and other tall trees, collected in groups, or standing alone, and disposed with most charming variety. Sometimes an island will be observed just large enough to support a few fine trees, or perhaps a single one, while the next may appear like a solid mass of bushes and wild flowers; near at hand, perhaps, is a third, with a dark grove of pines, and a decaying old trunk in front of it; and thus, through every interval between the islands as you pass along, another and another labyrinth is opened to view, among little isolated spots of ground, divided by narrow channels, from which it seems impossible for a person who should have entered them, ever to find his way out. Some of the islands look almost like ships with their masts; and many have an air of lightness as if they were sailing upon the lake.

After passing the Narrows, the lake widens again, and the retrospect is, for several miles, through that passage, with Tongue Mountain on the west, and Black Mountain opposite, the Luzerne range appearing at a great distance between them. The mountains in view have generally rounded summits; but the sides are in many places broken by precipitous ledges. They are inhabited by wolves, deer, rattlesnakes, &c.

The lake contains abundance of the finest perch, bass and other fish; trout are found in a stream flowing into the southern part. Near the southern shore are the ruins of Fort William Henry and Fort George, celebrated in the early wars with the French.

George, St. an island of the United States, in the strait of St. Mary which forms the communication between Lake Superior and Lake Huron.

George, St. an island in the gulf of Mexico, opposite the mouth of the Apalachicola. Long. 81. 50. W., lat. 29. 30. N.

Georgeville, p.v. Franklin Co. Ohio.

Georgetown, a maritime district of South Carolina, bounded on the S. by the Santee river, which divides it from Charleston district; it has 34 m. of sea-coast, indented with several small inlets. Black River, Cedar and Lynches Creeks, the great and little Pedee, and the Waccamaw river, all unite their waters in this district, which comprises a surface of about 900 square miles, exceedingly fertile in rice and cotton. Pop. 19,943.

Georgetown, a city of the District of Columbia adjoining Washington, from which it is separated by a small creek. It stands on the east bank of the Potomac at the head of tide water. The site of the town is very pleasant, occupying a succession of hills rising gradually from the river. On a height overlooking the town stands a catholic monastery. The streets of the town are regular and the houses generally of brick. It has a considerable trade in the exportation of tobacco and flour. Pop. 8,441. A canal from the Potomac to the Ohio begins at this place. See Potomac and Ohio Canal.

Georgetown, p.t. the chief town of the district of that name in S. Carolina, stands on Winyaw Bay near the mouth of the Pedee, 13 m. from the sea; and has considerable commerce.

Georgetown is also the name of other towns and villages in different parts of the United States; namely, Lincoln Co. Me. Pop. 1,538. Madison Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,094. Mercer Co. Pa., Beaver Co. Pa., Sussex Co. Delaware, Kent Co. Maryland, Warren Co. Geo., Harrison Co. Ohio, Dearborn, Co. Ind.

Georgia, a country of Asia, called by the Persians, Cürdistan, and by the Turks, Gurtehi. It is one of the seven Caucasian nations, in the countries between the Black sea and the Caspian. and the lat. of 39. and 43. N., and comprehends the ancient Iberia and Colchis. It is bounded on the N. by Circassia, E. by Daghestan and Schirvan, S. by Armenia, and W. by Cuban, or the new Russian government of Caucasia. It is divided into 9 provinces. Of these, 5 form what is commonly called the kingdom of Georgia; and four the kingdom or principality of Imeritia. The last reigning prince, Heraclius, ceded this country to Russia on his death, which happened in 1800. The hills of Georgia are covered with forests of oak, ash, beech, chestnuts, walnuts, and elms, encircled with vines, growing perfectly wild, but producing vast quantities of grapes, from which much wine and brandy are made. Cotton grows spontaneously, as well as the finest European fruit trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The valleys afford the finest pasturage, the rivers are full of fish, the mountains abound in minerals, and the climate is healthy. The rivers of Georgia, the principal of which is the Kur, falling into the Caspian Sea, being fed by mountain torrents, are always either too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation. The Georgians are Christians of the Greek communion, and appear to have received their name from their attachment to St. George, the tutelary saint of these countries. Their dress nearly resembles that of the Cossacs; but men of rank frequently wear the habit of Persia. They usually dye their hair, beards, and nails with red. The women employ the same colour to stain the palms of their hands. On their head they wear a cap or fillet, under which their black hair falls on their forehead; behind it is braided into several tresses: their eyebrows are painted with black, in such a manner as to form one entire line and the face is coated with white and red. They are celebrated for their beauty; but their air and manners are extremely voluptuous. The Georgians have great skill in the use of the bow and are deemed excellent soldiers; but the men have no virtue, except courage; fathers sell their children, and sometimes their wives. Both sexes are addicted to drunkenness, and are particularly fond of brandy. The other inhabitants of Georgia are Tartars, Ossi, and Armenians. These last are found all over Georgia, sometimes mixed with the natives, and sometimes in villages of their own. They speak among themselves their own language, but all understand and can talk the Georgians. Besides these there are a considerable number of Jews, some having villages of their own, and others mixed with the Georgian, Armenian and Tartar inhabitants, but never with the Ossi; the aggregate number amount to 320,000. The Christians of the country in part follow the rites of the Armenian, and in part that of the Greek church; and they are represented as the most tractable Christians in the east. Teflis is the capital. See Imeritia.

Georgia, one of the United States of America, bounded N. by Tennessee and N. Carolina, E. by S. Carolina and the ocean; S. by Florida, and W. by Alabama. It lies between 30. 20. and 35. N. lat. and 81. and 86. 48. W. long. It is 300 m. in length from N. to S and 240 in breadth and contains 50,000 sq. m.

The river Savannah washes almost the whole of the eastern boundary. The Ogeechee and Altamaha have their whole course within the state; the Flint and Chatahoocnee pass out of the state to the south. There is a small mountainous tract in the north, but nearly the whole country is an unbroken level. The soil is of various qualities. A chain of islands stretching along the whole coast have a fertile soil and produce the first cotton in the world, well known by the name of Sea Island cotton. The land here and along the shore consists of marshy tracts, and swells in the surface called hammoc land. On the Florida border is the great swamp of Okefonoko, (which see.) Beyond is a belt of pine barrens interspersed with swamps. Still farther the country becomes sandy, but towards the hilly region the soil is strong and productive. There are many large forests which afford timber for exportation. In those parts which are flooded by the rivers the land is devoted to the cultivation of rice. The rice plant has a fibrous root, and puts forth stems which grow to the height of 4 and 5 feet. The leaves are long and fleshy, somewhat similar to those of the Ick. The flowers are of a purple colour and grow in clusters on the top of the stalks. In the early stages of its growth the rice fields are inundated with water.

The most profitable agricultural employment is the cultivation of cotton. Indigo was formerly produced in considerable quantities, but the culture has almost totally ceased. Slave labour is universally employed, and agriculture as a science has made very little improvement.

The climate in the southern part is hot and unhealthy. Epidemic fevers rage in the summer and autumn, rendering the country unsafe for strangers and even natives. The sea islands however are esteemed salubrious and many of the planters spend the hot season there. In the north, pine forests abound; and here the air is pure and as healthy as in any part of the United States. The heat of summer, is excessive and the annoyance from mosquitoes one of the greatest discomforts imaginable. No sleep can be enjoyed at night without the precaution of placing a mosquito net of gauze at every window. The number of frogs in the swamps and small streams is prodigious. Alligators abound in every stream of the low country. Great numbers of water fowl frequent these parts as well as the beaches and inlets of the sea-coast. The Chuck Will's Widow is one of the most common birds here, but is rarely seen north of Tennessee and Virginia. It is a solitary bird, somewhat resembling the Whip-poor-will, and is often confounded with it. Its name is derived from the notes it utters, sounding exactly like those three words. It begins its call towards evening, and continues with short interruption for several hours. In a still evening it may be heard at the distance of a mile.

Georgia is divided into 76 Counties. The capital is Milledgeville. The largest towns are Savannah and Augusta. It has a university at Athens and a school fund of 500,000 dollars. It has no manufactures. Its trade consists chiefly in the exportation of cotton and rice. The commerce of the state is chiefly carried on by northern vessels. The shipping owned in the state amounted in 1823 to 13,959 tons. The imports in 1829 were 380,293 dollars. The exports of domestic produce 4,980,642 dollars. Total exports, 4,981,376 dollars.

The legislature is called the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The Senators and Representatives are chosen in counties. The Governor is chosen by the legislature for two years. Suffrage is universal. The pop. is 516,567, of whom 217,240 are slaves. In addition to these are the Cherokee Indians, inhabiting the north-western part of the state. See Cherokees.

The Baptists are the most numerous sect in religion; they have 205 ministers. The Methodists have 64; the Presbyterians 31; the Episcopalian 4; the Christians 28 and the Catholics 3.

The first settlement in Georgia was made at Savannah in 1733, consequently it was the latest settled of all the Atlantic states. The present constitution was formed in 1798.

Georgia, or South Georgia, an island in the South Atlantic Ocean, visited by Cook in 1775. It is 64 m. long, and 30 in its greatest breadth. It abounds in bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. Here are perpendicular ice cliffs, of considerable height, like those at Spitzbergen; from which pieces were continually breaking off and floating out to sea. The valleys were covered with snow; and the only vegetation observed was bladed grass, wild burnet, and a plant, like moss, which sprung from the rocks. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast.

Georgia, Gulf of, a gulf of the North Pacific Ocean, between the continent of North America and Quadra and Vancouver Island; about 120 m. in length, from N. to S., but the breadth varies in its different parts from 6 to 20 m. It contains several clusters of islands, and branches off into a great number of canals, most of which were examined by captain Vancouver and his officers.

Gera, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia. It has a castle about a mile from the town, on a mountain in a wood, and is called Osterstein. It is seated on the Elster, 32 m. S. S. W. of Leipzig.

Gerau, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, 8 m. W. N. W. of Darmstadt.

Gerbstadt, a town of Upper Saxony, in the county of Mansfeld, Thuringia, 7 m. N. E. of Mansfeld.

Gerdaeven, a town of Prussia, defended by two castles, and seated on the Omet, near a considerable lake, 50 m. S. E. of Königsberg.

Germain, St. a borough in Cornwall, Eng. It was once the largest town in the county, and a bishop's see, but now consists chiefly of fishermen's cottages: it still returns two members to parliament. What remains of the cathedral is used as the parish church; and near it is the priory. It stands near the sea, 10 m. W. of Plymouth, and 228 W. by S. of London.

Germain, St. a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, with a magnificent palace, in which Louis XIV. was born. Here James II. found an asylum, when he fled to France. It is seated on the Seine, near a fine forest, 10 m. N. W. of Paris.

German, p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. Pop. 884. Also townships in Fayette Co. Pa., Clarke, Montgomery and Darke Cos. Ohio, and Cape Girardeau Co. Missouri.

German Flats, p.t. Herkimer Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,466.

Germanna, p.v. Orange Co. Va. on Rapid Ann river.

German Ocean, or North Sea, is the sea between the E. coast of England, from the straits of Dover to the Shetland Isles, and the coasts of Jutland and Norway, it comprises about 8 degrees of latitude and 10 of longitude.

Germano, St. a town of Piedmont, on the river Naviglio, 9 m. W. of Vercehi, on the line of the canal to Ivrea.

Germano, St. a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, at the foot of Monte Cassino, 17 m. S. S. E. of Sora.

Germantown, p.t. Columbia Co. N. Y. on the river, 12 m. below the city of Hudson. Pop. 967. Also a village in Philadelphia Co. Pa. 6 m. N. of Philadelphia. It contains Mount Airy Academy and is celebrated for a battle fought here Oct. 4, 1777. Also villages in Fauquier Co. Va., Hyde Co. N. C., Bracken Co. Ken.

Germany, an extensive country of Europe, lying between the 45th and 54th degree of N. lat., and 6 to 19. of E. long.; the mean length, however, from N. to S. does not exceed 530 British statute m. and the mean breadth 460 m., comprising an area of about 245,000 square m. It is bounded on the E. by Hungary and Poland, N. by the Baltic Sea and Denmark, W. by the Netherlands and France, and S. by Switzerland and Italy. The extreme S. point jets into the gulf of Venice. Prior to the French revolutionary war, which commenced in 1793, Germany had geographically been divided into 9 circles, politically subdivided into 206 archbishopricks, bishopricks, principalities, dukedoms, marquisates, lordships, provinces, &c. under the government of nearly as many sovereign potentates; but the whole of them formed a great confederacy, governed by political laws, at the head of which was an emperor, whose power in the collective body, or diet, was not directive but executive. The western Roman empire, which had terminated in the year 475, in the person of Augustulus, the last Roman emperor, and which was succeeded by the reign of the Huns, the Ostrogoths, and the Lombards, was revived by Charlemagne, king of France, on Christmas day, in the year 800. This prince being then at Rome, pope Leo III. crowned him emperor, in St. Peter's church; and Nicephorus, who was then emperor of the east, consented to this coronation. The French kept the empire under eight emperors, till the year 912, when Louis III., the last prince of the line of Charlemagne, died without issue male. Conrad, count of Franconia, the son-in-law of Louis, was then elected emperor. Thus the empire went to the Germans, and became elective, having been hereditary under the French emperors. The emperor was chosen by the princes, the lords, and the deputies of cities, till the year 1239, when the number of the electors was reduced to seven; one more was added in 1649, and another in 1692. these nine electors continued to the year 1798, when, in consequence of the alterations made in the constitution of the empire, under the influence of France and Russia, they became ten in number; namely, the elector and archbishop of Ratisbon, the elector and king of Bohemia, (the then emperor) the elector of Bavaria, the elector of Saxony, the elector of Brandenburg (king of Prussia) the elector of Hanover (king of England) the elector of Wurtzburg (late grand duke of Tuscany) the elector of Wurtenburg, the elector of Baden, and the elector of Hesse. On the death of Charles VI. of Austria, in 1740, an emperor was chosen from the house of Bavaria, by the name of Charles VII. On the death of this prince, in 1745, Francis, grand duke of Tuscany, was elected emperor; whose grandson, Francis II., enjoyed the dignity of emperor of Germany till 1806, when he formally resigned the title and office, transferring his title of emperor to his hereditary dominions of Austria.

At the close of the Saxon race, in 1024, the prerogatives of the emperor were very considerable; but, in 1437, they were reduced to the right of conferring all dignities and titles, except the privilege of being a state of the empire; of granting dispensations with respect to the age of majority, of erecting cities, and conferring the privilege of coining money; of calling the meetings of the diet, and presiding in them. But, after all, there was not a foot of land annexed to this title; for ever since the reign of Charles IV., the emperors depended entirely on their hereditary dominions, as the only source of their power, and even of their subsistence. To prevent the calamities of a contested election, a king of the Romans was often chosen in the lifetime of the emperor, on whose death he succeeded to the imperial dignity of course. The emperor (always elected and crowned at Frankfort on the Maine) assumed the title of august, and pretended to be successor to the emperors of Rome. Although he was chief of the empire, the supreme authority resided in the diet, which was composed of three colleges; the college of electors, the college of princes, and the college of imperial towns. The diet had the power of making peace or war, of settling general impositions, and of regulating all the important affairs of the empire; but the decisions had not the force of law till the emperor gave his consent. When a war was determined on, every prince contributed his quota of men and money, as valued in the matriculation roll; though as an elector or prince he might espouse a different side from that of the diet. All the sovereigns of Germany had and still have an absolute authority in their own dominions, and can lay taxes, levy troops, and make alliances, provided they do not prejudice the empire. They determine all civil causes definitely, unless in some particular cases in which an appeal may be made. These appeals were to two courts, called the Imperial Chamber, at Wetzlar; and the Aulic Council, at Vienna.

The three principal religions are, the Roman Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Calvinistic; but Christians of all denominations are tolerated, and there is a multitude of Jews in all the great towns. Germany is watered by numerous rivers, the three principal of which, are the Rhine, the Danube, and the Elbe; the first of these rises in Switzerland, and forms the S. W. boundary of the empire, dividing it from Switzerland and France; it afterwards intersects the N. W. part of Germany and Holland, and falls into the Meuse, near Rotterdam. The Danube rises in Suabia, the S. W. circle of the empire, and by itself and several tributary streams of inferior note, intersects a great portion of the southern part of Germany; it afterwards runs through Hungary and European Turkey, into the Black Sea. The Elbe rises near the centre of the eastern frontier, and runs in a N. W. direction into the North Sea. The Oder intersects all the N. E. part of Germany, and falls into the Baltic Sea. The Weser, the Ems, the Adige, the Drave and other small rivers are navigable, and afford admirable means for facilitating an interchange of productions from one part of the country to the other; but the Oder and the Elbe are the only two that are united by art. The mountains of the south are rich in every kind of metal and semi-metal. The forests supply abundance of the finest timber, and the vine, olive, and mulberry, only require common attention to yield fruit in abundance; while the plains of the north yield a surplus of grain and cattle for exportation, and of wool and flax to furnish materials for extensive manufactures, especially of linens, which are exported in considerable quantities to almost every part of Europe, Africa, and America.

In 1806, the Germanic confederacy was dissolved by Napoleon, and several of the minor states formed into a new confederacy under the title of the confederation of the Rhine; while Westphalia, Wurtemberg and Bavaria, were constituted new and independent kingdoms; Prussia and Austria retaining their respective hereditary dominions; but at the general pacification of Europe, in 1815, the Rhenish confederacy was dissolved, and that of Germany again re-established, with some variations and modifications. In 1825 the confederacy consisted of 35 sovereignties, exclusive of the four free towns of Hamburg, Bremen, Lubeck, and Frankfort. No people apply themselves more closely to their studies than the Germans; and the Hebrew is no where so generally learnt, or better understood. Printing is most extensively encouraged; every man of letters is an author: they multiply books without number; thousands of essays and disputations are annually published, with which they overstock the fairs of Frankfort and Leipzig; for no man can be a graduate in the university who has not published one disputation at least. The language of Germany is a dialect of the Teutonic, which succeeded that called the Celtic. The population is estimated at 30,000,000. Vienna is the principal city

Gerona, a fortified town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see; seated on the Ter, 20 m. from its entrance into the Mediterranean, and 47 N. E. of Barcelona.

Gerry, p.t. Chataugue Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,110.

Gers, an interior department in the S. W. of France: it is watered by numerous streams, running from S. to N. into the Garonne, the principal of them is the Gers, which gives name to the department. It contains a strata of pit coal, and has manufactures of wool, linen, and saltpetre; its chief vegetable productions are flax, the vine, and pears. It is divided into four other arrondissements; the chief towns of which are Condom, Lectoure, Lombez, and Mirande.

Gersau, a town of Switzerland, on the lake of Schwyz, at the foot of the Ragi, 12 m. S. W. of Schwyz.

Gertruydenburg, a fortified town of South Holland, with a good harbour and salmon fishery on a large lake, called Biesbosch. It has been often taken, the last time by the French in 1793, but soon recovered. It is 7 m. N. by E. of Breda. Long. 4. 52. E., lat. 51. 42. N.

Gerumenha, or Jurumenha, a town of Portugal, in Alemtejo, with a strong castle; seated on a hill, near the river Guadiana, 18 m. below Badajoz.

Gesecke, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Westphalia, seated on the Weyek, 11 m. W. S. W. of Paderborn.

Gessnay. See Sanen.

Gestricia, a province of Sweden, the S. part of Nordland, between Dalecarlia on the W., and the gulf of Bothnia on the E. It is 109 m. long, and 60 broad, diversified by forests, rocks, hills, and dales, lakes, and rivers; and there are numerous mines and forges. Gefle is the capital.

Gettysburg, a town of Pennsylvania, in York Co. situate at the head of Rock creek, 30 m. W. by S. of York.

Gex, a town of France, in the department of Ain, noted for excellent cheese; seated at the foot of Mount St. Claude, between the Rhone, the lake of Geneva, and Switzerland, 10 m. N. W. of Geneva. It is the seat of a prefect.

Geys, a town of the electorate of Hesse, in the principality of Fulda, seated on the Ulster, 17 m. N. E. of Fulda.

Gezan, or Ghezan, a sea-port of Arabia Felix, which has a considerable trade in senna and coffee; seated on the Red Sea, 90 m. N. W. of Loheia. Long. 43. 15. E., lat. 16. 25. N.

Gezira, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbek on the island formed by the Tigris, 70 m. N. W. of Monsul. Long. 40. 50. E., lat. 37. 16. N.

Gezula, a province of Morocco, which is very productive, and contains mines of iron and copper. The inhabitants are numerous, and considered as the most ancient people of Africa: they live in tents, are so independent that they are rather the allies than the subjects of the emperor of Morocco.

Ghana, or Gana, a city in Negroland, capital of a country of the same name, governed by a sultan. It stands on the S. side of a large lake, at its outlet, which separates the city into two parts, and soon after joins the river Niger, which is here called Neel el Abed, or Nile of the Negroes. It is 100 m. E. by S. of Cassina.

Ghauts, the name given to several groups and chains of mountains in Hindoostan. The word signifies 'passes' or 'gates'. These mountains are considered as commencing at Cape Comorin: yet the southern chain, or Malayala mountains form a separate group, terminating in the district of, Coimbatore, at the great valley in which the ferts of Palikadery and Annamaly are situated.

The Ghauts begin separately on the north of these plains, forming two branches, one running to the east, and the other to the west of north. The eastern Ghauts extend 70 m. beyond Madras, forming the boundaries of the Carnatic, and to the north of that country divide into several branches, in which the mountains are subjected to interruptions, being separated by valleys covered with thick forests. But the principal chain is divided by no hollow grounds, except narrow defiles, which are well lined with fortresses. To the natives, this chain is known by the name of Ellacooda, or the "White Mountains." It then runs along the northern margin of the Circars, forming an uninterrupted series of mountains so close as to afford only two military passes. At the place where the Ghauts separate the Circars from the province of Berar, the mountains become almost inaccessible, and there is only one passage for carriages and for horses, viz. that of Salarghaut which leads to Behar. Nothing is seen on every hand but masses of rock, rising perpendicularly to the clouds, and leaving apparently no outlet for the intimidated traveller. All the summits of this chain are composed of granite, and it every where presents one picture of total barrenness and utter nakedness. Yet large trunks of trees in a state of petrification, are found here, and most particularly in the ravines created by the torrents, where trunks, projecting from the steep sides of the rocks, sometimes serve for bridges.

The western chain of the Ghauts extends along the west coast to a distance of 70 m., and acquires a greater elevation than the eastern chain. Its height has not yet been ascertained by barometrical observations, but it is generally believed to amount to three or four thousand feet. The chain then crosses Kanara and Sunda, passes near to Goa, enters the Mahratta country, and divides into several branches. The closeness of the forests, the depth of the precipices, and the rapidity of the torrents, render these mountains very difficult to cross, and the passage is in many places, 50 or 60 m. long. They are described as containing much limestone, and some basaltic rocks, but no one has deliberately studied the position and materials of the different strata. Towards the sea-coast, the western Ghauts present a magnificent amphitheatre of rocks and verdure, enlivened with towns and villages. The highest, or at least the steepest part to the east of Surat, goes under the name of the Bala-Ghauts, which is sometimes extended to the whole of the western Ghauts, while the eastern chain, together with the intermediate plateau, is called the Paian-Ghauts.

About the sources of the river Godavery, some lower chains are sent off from the mass of the western Ghauts, pass through the interior of the peninsula, and join the mountains of Berar and Gundanwa.

The central chains which run parallel to the course of the Nerbuddah river, one on its north side, and the other on the south, generally pass under the Sanserit name of the Vindhias; the extent which this name embraces appears somewhat arbitrary to our most learned eastern geographers.

But Arrow smith more positively confines it to the mountains immediately adjoining the Nerbuddah. It is also in these central countries that the Hindoos place their Sanyah and their Sookhian mountains, though they have been mistaken for the western Ghauts.

Ghent, called by the French Gand, the chief town of East Flanders, is situate at the junction of the Scheldt and Lys. Julius Cæsar is said to have been its founder. The Vandals afterwards became its masters, and called it Vanda, or Wanda; of which its present name is by some thought to be a corruption.

This town has been the scene of some diplomatic transactions: the compact of the provinces of the Netherlands against the tyranny of Spain in 1578, called the Pacification of Ghent, was drawn up and executed here; the last treaty of peace concluded between Great Britain and America, in 1814, was signed here also. It was likewise the residence of Louis XVIII. during the period in which he was forced to quit France after the return of Bonaparte from Elba.

Ghent is situate on a beautiful plain: its area may vie in extent with that of any other city in Europe, being little less than fifteen miles in circumference; but no small portion of the enclosed space is covered with gardens, orchards, and fields of grain. Like all other towns in this flat country, it is intersected with numerous canals, crossed by three hundred bridges; some of stone, but most of wood. Their banks, being generally planted with majestic trees, afford an extensive and grateful promenade for the inhabitants. The streets are spacious; though some of the most frequented, as is the case in many old towns, are so narrow that two carriages can scarcely pass each other. There are thirteen public squares, the principal of which is ornamented with a pedestrian statue of Charles V.

The town hall is an immense pile of building, presenting an incongruous combination of various styles of architecture: one front, which is unfinished, is Gothic; another Italian; each story being supported by pillars of a different order;—the ground story Doric, the next Ionic, and the upper Corinthian. It is enriched with many valuable documents of an early period, and with some good paintings.

The structure and arrangements of the public prison or house of correction are on an excellent plan. The building is a spacious octagon, having a large court-yard in the centre, by means of which an immediate and constant communication can be easily kept up with every part. Each department branches off from this; and the prisoners are kept in separate classes, according to the nature of their crimes and the depravity of their character. In the centre of the woman's apartment is a large basin or trough for washing linen. Every prisoner is locked up at night in a separate cell, and brought out to work at a stated hour in the morning. The average number of prisoners is 1,300; the annual expenditure is 50,000 florins, or somewhat more than £4,000 sterling; therefore the cost of each prisoner to the state is less than £4 annually. This economical effect is produced by employing every convict capable of working in some species of industry. The principal portion of the profits is set apart for defraying the expenses of the establishment, and the remainder is divided into two parts; one of which is allowed to the prisoner for pocket-money, and the other forms a fund which he receives on his liberation. Near the prison is the Atelier de Beinfaisance; an institution intended to check mendicity, by supplying the paupers with work until they can provide for themselves.

The Mont de Piete is a singular establishment for lending money upon goods, on the principle of pawn-broking, but upon moderate interest. It has been found very useful, in enabling industrious persons labouring under a temporary pressure to relieve themselves, without the necessity of selling their property under very disadvantageous circumstances, or of disclosing their pecuniary difficulties.

All the public arrangements of Ghent seem to have been devised with a systematic intention of stimulating industry, correcting idleness, and encouraging habits of order and cleanliness. Three times every day, at sunrise, at noon, and in the evening, the ear of the observing traveller is struck with the tolling of a bell. Its sound serves not only as a signal to summon the workman to his appointed place of labour, but as a warning to the rest of the inhabitants not to appear in the streets at these hours; lest the progress of the former, while crowding to their occupations, should experience any obstruction. For the same reason, the drawbridges are not allowed to be then open.

The splendour of Ghent is most observable in its churches; and of these the most magnificent is that of St. Bavon. The choir is supported by pillars of pure white Italian marble, rendered more striking from the contrast of the highly-polished black marble with which all the walls of the interior are coated. The principal church is surrounded by twenty-four chapels, each adorned with some splendid work of the most admired masters. The pulpit is a piece of exquisite workmanship, forming an allegorical picture of Time contemplating Truth. The figures of angels at the foot of its staircase are objects of peculiar admiration. Beneath the present cathedral the body of the original church still remains, little injured by time, forming a subterraneous place of worship: it is now chiefly used as a school for Sunday instruction. The tower or steeple is ascended by 446 steps; and like all others in this flat country, presents an extensive view of the surrounding town and scenery. It has a remarkably fine ring of bells, which includes semitones, and is sounded by keys and levers like an organ.

One of the few monastic institutions of Belgium, exists in Ghent. It is a convent of Beguines, which escaped the effects of the emperor Joseph's reformation of the conventual societies, and still more destructive ravages of the subsequent revolution in France. Strangers are admitted to some parts of the building, and particularly the chapel, during the time of divine service.

The great provincial school or college of Ghent has long been in much repute as a place of education. On the formation of the kingdom of the Netherlands, it was advanced to the rank of a royal university. According to its present arrangements, it has nineteen professors; five of medicine, three of law, five of natural science and mathematics, and six of philosophy and literature: the number of students exceeds 400. The palace of the university, in which the lectures are delivered, is a splendid edifice. The great hall is sufficiently spacious to accommodate 1,600 persons: it is divided into two parts; one for the members of the university, the other for the accommodation of the public. Around the walls the arms of the nineteen provinces of the Netherlands are emblazoned. It is lighted by a lantern sixty feet in circumference, in the middle of the dome. From the hall the apartments for the different courses of instruction branch on each side. The cabinet of natural history is one hundred and twenty feet long, and already well furnished: that of mineralogy is one hundred and thirty feet long, and contains several thousand specimens scientifically arranged. There is also a fine dissecting room, and a cabinet of models of agricultural implements.

Between Ghent and Antwerp lies a tract of land called the Pays de Waes. It was originally a barren and shifting sand; but the persevering industry of the inhabitants has rendered it the admiration of every visitor, whether native or foreigner. It is throughout divided into small fields, each surrounded by a low quickset hedge and a deep trench. The middle of every field is elevated and the ground declines in all directions to the ditch. The object of this singular mode of husbandry is to prevent the bad effects of heavy rains, which, if they fell upon the level surface, consisting of dry porous sand, would carry down the manure through it, and render it useless; whereas the water, as it falls on the declivity glides down more gently, and does no injury. The farms are so small, and the cottages so closely intermixed, that the whole exhibits the appearance of one continued village. The interior of each dwelling presents an aspect of neatness and comfort fully corresponding with what might be expected from the exterior appearance of their farms.

Ghent is situate thirty miles S. W. of Antwerp. Lat. 51. 3. N., long. 3. 44. E. Population 78,000.

Ghent, p.v. Gallatin Co. Kentucky.

Ghergong, a city and the capital of the kingdom of Assam. It is seated on the Legoo, near its conflux with the Burrampooter, 400 m. N. E. of Calcutta. Long. 93. 36. E., lat. 25. 35. N.

Gheriah, a sea port of Hindoostan, on the coast of Concan. It was the capital of Angria, a famous piratical prince, whose fort here was taken by the English and Mahrattas, in 1756, and his whole fleet destroyed. It is 165 m. S. by E. of Bombay. Long. 73. 8. E., lat. 16. 45. N.

Ghilan, a province of Persia, on the S. W. side of the Caspian Sea, supposed to be the Hyrcania of the ancients. On the W. side are high mountains which are covered with many sorts of trees, and in the highest parts of them are deer, bears, wolves, leopards and tigers. It produces abundance of silk, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, and excellent fruit. This province was ceded to Russia, by a treaty concluded at Petersburg in 1724, but not possessed by Russia till 1780. Reshd is the capital.

Ghizni, or Gazna, a town of the country of Cabul, once the capital of a powerful empire of the same name. It is called the second Medina, from the great number of illustrious persons who have been interred here. It is 54 m. S. of Cabul. Long. 68. 20. E., lat. 33. 40. N.

Gholsonville, p.v. Brunswick Co. Va.

Ghourband, a town of the country of Cabul, 42 m. N. W. of Cabul.

Ghurka, now Aurangabad, (which see).

Gibello, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma, on the river Po, sixteen miles N. W. of Parma.

Gibraltar, a town of Spain, near a mountain of the same name in lat. 36. 6. N. Long. 5. 19. W. It is the ancient Calpe, one of the pillars of Hercules, the other being Ceuta on the African coast. It is a rocky promontory on the southern extremity of Andalusia, from 3 to 4 m. in length, and about half a m. in its utmost breadth. Steep in all parts and in some perpendicular, it seemed formed by nature for a strong hold; and since it became an English fortress, it has been rendered impregnable. The name, originally Gebel-Tarif, the rock of Tarif, is derived from Tarik or Tarif Abenzaca, general of the caliph Walid in the invasion of 711, who landed here, and conquered the town of Heraclia at the foot of the mountain. Gibraltar is joined to the main land by an isthmus on the north which is about a mile and a half in length; the northern front of the rock is almost perpendicular; the east side is full of precipices; and the south is so narrow and abrupt as to be inaccessible to any enemy at sea. The western front is also precipitous, but affords a landing place on the level tract of ground which forms the site of the town; and this part is protected by batteries and other strong works of defence. The straits to which Gibraltar gives name are supposed to commence in Spain at Cape Trafalgar, and in Africa at Cape Spartel, between which points they are 70 m. wide; and to end toward the Mediterranean, beyond Gibraltar and Ceuta; the entire length being about 100 m. and the narrowest part, about three leagues west of Gibraltar, 15 m. A strong current always runs from the ocean into the Mediterranean.

The noble bay of Gibraltar, 9 m. long and 5 broad, forms a most important naval station. On the east are the promontory and isthmus; to the south is the sea; to the west and north the main land of Spain; but the promontory wholly commands the bay.

Gibraltar was strongly fortified by the Moors after their own manner. It was taken in 1302 by Ferdinand II. of Castile; regained by the Moors in 1333; and recovered in 1462 by Henry IV. The emperor Charles V. caused the fortification to be reconstructed by two of the most eminent engineers of his time. The natural and artificial strength of the place having been thenceforth regarded as unquestionable by the other maritime powers, the Spanish government seems to have been lulled into a dangerous security respecting it; for in August, 1704, during the war of succession, when an expedition under admiral Rooke and prince George of Hesse-Darmstadt suddenly and unexpectedly appeared in the bay, this maritime strong hold was held only by a drowsy garrison of 80 men, who immediately surrendered. Philip of Anjou besieged it in October; but in the brief interval the English had so strongly fortified it on the land side, that the pass of the isthmus was called by the Spaniards the Gate of Fire. It was blockaded with 24 ships of war by admiral Poyetz, but received succours from the English and Dutch fleet under admiral Leake. The land blockade lasted until the peace of Utrecht. From that time England omitted no expense or exertion to render the place wholly impregnable. Another siege, in 1727, was frustrated by the arrival of admiral Wager with 11 sail of the line. Spain offered two millions sterling for the restitution of Gibraltar; but was obliged to resign all title and pretension to it in the treaty of Seville 1729. She immediately endeavoured to diminish its advantages and deteriorate its value as a colony and a place of commerce, by interdicting all intercourse between it and her own territory, and by strengthening the military lines of San Roque and Algeiras. But the town and garrison could easily be furnished with supplies while England retained the empire of the sea; and the rock itself had a well of fresh water, with some other resources which science and skill might daily improve. The most strenuous efforts for its recovery were made during the war of the American revolution, when its preservation depended mainly on the valour and constancy of its resident governor, general Elliot. The preparatory hostile operations were commenced in 1779, and continued during the two following years. In June, 1782, the duke de Crillon, commander of the Spanish army that had taken Minorca, arrived with reinforcements, and the French princes of the blood came to be present at the siege. Their army amounted to 30,000 men; and the conquest was to be completed by ten floating batteries, impetrable by shot or shells, and mounted with 147 brass and 150 iron guns. They were manned by criminals, who in reward for good service, were promised their liberty and yearly pensions of 200 livres each. The garrison had varied from 5,600 to 7,000 men. The most dreadful carriage was to be apprehended as the consequence of a successful assault. On the 13th of September, the floating bulwarks approached and opened their fire. General Elliot, finding ordinary means of repulse unavailing, determined to batter them with red-hot shot; and while deliberating on the means of heating the balls, a German nail-smith, named Schwankendeck, invented and constructed a furnace for the purpose. From this the artillery was so well served, that in the course of the cannonade 4,000 red-hot balls were discharged. In the afternoon, the chief battery and two floating batteries began to emit smoke: the enemy were unable to quench the fire or stop the leakage. At one o'clock in the morning, three batteries were in a blaze, and several others were seen to have taken fire. Those on board in vain signalled the Spanish fleet with rockets; no relief could be afforded to the batteries; all that could be attempted was to save the men. Twelve gun-boats from the fortress, prevented the boats of the besiegers from landing, and at the same time poured a well directed fire on the floating batteries. At day-break, those on board were seen making signals of distress and calling for help, and the besiegers hastened to their relief, amidst continually increasing danger; for the heated guns of the batteries on fire were from time to time discharging their shot, and occasional explosions of gunpowder scattered destruction around. Captain Curtis and his men, at the peril of their lives, saved 13 officers and 344 men. A grand attack on the land side was in the mean time repulsed by general Elliot; and a severe storm occurred, from which the Spanish fleet sustained great damage. Next month, an English squadron having arrived with succours, the enemy were compelled to convert the siege into a mere blockade, which terminated on the 20th January, 1783, when peace was signed at Versailles.

The town of Gibraltar, situated at the foot of the promontory, on its north-west side, suffered severely during this attack, and was rebuilt on an improved plan. The houses have flat roofs and large bow windows; they are generally painted black, to mitigate the rays of the sun, and are marked with a white stripe between each story. The principal street, about a mile in length, is full of shops; in other parts of the town the buildings are too dense, and the pop. dwelling in them is exposed to much danger in case of pestilential fever. That which raged in 1804 carried off several thousands; while the military, stationed on higher ground, were, by that advantage, and through the judicious precautions adopted by the medical staff, preserved from contagion. It has been ascertained that the fever is fostered, if not generated, during sultry weather, by the stoppage of the drains; and a proposal has been made to erect a steam-engine; which shall raise from the bay a constant stream of water, to supply all the baths and refresh every corner of the town.

The inhabitants, exceeding in number 12,000, are mostly British; though there are many Spaniards, Italians, Jews, and even Moors, occupied in commercial pursuits. Gibraltar is a general mart of merchandise from every quarter: piece goods and hardware from England; sugar, rum, coffee, from the West Indies; tobacco, rice and flour, from North America; wine, fruits, and silks from the countries and isles of the Mediterranean. The chief public buildings are the barracks, the house of the lieutenant-governor, the navy hospital, and the victualling office. The places of worship are, at the English church, a catholic chapel and three synagogues. For the use of the officers stationed on this isolated rock, there is a garrison library; and a small theatre augments the limited range of amusement which can here be generally participated. The town is fortified; but owes its chief protection to the batteries on the neighbouring heights, which sweep the isthmus and the approach from the sea. Since the siege of 1783, great sums have been expended in these works: extensive excavations have been made, to establish communication between the different posts, and enable them to be relieved without loss from an enemy's fire: the embellishments of which so rugged a spot is susceptible have not been neglected;—trees, shrubs, and flowers have been planted in various places; and roads opened in the solid rock, and made passable for carriages.

Gibraltar, a town of Colombia, in the province of Zulia, defended by some fortifications. The air is so unhealthy in the rainy season, that the town is now reduced to an insignificant hamlet.

Gibson, a county of the state of Indiana, bounded on the N. by White river, and W. by the Wabash, which divides it from the state of Illinois. The S. W. point of the county is 30 m. above the entrance of the Wabash into the Ohio. Pop. 5,417. Princeton is the capital.

Gibson, is also the name of townships in Clearfield and Susquehanna Cos. Pa.

Gibsonville, p.v. Bedford Co. Ten.

Gien, a town of France, in the department of Loire. It is seated on the N. bank of the Loire, 40 m. E. by S. of Orleans. It is the seat of a prefect.

Gingen, a town of Snabia, on the river Brentz, 18 m. N. N. E. of Ulm, now included in the kingdom of Wurtemberg.

Gierace, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, seated on a mountain, near the sea, 34 m. E. N. E. of Reggio.

Giessem, a fortified town of Germany, in Upper Hesse, with a citadel and a university. It is seated on the Lahn, 16 m. W. S. W. of Marburg. Long. 8. 43. E., lat. 50. 35. N.

Gigay, a small island, one of the Hebrides, lying on the W. coast of Scotland.

Giglio, a small island, on the coast of Tuscany with a castle, 15 m. W. S. W. of Orbitello.

Gignac, a town of France, in the department of Herault, on the river Herault, 14 m. W. of Montpellier.

Gihon. See Amu.

Gijon, or Gyon, a sea-port of Spain, in Asturias, with an ancient castle; seated on the Bay of Biscay, 18 m. N. E. of Oviedo. Long. 5. 36. W. lat. 43. 34. N.

Gilbertsville, p.v. Otsego Co. N. Y.

Gilboa, p.v. Schoharie Co. N. Y.

Gilboa, a township in Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 377
Giles, an interior county in the W. part of Virginia bounded on the E. by the great Kanawha river. It contains about 2,000 sq. m. of surface. Pop. 5,298.

Giles, another county East of Tennessee, bordering on Alabama, intersected by the Elk river, which flows S. into the Tennessee, it comprises about 600 sq. m. of surface. Pop. 18,920. Pulaski is the chief town.

Gilford, t. Strafford Co. N. H. on the S. side of L. Winnipisogee. Pop. 1,872.

Gill, p.t. Franklin Co. Mass. Pop. 864.

Gilles, St. a town of France in the department of Gard, 10 m. S. of Nismes. Pop. in 1825 5,600.

Gillingham, a town in Kent, Eng. on the E. bank of the Medway, near its entrance into the Thames, it is strongly fortified, forming the outport of the arsenal of Chatham. It is a place of considerable antiquity.

There is an extensive parish of the same name in Dorsetshire, Eng. Pop. in 1821, 2,246. The town is 4 m. N. W. of Shaftsbury.

Gilmanton, p.t. Strafford Co. N. H. on the S. E. of L. Winnipisogee. Pop. 3,816. Iron ore exists here, and there were formerly iron works. Here is also a mineral spring, potent in cutaneous and bilious diseases.

Gilolo, an island, the largest of the Moluccas. It is 130 miles from N. to S., but is intersected by several large bays; the breadth of any limb seldom exceeds 40 miles. The shores are in general low, and the interior rises in high peaks. It does not produce any fine spices, but has a great deal of rice, and abounds with oxen, buffaloes, goats, deer, and wild hogs. The sultans of Ternate and Tidore share this island between them. The natives are industrious, particularly in weaving. One of the chief towns is Tatany, on a small promontory on the eastern limb, and only accessible by ladders.

Gilsun, t. Cheshire Co. N. H. adjoining Keene. Pop. 642.

Gincont, a town of France, in the department of Gers, 16 m. E. of Auch.

Gingee, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic strong both by nature and art, being seated on a mountain, whose top is divided into 3 points, on each of which is a castle. It is 38 m. N. W. of Pondicherry. Long. 79. 35. E., lat. 12. 15. N.

Giorgiev, or Giurdessor, a town of European Turkey, in Walachia, near which the Russians gained a victory over the Turks, in 1771. It is seated on the Danube, 48 m. S. W. of Bucharest.

Giovenazzo, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, with a castle. It has high houses and towers, built of polished stone with flat roofs, which give it a singular appearance. It is seated near the sea, 10 m. N. W. of Bari.

Girardeau, Cape, a county of the state of Missouri, lying between the St. Francis and Mississippi rivers; it contains about 1,200 sq. m. of surface. Pop. 7,430. Jackson is the chief town.

Girest, a town of Persia, in Kerman, with a trade in wheat and dates, 100 m. E. by N. of Gombroon.

Girge, a town of Egypt, about 3 m. in circumference, and contains several mosques, bazars, and squares, but no marble buildings, or remains of ancient structures. It stands near the left bank of the Nile, 40 m. N. of Esne, and 200 S. of Cairo. Long. 31. 12. E., lat. 28. 35. N.

Girgenti, an episcopal town, on the S. W. coast of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, with a castle. It is part of the ancient Agrigentum, and in the vicinity are numerous remains of temples, &c.; great quantities of sulphur are exported from this place. It stands on a hill, near the river St. Blaise, 62 m. S. of Palermo. Long. 13. 38. E., lat. 37. 14. N.

Gironde, a river of France, formed by the union of the Garonne and Dordogne, 12 m. N. of Bordeaux.

Gironde, a maritime department of France, which includes part of the late province of Guienne. It lies on both sides of the Garonne, and it is the largest of the 86 departments, containing about 1,022,000 hectares; it yields abundance of wine, and is fertile in every kind of grain and cattle, whilst the rivers and coast supply abundance of fish. Its principal manufactures are in founderies, glass, earthenware, dye stuffs, liquors, (anniseed) and salt; it contains some seams of pit coal, and beds of peat. It is divided into 6 arrondissements, of which Bordeaux, (the capital,) Bazas, Blaye, Lesparre, Libourne, and Reole are the chief towns. Pop. in 1825, 522,040.

Girons, St. a town of France, in the department of Arriege, 4 m. S. by E. of St. Lizier.

Girvan, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, at the mouth of the river Girvan, which forms a tolerable harbour. It is 16 m. S. S. W. of Ayr.

Gisborough, a town in North Yorkshire, Eng. It is celebrated for being the first place where alum was made, as it was formerly for its fine abbey. It is 22 m. N. W. of Whitby.

Gisors, a town of France, in the department of Eure, seated on the Ept, 28 m. S. E. of Rouen.

Gitschin, a town of Bohemia, which suffered greatly during the long war of the Swedes in Germany. It is 22 m. S. W. of Koningsgratz.

Givet, a fortified and frontier town of France, in the department of Ardennes, divided by the Meuse, into 2 parts, Givet Saint Hilaire, and Givet Notre Dame, the former situate at the foot of a mountain close by Charlemont, and the other on the opposite side of the river. It is 15 m. N. W. of Rocroy. Pop. in 1825, 4,068.

Giula or Guliest, a strong town of Upper Hungary, on the frontiers of Transylvania and the river Keresblau, 30 m. E. of Great Waradin. Long. 20. 40 E., lat. 46. 40. N.

Giula Nuova, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, near the gulf of Venice, 13 m. N. of Atri.

Giuliani, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, on a craggy rock, 12 m. N. E. of Xacca or Siacca.

Gizeh, a fortified town of Egypt, with a palace, several mosques, a cannon foundery, and a manufacture of coarse earthen pots and tiles. A few to. to the S. W. are the largest pyramids in the country. Gizeh was taken from the French by the British in 1801. It stands on the left bank of the Nile, nearly opposite Cairo.

Gladbach, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers, with a Benedictine abbey. It has manufactures of fine strong linen, and is seated on the Ners, 18 m. N. of Juliers. Pop. about 6,000.

Glodenbach, a town of Germany, in Upper Hesse, 12 m. N. of Giessen.

Glammis, a town of Scotland, in Angusshire, with manufactures of yarn and linen cloth. Near it, on the bank of the Dean, is Glammis Castle, a large edifice, in which Malcolm II. was murdered.

Glanorganshire, the extreme S. E. county of Wales, bounded on the S. for about 50 m. by the Bristol Channel, on the E. by the county of Monmouth N. by Brecknock, and W. by Carmarthen-shire. It contains 792 sq. m. of surface, or about 506,880 acres; is divided into ten hundreds, and 124 parishes; has 1 city and 5 market-towns; and sends 2 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants in 1811 was 85,067, increased in 1821 to 101,737. On the N. side it is mountainous; but being more level on the S. side, it there bears large crops of corn and very sweet grass. Cattle abound in all parts, there being fruitful valleys among the mountains, that yield very good pasture. The quantity of butter with which it supplies the Bristol market is very considerable. In the N. part of the county are the most extensive iron works in the world, (see Merthyr Tydvill;) copper and lead also abound. (see Swansea.) The county is intersected from N. to S. by several streams of water, and by 3 canals, by which the heavy products of the mines and forges are conveyed to the coast. Cardiff, (which see), is the assize town, but Merthyr Tydvill is the most populous, and Swansea the most important town in the county; the other towns of note are Neath, Llantrissant, Cowbridge, and Landaff.

Glandfordbridge, or Brigg, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday, and a good trade in corn, coal, and timber. It is seated on the Ancholm, which is navigable for sloops to the Humber, 23 m. N. of Lincoln.

Glaris, or Glurus, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by the river Linth, Grisons, and lake of Wallenstadt, E. by the canton of Sargans, the canton of Uri, and W. by that of Schweiz. It is a mountainous country; and the chief trade is in cattle, cheese, and butter. The inhabitants, amounting to 27,000, are partly protestants, and partly catholics; and both sects live together in the greatest harmony. Glaris is surrounded by the Alps, except toward the N.; and there is no other entrance but through this opening, which lies between the lake of Wallenstadt, and the mountains separating this canton from that of Schweiz.

Glaris, a town of Switzerland, capital of the preceding canton is surrounded by mountains, and seated on the river Linth. It had manufactures of cloth, and a trade in cattle, horses, cheese, slate, and wooden ware; 32 m. S. E. of Zurich.

Glasgow, a large and populous city of Scotland, in Lanarkshire. From its extent, beauty, regularity, and modern improvements, it is undoubtedly the second if not first city in North Britain. The four principal streets, which intersect each other at right angles, divide the city nearly into four equal parts. The high church, the most magnificent gothic structure in Scotland, St. Andrew's church, St. Enoch's church, the Tron church, the college, the Tontine, and trades'-hall are some of the principal buildings in Glasgow. The town-house is an elegant building with a piazza in front; and opposite to it is the exchange, a square building, with an equestrian statue of William III. in the centre. The toll-booth, the guildhall, and the theatre are also worthy of notice. There are several charitable establishments; particularly the Merchant's Hospital, and that of the town, and a large infirmary. Here is also a monument, 145 feet high, in the green of Glasgow, to the memory of the gallant Nelson. The university, instituted in 1450, is constantly increasing in reputation. At present it consists of a chancellor, rector, dean of faculty, a principal, and 16 professors, of which one is for law, four for theology, five for the study of medicines and subjects connected therewith, and the others for the faculty of arts. It has lately been greatly enriched in the mathematical department by the library of the late celebrated Dr. Robert Simpson, author of the translation of Euclid, and has received an important addition, by a collection of rare books and manuscripts, in every department of science, but particularly in medicine, bequeathed by the late Dr. William Hunter, who has also left his extensive museum to the university of Glasgow. Besides the anatomical preparations, the museum, for which an elegant building has been erected, contains a collection of shells, corals, insects, and fossils, made by the late Dr. Fothergill, and a cabinet of medals and coins, ancient and modern, the most complete of the kind in Europe. The observatory is well fitted up, and supplied with the most improved instrument for the use of the professor of practical astronomy. But being mainly dependent on private aid for support, since the novelty of its erection has ceased, it is not maintained without difficulty. Glasgow, next to London and Liverpool, is the most commercial place in the British dominions, and in manufacturing extent and importance, it is only exceeded by Manchester and Leeds; the cotton manufacture employs about 40,000 looms, with all the attending operations of staining, dyeing, glazing, &c. &c., which support numerous iron founderies, machine makers, &c. &c.; in addition to which, it has several glass houses, sugar refineries, &c. Glasgow was originally one parish, but is now for the benefit of the poor and ease of ministers, divided into 12, with as many churches, and several chapels of ease, and numerous meeting houses for Dissenters. The population of 10 parishes within the city, in 1821, amounted to 72,765, the Barony 51,919, and Gorbals 22,359, making an aggregate population of 147,043, being 63,274 more than in 1801, and more than treble the number in 1780. The city of Glasgow is seated on the N. bank of the Clyde, the suburbs extending to the opposite side connected by three elegant bridges of stone. The river is navigable for vessels of eight feet water as far as the bridge; but larger vessels stop at Port Glasgow, or Greenock, at the mouth of the river to unload; it has also the advantage of two canals, beside the great canal that joins the Clyde to the Forth. Glasgow is 44 m. W. of Edinburgh, and 60 S. W. of Perth: the mean distance from London, is only 348 m. the route of the mail 404.

Glasgow Port. See Port Glasgow.

Glasborough, p.v. Gloucester Co. N. J.

Glastenbury, p.t. Hartford Co. Conn. Pop. 2,980.

Glastenbury, t. Bennington Co. Vt. Pop. 52.

Glastenbury, a town of Somersetshire, Eng. it is seated near a high hill, called the Tor, and famous for an abbey, that occupied an area of 60 acres, of which some considerable ruins still remain; particularly the kitchen which is the most entire, and of a very unusual contrivance. The George Inn was formerly an hospital for the accommodation of pilgrims who came to the abbey and to the thorn, which, it is pretended, was planted by Joseph of Arimathea, and blossomed on Christmas eve. It was also pretended, that the bodies of Joseph of Arimathea, of king Arthur, and of Edward the confessor were buried here. The last abbot of this place was hanged on the top of the Tor, by order of Henry VIII. for not acknowledging his supremacy; and on this hill is a tower, which serves as a landmark to seamen. Glastenbury has two churches, and a manufacture of worsted stockings. It is seated on the river Brue, 6 m. S. W. of Wells, on the road to Exeter, and 124 W. by S. of London,

Glatz, a sovereign county of Germany, lying between Silesia, Bohemia, and Moravia, surrounded by mountains. It is 40. m. long, and 25 broad; has mines of coal, copper and iron, good quarries of marble and stone, and fine springs of mineral waters. In 1742, it was ceded to the king of Prussia, by the queen of Hungary, and is now deemed a part of Silesia.

Glatz, a strong town of Silesia, capital of the county of Glatz, seated on the side of a hill, by the river Neiss. On the top of the hill is an ancient castle, and a new citadel. In 1742, the Prussians took the town by capitulation; and in 1760, the Austrians, took it by storm, but restored it in 1763. It is 60 m. S. S. W. of Breslau, and 90 E. N. E. of Prague. Long. 16. 32. E., lat. 50. 18. N.

Glauchau, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with considerable manufactures of cotton and other stuffs; seated on the Mulda, 36 m. S. by E. of Leipzig.

Glencitz, a town of Silesia, noted for the culture of hops and the weaving of cloth; 34 m. S. E. of Oppeln.

Glennuce, a town of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, with a harbour for small vessels.

Glenn, p.v. Gloucester Co. Pa.

Glenns Falls, on the Hudson 25 m. above Albany. They are a violent rapid descending 63 feet in 500. The stream is divided by the rocks into three channels. A village of the same name is situated a quarter of a mile from the falls.

Glogau, or Gross Glogau, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, which is very fertile, and produces wine. The town is well fortified, and formerly stood close by the Oder, which has since changed its course, and now flows above a m. from it. Besides the papists, there are a great number of protestants and Jews. It was taken by the king of Prussia, in 1741. It is 60 m. N. W. of Breslau. Long. 16. 14. E., lat. 51. 38. N.

Glogau Little, a town of Silesia, with a collegiate church and Minorite convent, 23 m. S. of Oppeln.

Glogme, a river of Norway, in the bishopric of Aggerhuys, which flows into the North Sea at Fredericksstadt. At least 50,000 trees are annually floated by this river to Fredericksstadt.

Glossop, a parish of Derbyshire, Eng. which contains 18 townships and hamlets: total pop. in 1821, 13,766. The township of the same name contained 1,357 inhabitants. It is 8 m. N. of Chapel-in-le-frith.

Gloucestershire, a county of England, 60 m long, and 29 broad; bounded on the W. by Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, N. by Worcestershire, E. by Warwickshire, and Oxfordshire, and S. by Wiltshire and Somersetshire. It contains 803,000 acres; is divided into 27 hundrede, and 339 parishes; has two cities and 25 market-towns; and sends 10 members to parliament. The air is sharp in the E., or hilly part, called the Coteswold; but very mild in the rich vale that occupies the centre, through which the river Severn flows. The W. part which is the smallest district, is varied by hill and dale, and is chiefly occupied by the forest of Dean. The staple commodities of the county are its woolsens and cheese. Its principal rivers are the Severn, Warwickshire Avon, Lower Avon, Wye, Thames, Coln, and Lech; the Severn and Thames are united by a canal. The principal manufacturing towns are Stroud-water, Tewkesbury, and Wooton-under-edge, and the other places of note besides the capital and city of Bristol, are Cheltenham, Cirencester, and Dursley.

Gloucester, a city and capital of the preceding county. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and seated on the E. side of the Severn, where, by two streams, it makes the isle of Alney. It was fortified with a wall, which Charles II. after the Restoration ordered to be demolished. The four principal streets have their junction in the centre of the town. It once contained 11 churches, but now has only 5 beside the cathedral, in which is a large cloister, a whispering gallery, and the tombs of Robert, duke of Normandy, and Edward II. It has five hospitals, two free-schools, and a large county jail. It has four extensive establishments for the manufacture of woolsens, and is a great mart for wool, and there are 12 incorporated trading companies. Ships come up by the Severn to the bridge; but the navigation being circuitous and difficult, a canal is made hence to Berkeley, with sufficient depth of water for ships of 400 tons burthen, at the head of which is a basin, fit for the reception of 100 vessels. Berkeley is distant from Gloucester 15 m. The city and neighbourhood contain many remains of abbeys; and those of Lan-touan abbey, in the S. suburb, are converted into outhouses belonging to adjacent farms. Gloucester is 24 m. N. E. of Bristol, and 104 W. by N. of London. Pop. in 1801, 7,559, and in 1821, 9,744.

Gloucester, a county of the state of New Jersey, extending from the Atlantic Ocean to Delaware river, a distance of 60 m. and is about 20 in mean breadth, giving a superficies of 1,200 sq. m. It is divided into 12 townships. Pop. 28,431. Woodbury is the chief town.

Gloucester, a maritime county in the E. District of Virginia, bounded on the S. W. by York river, and Chesapeak bay. It contains about 300 sq. m. Pop. 10,608. The chief town of the same name stands on a point of land on the N. side of the mouth of York River, 17 m. N. E. of York town, and 70 E. by S. of Richmond.

Gloucester, a sea-port of Massachusetts, in Essex county, and on the peninsula of Cape Ann, which forms the N. side of Massachusetts bay. The harbour is accessible for large ships, and defended by a battery and citadel. It is one of the most considerable fishing-towns in the United States, 16 m. N. E. of Salem. Long. 70. 40. W., lat. 42. 36. N. Pop. 7,513.

Gloucester, p.t. Providence Co. R. I. in the N. W. corner of the state. Pop. 2,524. Also a village in Gloucester Co. N. J.

Glover, t. Orleans Co. Vt. Pop. 902. There was formerly a small lake in this town, which burst its borders and deluged the neighbouring country in a singular manner. See Vermont.

Gloydsborough, a village of Hampshire Co. Va.

Gluckstadt, a sea-port of Lower Saxony, capital of the duchy of Holstein, with a strong castle. It has a considerable foreign trade, the principal branch of which is the whale fishery. It is seated on the Elbe, near its mouth, 28 m. N. W. of Hamburg. Long. 9. 29. E., lat. 53. 51. N.

Glynn, a maritime county of the state of Georgia, comprising about 3,050 square m. of territory. Pop. 4,467. Brunswick is the chief town.

Gnesna, or Gnesna, in Prussian Poland, contains an archbishop's see, whose prelate was primate of Poland. It was the first town built in the kingdom, and formerly more considerable than at present. It is 98 m. N. by E. of Breslau, and 145 W. by N. of Warsaw. Long. 17. 40. E., lat. 52. 28. N.

Goa, a city of Hindoostan, in the Concan, and the capital of the Portuguese settlements in India. It stands on the N. side of an island, 22 m. long, and 6 broad, formed by the river Mandava, which is capable of receiving the largest ships. The viceroy's palace was a noble building; but this, as well as the city at large, is very much on the decline. The inhabitants are contented with greens, fruits, and roots, which, with a little bread, rice, and fish, are their principal diet, though they have hogs and fowls in plenty. Their religion is the Roman catholic, and the clergy are numerous and illiterate. In this place was one of the last refuges of the inquisition; a description of which is given in Dr. Buchanan's Christian Researches. Goa has few manufactures or productions, the best trade being in arrack, which is distilled from the sap of the cocoa-nut tree. The harbour is defended by several forts and batteries. It is 250 m. S. by E. of Bombay. Long. 73. 45. E., lat. 15. 31. N.

Goalpara, a town of Hindoostan, at the N. E. extremity of Bengal, where the Europeans have factories, who carry on a great trade with Assam, Bootan, Thibet, &c. It stands on the E. bank of the Brahmapootra, 38 m. E. of Rangamatty.

Granada, a maritime province, formerly a kingdom of Spain, part of Andalusia, having about 270 m. of sea coast, on the Mediterranean; the mean length of the province from W. to E. being about 234 m., the extreme breadth at the E. end is about 95 m. but the W. part not more than 30, its superficies not exceeding 805 sq. leagues. Pop. in 1810 692,924. It is bounded on the E. by the kingdom of Seville, N. by those of Cordova and Jiën, and W. by Murcia. Though a mountainous country, the soil is good: but it has not been well cultivated since the Moors were expelled in 1492. However, it produces corn, wine, oil, sugar, flax, hemp, excellent fruits, honey, wax, and mulberry-trees, which feed a great number of silk-worms. The forests produce gall-nuts, palm-trees, and oaks. It is intersected by several streams falling into the Mediterranean, but the principal rivers run from E. to W. into the Guadalquivir through Cordova and Seville. Granada was the last province in Spain occupied by the Moors. The principal towns on the coast of the Mediterranean, beginning at the W. are Marbella, Malaga, Almunecar, Motril, Adra, Almeria, and Vera, and in the interior, Granada, (the capital) Ronda, Velez Malaga, Santa Fe, Guadix, Baza, Huescar, and Purchena.

Granada, a city of Spain the capital of the kingdom of that name, is situated near the confluence of the Xenil and the Darro, at the foot of the highest mountain in the Peninsula, the Sierra Nevada, and on the verge of that fertile district called the Vega de Granada. Notwithstanding its vicinity to the snow-clad Alpujarras, the winters are mild in Granada, and the climate is healthy and agreeable. The number of houses is 12,000, and the pop. according to the last census, was 68,295. In commerce and splendour the city has much declined notwithstanding the fertility of its territory. It rose to its highest prosperity under the Moors, by whom it was occupied soon after their first invasion of Spain in 711: it became a royal residence in 1013; during two centuries retained that distinction; and was not finally surrendered to the Spaniards until 1492. Of its magnificent edifices, the most notable are the palace of the Alhambra and the Generalife, or pleasure-house and garden of the Moorish kings. The Alhambra, with its 30 towers, alone occupies the space of a town, and is situated on a hill, fronting that called the Alcanaza, and separated from it by the rapid Darro. The ascent to the Alhambra is through groves of poplars and orange-trees, with fountains by the road side.

The outer walls inclose a large area, surrounding the inner walls; and a number of tanks or cisterns occupy the space between these and the Moorish palace,—a congeries of buildings chiefly remarkable for their interior decorations. The chambers are all paved with marble, and ornamented with marble pillars, sustaining arches of pure Arabic form: they are adorned with stucco, and with a species of porcelain which freshly retains its gilding after a lapse of 5 centuries. The Court of the Lions, so called from the sculptures which adorn its fountain, has no fewer than 158 marble pillars.

The hall of the Abencerrages is so called from the massacre of that illustrious tribe, said to have been here perpetrated by Boabdil the last king of Granada. They were the objects of envy to the Zegrís and the Gomeles, by whom they were falsely accused of treason to the king; and one of them was charged with illicit intercourse with the queen. In consequence of this charge, the monarch beheaded 86 of the Abencerrages (or, according to some statements 35) in one day. The sultana committed her defence to 4 Christian knights, her champions, who each overcame the accuser with whom he fought, and vindicated both her character and that of the noble family which had been slaughtered. The common people fancy that in the alabaster bason, which is in the centre of the apartment, they can discern traces of the blood of those brave men; but the unanimous opinion of enlightened travellers is, that these ensanguined stains are nothing more than the effects of time and exposure to the air.

This hall appears to have been a central saloon, communicating with the other apartments of the palace. Every possible variety of combination which could be devised by ingenuity, was employed to decorate the wall and ceiling, and the style of execution is the most exquisite that can be conceived. The lines regularly cross each other in a thousand forms, and after manifold windings return to the spot whence they begin.

The ceiling is equally extraordinary and worthy of admiration; it represents a series of grottoes from which depend stalactites, painted of various colours.

The Golden Saloon, so termed by the Arabs from the profusion of gold ornaments which it contained, was appropriated to the reception of ambassadors, from which circumstance the Spaniards have designated it La Sala de los embaxadores. It is situated in the lofty tower called the Comaresh; is 36 feet square, and 64 feet 4 inches high, from the floor to the highest part of the ceiling. The walls are, on three sides, fifteen inches thick, and on the fourth side nine. The lower range of windows is thirteen feet in height. The grand entrance to this noble hall is through an arched doorway, admirably finished, and embellished with flowers and arabesques in stucco: they were blue and gold, but the gilding is now almost entirely effaced. Over the principal door is an Arabic inscription, which appears to have been executed in a style corresponding to the rest of the edifice: it is taken, with the exception of its concluding sentence, from the Koran. On entering the Hall of Ambassadors, the beholder is lost in astonishment at the exquisite taste and elegance of execution which characterise every part of it; and if thus superb, even in its present deserted state, observes Mr. Murphy, how resplendent must this golden saloon have been, when the sovereign, arrayed in all the pomp of oriental magnificence, assembled his brilliant court to give audience to the representatives of neighbouring monarchs!

The whole floor is inlaid with mosaic. The same kind of ornament, but of different patterns, covers every part of the walls, interspersed with flowers and Arabic inscriptions executed in porcelain, with exquisite taste, so as to unite and harmonise exactly with the stucco ornaments that every where abound.

The most remarkable part of the Alhambra, for exterior beauty, is the palace begun by the emperor Charles V. in 1537, when he had hoped to fix his court at Granada: it is a square building, each front being 220 feet in length; and though it is roofless, so mild is the climate, that the marble staircases appear as fresh as if they were just completed. Fine as the prospect is from the Alhambra, a still finer is enjoyed from the Generalife on the opposite hill, which was the residence of the court during the heats of summer. The rooms are all floored with marble, and have streams of pure water running through them; a luxury which the Spaniards of Granada, in imitation of their Moorish ancestors, are fond of introducing into their houses. Most of these have fountains in the inner courts, with awnings around them, where the inhabitants in hot weather take their repasts and receive visits. Granada is an archiepiscopal see: it has an university, now dwindled into insignificance; forty-one convents, various churches, thirteen hospitals, many remains of Moorish magnificence, and a bazar called Alcanteria. Its rich territory bears, in perfection, all the products peculiar to the south of Europe. In the stately cathedral are the tombs of Ferdinand the Catholic and his queen Isabella; also that of the renowned warrior Gonsalvo de Cordova. Granada is in lat. 37. 15 N., long. 3. 35. W.

Granada, Necr, an extensive territory of South America, which comprised all the western part of the new republic of Colombia from the great river Maranon, or Amazons, to the Caribbean Sea; this part of the western hemisphere was first explored by Ojeda and Amerigo Vespucci, in 1505, and became completely subdued to Spanish rule under a captain general, in 1547. In 1718 it was formed into a viceroyalty; restored to a captain generalship in 1734; but in 1740, the viceroyalty was re-established and continued until 1816. In December 1819, an union was effected with Venezuela into one republic, under the name of Colombia, (which see).

Granard, a neat town of Ireland, in the county of Longford, 16 m. E. N. E. of Longford. Pop. in 1820, 2,534.

Granby, a township of Essex Co. Vt. Pop. 97. Also a p.t. Hampshire Co. Mass. Pop. 1,064. Also a p.t. Hartford Co. Conn. Pop. 2,730. Also a p.t. Oswego Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,423. Also a village in Lexington District South Carolina, seated on the Congaree, on the contrary side to Columbia, about a m. below that city. It is noted for a curious bridge, whose centre arch is 100 feet wide, to give passage for large trees which are brought down by the floods.

Grand Island, in Niagara River, N. Y. is about 6 m. long and 3 broad. It has a good soil and is generally covered with trees.

Grand Isle, a county of Vermont consisting mostly of the islands in Lake Champlain, Pop. 3,698. North Hero is the capital. There is a village of the same name in this county.

Grand Lick, p.v. Campbell Co. Kentucky.

Grandmont, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne. Near it was a celebrated abbey, suppressed in 1769, after the death of the then professed members. It is 15 m. N. N. E. of Limoges.

Grand Manan, an island at the entrance of the bay of Fundy, the S. end of which is in lat. 44. 43. N., and 67. of W. long.; it is included in the province of Nova Scotia.

Grandpre, a town of France, in the department of Ardennes, seated on the Ayre, 32 m. E. of Rheims.

Grand View, a township of Washington Co. Ohio.

Grangemouth, a village of Scotland, in Stirling-shire, at the junction of the Great Canal with the river Carron, 4 m. N. E. of Falkirk, in which parish it is included. Upwards of 40,000 tons of shipping are annually entered here, belonging either to the foreign or coasting trade.

Granger, a county of East Tennessee. Pop. 1,066. Rutledge is the chief town. Also towns in Cuyahoga and Medina Cos. Ohio.

Granske, a town of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, 30 m. N. of Berlin.

Granson, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud. It stands near the S. end of the lake of Neufchatel, 16 m. W. S. W. of Neufchatel.

Grant, a county of Kentucky, E. of the Kentucky river. Pop. 2,987. Williamstown is the capital.

Grantham, a borough in Lincolnshire, Eng. The church is an elegant structure with a very lofty spire. A canal passes hence to the Trent at Nottingham. Grantham is seated on the Witham, 20 m. S. by W. of Lincoln and 110 N. by W. of London. It returns two members to parliament. The population which in 1801 was 3,303, in 1821 was 4,148.

Grantham, t. Sullivan Co. N. H. 45 m. N. W. Concord. Pop. 1,070.

Grantsville, p.v. Greene Co. Geo.

Gravelle, a town of France, in the department of Manche, seated on the English channel, in the bay of St. Malo, partly on a rock, and partly on a plain, 15 m. S. by W. of Coutances, and 25 N. E. of St. Malo. Pop. 7,030; it carries on a considerable traffic with the Island of Jersey.

Gravelle, a county of North Carolina. Pop. 19,343. Oxford is the chief town.

Gravelle, p.t. Hampden Co. Mass. Pop. 1,652. Also a p.t. Washington Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,882. Also towns in Licking Co. Ohio. Monongahela Co. Va., and a Seignory of Cornwallis Co. Lower Canada.

Graslitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saz, famous for its manufacture of brass, 15 m. N. W. of Elbogen.

Grasmere-water, a small lake of Westmoreland, Eng. W. of Ambleside. Its margin is hollowed into small bays, with bold eminences; some of rock, some of turf, that half conceal and vary the figure of the lake. A low promontory projects far into the water; and on it stands a white village.

Grason, an island in the gulf of Bothnia, near the coast of Sweden, 15 m. long and 2 broad. Long. 18. 20. E., lat. 60. 12. N.

Grasse, a town of France, in the department of Var, and lately a bishop's see. It has a trade in dry fruit, oil, perfumes, and tanned leather, and is seated on an eminence, 11 m. W. N. W. of Antibes, and 20 W. by S. of Nice. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 12,553

Grasse la, a town of France, in the department of Aude, on the river Othieu. Pop. 1,244.

Gratis, a village in Preble Co. Ohio.

Gratz, a fortified town of Germany, capital of Lower Styria, and a bishop's see. Here are many churches, and a fine arsenal. The castle stands on a rock, and is a strong place. Gratz is seated on the W. side of the Muer, over which is a bridge to an extensive suburb. The inhabitants are estimated at 35,000. In 1797 it was taken by the French. It is 88 m. S. S. W. of Vienna. Long. 15. 26. E., lat. 47. 4. N.

Graudenz, a town of Prussian Poland, on the E. bank of the Vistula, 8 m. N. of Culm, and 55 S. of Dantzie. Pop. about 8,000.

Grave, a strong town of Dutch Brabant, on the left bank of the Maese, beyond which there is a fort. It has been often taken. It is 8 m. S. S. W. of Nimwegen.

Grave Creek, p.v. Ohio Co. Va.

Gravelines, a small sea-port of France, seated at the mouth of the Aa, defended by Fort Phillip, 12 m. E. of Calais. Pop. 2,570.

Gravenau, or Grayenau, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Passau, on the river Sag. 16 m. N. of Passau.

Gravenec, a town of Bavaria, in the upper palatinate, 17 m. N. of Amberg.

Gravesande, a town of South Holland, where the ancient counts of Holland formerly resided. It is about 4 m. from the sea, and 6 W. by S. of Delft.

Gravesend, a town in Kent, Eng. It stands on the S. bank of the Thames, and is the common landing and embarking place for seamen and passengers to and from London; and here all outward bound vessels stop to be examined by the custom-house officers, and to receive their clearances: and inward vessels deliver in their manifests, it being the boundary of the port of London. A great part of it was burnt down, with the church, in 1727; the latter was rebuilt as one of the 50 new churches. It is called the corporation of Gravesend and Milton, these two places being united under the government of a mayor. The latter place is a m. E. of the other, and has a blockhouse over against Tilbury fort. They were incorporated by queen Elizabeth; but, long before, Richard II. had granted them the exclusive privilege of conveying passengers to London in boats. Gravesend is famous for asparagus and other vegetables, with which most of the ships outward bound on long voyages supply themselves; and the chief employment of the labouring people is the spinning of hemp, to make nets and ropes. It is 22 m. E. S. E. of London. Pop. in 1821, 3,814, and of Milton 2,769.

Grarina, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, 32 m. W. S. W. of Bari. It has nine churches and a Pop. of about 9,000.

Gray, a town of France in the department of Upper Saone. It has a trade in iron, and is seated on the Saone, 25 m. N. E. of Dijon. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 6,581.

Gray, p.t. Cumberland Co. Me. Pop. 1,575.

Grayson, an interior county of Kentucky, bounded on the S. by Green river. Pop. 3,879. Litchfield is the chief town. Also a county of the Western District of Virginia, bordering on North Carolina; it is intersected by New River which runs from S. to N. into the Ohio. Pop. 7,675.

Grasley, a village 7 m. N. W. of Nottingham, Eng.

Great Britain, an island on the western coast of Europe, comprising England, Wales and Scotland. This island and the neighbouring one of Ireland constitute one kingdom called the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The island of Great Britain is the largest in Europe: its extreme length is about 580 miles: in the south it is 370 miles broad; at the centre 80: and near the centre of Scotland 180. It is situated between 49. 57. and 58. 44. north latitude, and between 35. and 8. 34. west longitude from Paris. Its surface contains 11,400 leagues. Its eastern and southern shores are less deeply indented than the western: they are consequently bolder. There are no islands upon the eastern coast, and upon the southern none except that of Wight and two others of inconsiderable size: on the west are those of Sicily elsewhere described, Anglesey, Man, Arran, Ila, Jura, Mull, Tiry, Egg, Rùm, Sky, the Hebrides and Orkneys. In the south the largest bay is that of Exeter. In the east are, beginning at the south, the sandy bay of the Thames; the Wash, where the little stream called the Glen meets the sea; the frith which receives the Humber; the friths of Forth, Murray and Dornoch. On the western coast are the friths of Clyde and Solway; the bays of Morecambe and Arlech, and the Bristol Channel, which receives the Severn.

The mountains of this island compose three groups: the first toward the north is formed by the highlands of Caithness and Inverness; of this group the Orkneys, the Hebrides, Sky and Mull are the extremities: The second consists of the Grampian Hills and some other eminences which terminate at the friths of Forth and Clyde: The third comprises the Cheviot Hills and the broken surface of Wales and the south part of the island. The first group does not rise above 2,500 feet: the highest eminence in the second attains to 4,370, and in the third a few summits rise to 2,500 and 3,000 feet.

There are no basins of great extent. The hills of Caithness, and the Grampian chain form the one most northerly: the most considerable and rapid river of this basin is the Spey which flows with a swift course, and with much obstruction from cataracts into Murray Frith. The southern ramifications of the Grampians form with the Cheviots an extensive basin through which flows the Forth: this river in a course of 60 leagues traverses an extent of meadows, forests, and fertile plains, and its waters abound in excellent fish. The Moorlands and a few other hills surround the vast basin of the Use, which under the name of Ure rises in the valley of Wensley, flows to Aysgarth, where it forms a beautiful cascade, takes the name of Use after receiving the Swale, and the name of Humber upon joining the Ocean. The ridge which forms the southern limit of this basin, bounds on the north that of the most important river of Great Britain, the Thames. The basins of the southern face of the island are too small to give rise to any considerable stream. Those on the western face are of small extent except that traversed by the Severn: this basin is formed by the highest mountains of England and Wales: the Severn rises at the foot of Plinlimmon and runs into the Bristol Channel. The basin of the Clyde in Scotland, is narrow, but worthy of notice for the beautiful falls of this river, one of which near Stone Byres is 84 feet perpendicular. The region watered by this stream is one of the most romantic, fertile, and populous in the whole country.

The lakes of Great Britain are small; the largest in England is Loch Lomond 30 m. long and 8 wide. Its beautiful banks are much frequented in summer. It embosoms several islands, and its waters are subject to violent agitations without any apparent cause. In Scotland are many lakes, the most noted of which is Loch Lomond, 30 m. long and two to three wide.

The rigors of winter, and the heats of summer, are much less felt in Great Britain than on the continent under the same parallel. The winds from the sea, temper seasons the most opposite, but the variations of temperature are sudden and frequent. If the northern regions are favorable to the growth of vegetables, the state of the atmosphere is often an obstacle to their maturity: rains destroy the too early expectation of a plentiful crop. Moreover, in the north there are wide tracts of barren territory, and on the eastern coast, sand and marshes oppose an obstacle to fertility. The most fertile districts are in the centre and south.

The most useful plants and animals have been imported from the continent at different periods into the British Islands. At the most ancient period, England was covered with virgin forests like the wilds of America: the food of the inhabitants consisted of acorns, apples, nuts and berries: bears, wolves, and wild boars ranged undisturbed among these vast solitudes: the deer fed in the woods and the wild bull in the plains. The beasts of prey have disappeared; the deer only is reserved to afford a sport to the rich, and no other of the wild quadrupeds remain but the small tribes which find a shelter in the mountains and forests. A goat is almost a rarity throughout the island, except in Wales, where they approach somewhat to a savage nature: the Welsh take great delight in hunting them; they prefer the he-goats as having the best fat and skin: the horns of this animal are sometimes three feet in length. Most of the domestic animals of Scotland are small, but their flesh is savoury and highly esteemed. The island of Great Britain contained in 1821 a pop. of 14,158,815. Adding to this the pop. of Ireland which is 6,801,800, gives a total of 20,963,513. for the pop. of the United Kingdom. The total pop. of the British empire throughout the world is estimated at from 140 to 150 millions. The national debt of Great Britain in 1839 was £804,860,188 sterling: The shipping of the kingdom amounts to 2,500,000 tons. The imports are valued at 43 millions sterling, the exports 57 millions. The yearly manufactures of cotton 20 millions; of woolen 18 millions; of silk 10 millions. The whole amount of property in the British empire is estimated at 4,096 millions sterling.

The geographical position of the British Islands has necessarily raised the commercial power of the United Kingdom to a degree of prosperity beyond anything which antiquity exhibits to us. It has long been customary to compare the naval power of Great Britain to that of Carthage, but nothing will establish the pretended resemblance. Seated upon a continent, Great Britain would never have attained the preponderance she now exercises. If her two great islands formed but one, the same advantages would not have arisen. The extent of her coasts maintains an immense maritime population, and removes the apprehension of any rival in the empire of the seas.

The secret of the English power first began to be understood by Elizabeth. Called to the throne at a period when the religious reformation which marked an important era, as political reformation characterizes the present, had been obstructed in its progress under the short and bloody reign of Mary, this great princess placed herself at the head of the movement which had drawn all minds within its influence. Unjust and cruel towards Mary Stuart, the political difficulties of her situation can hardly palliate the enormity of her crime, but in other respects we cannot too much admire the grandeur of her conceptions. It was she who laid the foundations of the English power: who first despatched ships to circumnavigate the globe, and who, after sending colonies to both Indies, laid the foundation of that company of merchants who rule over nearly an hundred millions of people in the East. Skillful in turning the peculiarities of the English constitution to her advantage, she had the talent to govern despotically without offending the nation, to restore order and economy among the finances, and to give a new impulse to trade and commerce. The accession of James VI, of Scotland, to the English throne, under the name of James I, was attended with the advantage of uniting without violence, two crowns which the common interest should have placed on the same head. His reign was disturbed by plots which ceased only with the Stuarts, but exterior quiet favoured the operations of trade. Charles I, after sundry acts of indecision, weakness, and despotism, died upon a scaffold, before the eyes of a people who had learned by the tragical end of Lady Jane Grey and Mary Stuart, to witness the fall of a crowned head without shuddering. Under the protectorate of Cromwell, the English navy attained to a degree of power and reputation, which earned a title of glory not to be withheld from this cruel and crafty usurper.

Charles II, restored to the throne of his ancestors, confirmed the abolition of the feudal laws, encouraged commerce and agriculture, and founded the Royal Society of London; but his luxuries and pleasures led him into foolish expenses, to meet which he espoused the Infanta of Portugal with the sole desire of enjoying her rich dowry. He sold Dunkirk to France for 25,000 pounds sterling, and compromised the interests of England by joining Louis XIV, in the undertaken to destroy the Dutch power. His despotism and extortions prepared a new revolution, which was accelerated by the pretensions of the Jesuit party, and the distrust of the protestants: victims on both sides fell upon the scaffold, and James II, in the midst of these troubles, forerunners of civil war, succeeded his brother, shocked the prejudices of the nation upon political and religious liberty, and fled from the kingdom at the approach of William of Orange. Enlightened by the experience of the past, the parliament, in decreeing the crown to the son-in-law of James, drew up the celebrated Bill of Rights, which restrained the royal power within its just limits; the two houses retained the management of the public expenses, and the king that of the civil lists. In vain Louis XIV, actuated by his attachment to the catholic religion, generosity towards an unfortunate prince, and hatred of William, placed at the command of James his money, soldiers, and ships: the battles of the Boyne and Aghrim, in which this prince showed neither the courage nor presence of mind so necessary to a king, took away from him the hope of ever reconquering his throne. Finally after a reign of thirteen years, in which, for the maintenance of expensive wars with France, he was obliged to resort to loans, William died, leaving the kingdom burthened with a debt of 48 millions of dollars, or ten times the amount of the debt in 1688.

Anne the daughter of James II, in placing Marlborough at the head of the army, saw the national glory revive in the victories of Blenheim and Ramilies, while the battles of Oudenarde and Malplaquet caused that of Almanza to be forgotten. Under her reign, Newfoundland, Hudson's Bay, Minorca, and Gibraltar, were acknowledged to belong to the English. Conformable to the act of succession, the house of Brunswick furnished, in 1714, a new dynasty to Great Britain. George I. and George II. had to struggle against the bold enterprises of Charles Edward, the grandson of James II. till the battle of Culloden, which, in 1746, overthrew the party of the Pretender, and delivered England from civil war, and the fears of a new revolution. Toward the middle of the reign of George I, the private fortunes of many individuals were ruined by the South Sea scheme, as it happened in France at the same time, from the financial system of Law. The reign of George II, longer and more abounding in important events, witnessed the renewal of that rivalry between Great Britain and France, which had subsequently such important effects upon the political system of Europe. The former consoled herself for the loss of the battle of Fontenoy, and the disasters of the Duke of Cumberland in Flanders, by her successes on the ocean and in India, and by the capture of the island of Goree, and the conquest of Gaudaloupe and Canada.

Under these favourable auspices George III. succeeded to the throne of his grandfather in 1760. Born in England, he possessed a great advantage over his predecessor, and was the idol of the nation. A war which had broken out in 1755, between France and England, was continued for three years longer, and when the former had suffered the loss of her fleets, and the latter so far exhausted her finances as to be no longer able to raise soldiers without difficulty, the treaty of 1763 followed. Great Britain retained Canada, the island of Cape Breton, Dominica, Grenada, Tobago, St. Vincent, and Senegal, but these acquisitions increased her debt tenfold, and the sum now amounted to 134 millions sterling. This was no favourable time for diminishing the taxes, and still less so for increasing them, particularly by imposing burdens upon colonies so important as those of North America, and who required so much forbearance. These colonies had always possessed the right of taxing themselves in their provincial assemblies. The British parliament in 1765, passed an act for collecting stamp-duties in America, but this attempt failing in consequence of the spirited resistance of the Americans, it was renewed in another form by imposing a duty on tea imported from England: the Colonies began reprisals by refusing to make use of any British imports, and the Bostonians threw the tea into the sea. The mother country scorned the medium of concession and took up arms. The colonies assembled in a national congress, declared the country an independent, sovereign state, made preparation for war and placed Washington at the head of the army. Victory, long time undecided, at length inclined to the side of the Americans, and in 1778 France made a treaty with the new confederation, and agreed to defend their cause: this was a declaration of war against England: the struggle was obstinate and bloody, and the successes balanced, as shown by the treaty of peace in 1783 by which Great Britain ceded to France Tobago, the banks of the Senegal, and some districts in the neighborhood of Pondicherry, restored her conquests from this power, and her ally, Spain, and abandoned the demolition of Dunkirk. France also gave up her conquests, and the consequence of this treaty was the acknowledgement of the independence of the United States. The events worthy of note in the affairs of England down to the subsequent rupture with France are, abroad, the conquest of half the dominions of Tippoo Saib in India, and at home, the progress of religious toleration, the extension of the privileges of juries in criminal cases to judge not only of the fact, but of the law, and the proposal for the abolition of the slave trade, brought forward by the virtuous Wilberforce, adopted by the commons, and rejected by the lords.

But the principles which gave rise to the French revolution were now proclaimed with enthusiasm in the political societies of Great Britain, and the parliament adopted the bill for the exclusion of foreigners, and prohibited the exportation of corn to France. The latter complained of the violation of the commercial treaty of 1787, but Great Britain dismissed the French ambassador and organized against that power in 1793 the first coalition, of which she herself was the soul, and which was composed of nearly the whole of Europe. The victories of the French broke up this alliance, and rendered France more powerful than ever. England stirred up a second coalition in 1799, but was herself forced into a peace, and the treaty of Amiens was signed in 1802. A new coalition arose under her auspices in 1805, and new victories and new aggrandizements on the side of the French at the expense of their neighbors were the result. In 1807 the fourth English coalition was broken by the treaty of Tilsit. In 1809 a fifth was formed, and ended in the treaty of Vienna by a new acquisition of territory for France. Finally after a perseverance which exhibits in a striking view the power of England, and the immense resources within her reach, the sixth coalition, renewed in 1813, terminated in the fall of the French empire, the restoration of the house of Bourbon, and the treaty of peace concluded at Paris in 1814.

The British constitution, is a piece of mosaic work belonging to different epochs: it is the great charter of Henry I, modified a century later and forced upon the acceptance of king John. It is the charter confirmed with great alterations by Henry III, and sanctioned by Edward I. Its completion is the Declaration of Rights in 1688. It possesses however, the advantage of not impeding the development of any social faculty, of securing every liberty, by the unrestrained exercise of that of the press, and of exalting the character of the subject by placing his life and property under the safeguard of the laws. The king of England joins to the dignity of supreme magistrate, that of head of the church. The former gives him the right of making war and peace, alliances and treaties, raising troops, assembling, proroguing, adjourning, and dissolving parliament, appointing all officers, civil and military, and the chief Ecclesiastical dignitaries, and pardoning or commuting the punishment of criminals: the latter gives him power to convoke national and provincial synods, who under his approbation, established dogmas and discipline. The parliament enjoys the prerogative of proposing laws, but no law has any validity till approved by the king. On the other hand the will of the sovereign or his ministers, and the annual demand for supplies cannot take the shape of a law till under this form they have been sanctioned by the votes of both houses. The king may increase not only the number of peers, but even that of the commons, by authorizing a city to return members to parliament. He arrives at majority at the age of eighteen, and on his accession to the throne must sanction all the laws passed during his minority. Females as well as males possess a hereditary right to the crown. The responsibility of the ministers, not an empty phrase in England, secures the inviolability of the monarch: the ministers are four in number, and independent of one another:—the First Lord of the Treasury, or prime minister, who has under his direction the taxes, the custom house, the stamp office and the post office;—the Secretary of State for foreign affairs;—the Home Secretary, who has the direction of colonial affairs excepting those of the East Indies, — and the Secretary at War whose authority extends over the concerns of India. A council is organized to examine whatever relates to Indian affairs, and another superintending the business of commerce and the colonies, is composed of enlightened individuals who combine among themselves the interests of agriculture, industry and commerce, and study unceasingly the wants and tastes of every people for the purpose of making them in some way subservient to British industry. The House of Commons consists of 658 members, of whom 489 represent England, 24 the principality of Wales, 45 Scotland, and 100 Ireland.

At the present moment Great Britain is approaching a fearful crisis. Her trade is embarrassed, her subjects disaffected, and her political institutions threatened by the example of popular revolt in the neighboring countries. The Whigs have once more come into power, and a ministry preside in the national councils whose avowed and leading object is to effect an essential change in the government. A struggle for life and death has commenced between the popular and aristocratic bodies. The checks and balances which political theorists have been accustomed to consider as a part of the British constitution, have begun to give distinct evidences of their conflicting tendencies; and the hostile operation of discordant elements seems to promise collision and not equilibrium. The whole aspect of affairs is such as to warrant the belief that the present government of Great Britain cannot last.

Greece, a territory of the S. E. extremity of Europe, and 2,000 years ago the most celebrated portion of that quarter of the globe, it having successfully combated the myriad armies of Persia and the east, and extended its arts and its arms eastward to the banks of the Indus. As the glory of Egypt declined, that of Greece rose to its meridian, to be eclipsed in its turn by the ascendancy of Rome, till in the 15th century it became tributary to the Turks. The main land of Greece extends from the lat. of 36. 25. to 42. N. or about 400 m., and is about 110 in mean breadth. In the days of Grecian celebrity, it was divided into four great parts, viz. Macedonia, Thessaly, Livadia, and the Peloponnesus, exclusive of the island of Candia, and the Archipelago. Under the Turks it was divided into four pachalics, viz. Salonica, Joannina, Egropos or Negropont, and Tripolizza.

It will be proper, before we speak of modern or Independent Greece, first to describe the whole of the country in Europe inhabited by the descendants of the ancient Greeks. This region is a sort of peninsula lying between the Archipelago and the Ionian sea. Its northern boundary is rather indefinite.

Pindus, now Metzova, is probably the nucleus of the mountains in the Greek peninsula; its rocks, forests and poetic fountains have of late given rise to many interesting observations, but its elevation is still unknown. The numerous valleys on its sides are covered with trees; snow falls generally during the month of October on all its summits, and two of them, Dokimi and Peristera, are covered with snow almost the whole year; their height may be vaguely estimated at eight or nine thousand feet. The mountains of Epirus extend to the shores of the sea; Thessaly is encompassed with hills, and forms an amphitheatre on which seventy-five towns were in ancient times built.

Olympus or the modern Lacha is not, according to Xenagoras, more than 5,760 feet; according to Bernouilli it is 6,120 high; its rugged and precipitous rocks give it a picturesque and sublime appearance; the pass of Platamona on the north of Olympus, is encompassed with perpendicular rocks, that rise to the height of 3,000 feet; the famous pass of Thermopylae is not so imposing, but neither can vie with the one in the ancient Megaris, between the Scironion rocks and the Salonic gulf. Dark and steep rocks hang above the sea, the waves resound beneath their base, the traveller walks along a narrow path near these precipices, and appears suspended between the ocean and the sky.

The erect and steep summits of the ancient Parnassus or the present Liakoura are very lofty, but although they have been seen by many travellers, they have been measured by none. The middle districts of the Peloponnesus form an elevated ridge, and several mountainous groups arise from it; of these Calmos or the ancient Cyllene is said to be the highest central point, and Cape Matapan or the ancient Tamaris, which extends farthest to the south, forms the southern extremity of the European continent.

The coasts of Albania descend gradually towards the gulf of Drino, and rise suddenly near the entrance of the Adriatic. Rocks are heaped above rocks, their summits reach to the clouds, their sides are rent by lightning, the sea which washes them is always tempestuous, and the shores are covered with the wrecks of vessels. Such are the Acroceramian mountains, so much dreaded by the ancients; they are now better known by the name of the Monte de Chimera.

The coasts of the Ionian islands are for the most part very steep, the calcareous rocks of Leucade rise from the bottom of a deep and stormy sea; they were the cause of much alarm to mariners in the time of Æneas and Ulysses, they are considered dangerous even in the present day.

The island of Candia or Crete is supposed to be a continuation of the mountainous districts which extend along Greece and the Peloponnesus, and the Cyclades are said to be the scattered fragments of two small chains, the one of which extends from Athens, the other from Euboea;

thus, as we remove from Hemus, the range becomes gradually irregular, or terminates in detached hills and abrupt rocks; the marks of those changes and revolutions which have altered the surface of our globe are apparent in the south of Greece.

It has been maintained that there are some very high mountains in the Archipelago, a learned Greek physician declares that the summits of the mountains in the island of Andros are covered all the year with snow. If that statement were correct, it might be concluded that the most elevated points in the whole of Greece are situated in that island; philosophers might expect to find there the remains of an immense volcano, an Etna that has been extinguished for ages. So extraordinary a fact requires to be confirmed by better evidence before it can be generally believed; the author may have perhaps confounded these mountains with others in Euboea.

The vale of Tempe extends from the south-west to the north-east, its length is about forty stadia or a league and a half; its breadth, although in general a stadium and a half, is in one place not more than a hundred feet. The calm streams of the Peneus water the valley under the shade of poplars or plane trees, near rocks overspread with ivy, and green and fertile hills; several verdant and beautiful islands have been discovered on the river, but its banks are suddenly contracted, rocks are confusedly heaped on rocks, and its streams are precipitated with a loud noise across a narrow pass, but beyond it the waters resume their tranquil course, and mingle with the sea.

The following tradition was very generally believed in ancient times; the Peneus, it is said having at one period no outlet, formed a great lake, which covered a part of Thessaly, particularly the Pelasgic plain to the south of Larissa. The valley of Tempe was opened by an earthquake, the lake flowed into the sea, and the dry land gradually appeared. The inhabitants of that region instituted a festival to commemorate an event by which the face of their country had been changed. Theophrastus having observed that the climate of Thessaly was colder in his time, attributes it to the artificial channels, by means of which the stagnant waters had been drained; some of the poets corroborate that opinion, and claim for Hercules the glory of having opened a passage for the Peneus. According to some authors, the deluge in the time of Deucalion extended over the whole earth; it is more generally supposed to have been a partial inundation of Thessaly, which lasted three months; it may be accounted for by admitting that the channel of the Peneus was blocked either by an earthquake during which some rocks were overturned and thus formed an effectual barrier for its course, or by excessive rains, which occasioned a sudden and extraordinary augmentation of its waters.

The cave of Trophonius, a long time the abode of superstition, is still to be seen in Bœtia, and that of Corycæus is situated to the north of Delphi; although very deep, almost the whole of it is illumined by the light of day; it is so large that all the inhabitants of Delphi went to it for shelter during the invasion of Xerxes. Every part in the neighbourhood of Mount Parnassus abounds in caverns, which were held in great veneration by the common people; it has been supposed that mephitical vapours issued from the spiracles near the celebrated cave of the oracle, above which the pythons sat on the sacred tripod; the natural effect of the exhalations was to occasion convulsions and those ecstasies which have accompanied in every age the gift of prophecy.

Greece is situated between two seas, and is not for that reason exposed to excessive droughts; but the cold is often more intense than in Italy or Spain, and the cause is owing to its being on two sides with the great range of the continent, the temperature of which in equal parallels is always lower towards the centre, and also to its proximity to two great mountainous chains, Hæmus and Taurus.

The temperature of Greece varies greatly in different districts, it has been said that the climates of all the regions in Europe are concentrated in that country; the waters of the Danube and the Hebrus are frozen in winter; the Russians who crossed Mount Hæmus had recourse to their furs to protect them against the cold; but on the other hand, spring and summer are the only seasons on the coast of Attica. "The notes of the nightingale are heard in verdant plains where the cold of winter is unknown, and rude blasts never felt; the branches of fruit trees encircled with ivy or the tendrils of the vine shelter these vallies from the burning rays of the sun. Bacchus and his joyous votaries wander in the groves; the narcissus and the glittering crocus, which adorn the wreaths of the gods are always in flower. Venus and the muses meet on the magic banks of the Cephissus; its winding streams, flowing through a thousand channels, water fertile meads." Sophocles.

The traveller, after having crossed the heights of Thermopyla, enters into Greece Proper; the climate is more oppressive, water is scarcer, but the soil is fruitful; oil is the most valuable production in the southern provinces, and that of Attica is superior to every other, but a thick hoar-frost rises occasionally from the Archipelago and is destructive to plants; it falls in the form of dew and penetrates into the roots and sap, the leaves become yellow, the flowers decay, or if they ripen, the fruit is of little use. The oil exported annually from Attica was calculated to be worth 300,000 piasters; that from the Morea about 400,000. Corinth is still famed for its raisins, Arcadia for its cheese, and Mount Hymettus for its honey. The soil of Attica is covered with aromatic plants, and that circumstance enables us to account for the excellence of its honey; it is sweeter than that of other countries, retains its aromatic fragrance, and, although of a red colour, is perfectly transparent. The same country might rival Spain in the fineness of its wool; the goat thrives on its hills, the uncultivated lands are over-run with thyme, serpillum and marjoram, the Albanian shepherds lead their flocks in summer to these pastures. The breed of goats was improved in the time of the Byzantine emperors by the mixture of the African and Asiatic race, but it has not since been sufficiently crossed; the breed of sheep in Livadia and Arcadia is the best, that of Attica the worst.

The view from Mount Parnassus is extensive, a traveller saw from it Olympus, the Ionian Islands and the Cyclades; he might have observed beneath him the town and gulf of Lepanto, and on the east amidst flowery meads, the populous town of Livadia in the province of the same name.

Corinth, its two gulfs and rocky isthmus, which so many sovereigns have in vain endeavored to cut, still command the entrance into the Peloponnesus or Morea, which has been styled by the Slavonic tribes who penetrated into it during the Byzantine empire, the maritime country. We observe in that region the agreeable town of Argos and Napoli de Romania, or as it is sometimes called the Gibraltar of Greece. Three hundred vessels may ride at anchor in its harbour. Napoli de Malvoisia and its great inland bay, the populous town of Misitra on the valley of the Eurotas, the present Vasilii-Potamo or royal river and Tripolitza, where a pacha resided with impunity near the ruins of Mantinea. The towns on the south-west coast are Calamata on the fruitful plains of Messenia, Navarino which still retains its admirable harbour, Gastouni towards the west in the fertile fields of Elis; but Patras, a place of greater trade than any of them contains 8,000 souls. Maga-Spileon, a convent partly cut in a rock, the gloomy lake of Stymphali and many other places renowned in history are situated in the interior of that rich peninsula, of which the produce in corn, grapes, figs, wine, oil, cotton, silk and many other articles amounted to fifteen millions of piasters.

The Greeks, who wander among the ruins of their ancient glory, have at last shaken off the Turkish yoke; heroic deeds both on land and sea, convinced every one that they had awaked from their long lethargy, but as in ancient times, their efforts have been enfeebled by internal discord; the modern Greeks have unfortunately inherited the vanity, inconstancy and treachery of their fathers. Nature has not denied them high intellectual endowments; poets and orators are born amongst them, but their natural abilities are not improved by cultivation; sarcasm and railery supersede argument, and in their deliberations, a frivolous expression, a single word or gesture is sufficient to make them unmindful of their most important interests. The Moraïtes are less volatile than the townsmen of Romelia, and better fitted to enjoy the blessings of freedom under a good government. The Athenians have not lost their ancient urbanity, their accent is more harmonious than any other in Greece, their language is less diffuse, and for that reason more energetic. Their appearance is nearly the same as that of their ancestors, the women of Athens are still distinguished by their light figures, the oval form of the face, the regular contour, the straight line that marks the profile, full black eyes, high forehead, red lips, small hands and feet; they are equally graceful in the mournful dance of Ariadne and in the rapid mazes of the Romaika. The simplicity of the ancient dress is in some degree retained; a white tunic descends from the neck and a white mantle covers the arms and falls over the shoulders, a handkerchief tied loosely round the head does not conceal their jet-black hair; but the barbarous empire is typified in a clumsy and ill-placed girdle, red trowsers and a heavy Turkish cloak.

The Greek revolution broke out in 1821, and a National Congress assembled at Epidaurus the same year. On the 1st of January, 1822, this Congress published a constitution for the Greek nation. From this period a bloody and devastating war was waged against them by the Turks for a period of seven years. At length the governments of Russia, France and Great Britain interfered. The Turkish marine was annihilated at the battle of Navarino, a French army occupied the Morea, and Greece became an independent state under the protection of the three powers in 1829.

Independent Greece comprises the Morea and the territory without the isthmus, bounded on the north by a line beginning at the mouth of the river Aspropotamus, the ancient Achelous, and passing up the south-eastern bank of that river to Angelo Castron. Thence it passes through the lakes Sacarovista and Vrachori, to mount Artoleria and thence along the valley of Calouri, and the top of mount Ceta to the gulf of Zeitoun. The western Sporades and Cyclades are also included; the whole forming a territory about double the extent of the state of Massachusetts, and containing a population of 650,000. The government in its present state is provisional and experimental. During the war it was elective and republican, but the three protecting powers have recently made attempts to establish a monarchy in Greece. The Prince of Saxe Coburg was offered the crown but declined it.

Greenland, a country in the N. E. part of America, extending probably to the pole. It was discovered in the tenth century, by the Norwegians, who planted a colony on the eastern coast; and the intercourse between this colony and Denmark was continued till the beginning of the 15th century: in that century, by the gradual increase of the arctic ice, the colony became completely imprisoned by the frozen ocean; while on the W. a range of mountains and plains, covered with perpetual ice, precluded all access. This settlement contained several churches and monasteries, and is said to have extended about 200 miles in the S. E. extremity. In more recent times the western coast washed by the waters of Davis' Straits and Baffin's Bay, was chiefly explored by Davis and other English navigators; but there was no attempt to settle a colony. In 1721, a Norwegian clergyman, named Eggede, proceeded to this dreary country, where he continued till 1735, preaching to the natives; and his benevolent example has been since followed by several missionaries. The country is said to be uninhabited as far as 76° N. lat. but the Danish and Moravian settlements are chiefly in the S. W. extremity.

This country, in reality, is nothing more than a mass of rocks intermingled with immense blocks of ice, thus forming at once the image of chaos and of winter. Icy Peak, an enormous mass of ice, rises near the mouth of a river, and diffuses such a brilliancy through the air, that it is distinctly perceived at the distance of more than ten leagues. Icebergs, and an immense vault, give this edifice of crystal a most magic appearance. An uninterrupted chain of mountains traverses the part of Greenland with which we are acquainted. There are innumerable gulfs, but none of them advance towards the eastern coast. The three points called Stag's Horn, are described at sea at the distance of five-and-twenty leagues. The rocks are rent into fissures, which, in general, are perpendicular, and are rarely more than half a yard in breadth, and contain a great quantity of spar, quartz, talc, and garnets. The rocks are commonly composed of granite, clay slate, and potstone, arranged in vertical beds. The Greenland Museum at Copenhagen has received from this country a very rich mineral of copper ore, schistus of the nature of mica, a coarse marble, and serpentines, together with asbestos, amianthus, crystals, and black schorl. Greenland likewise furnishes us with a new and curious mineral, the fluete of alumina. A vast mine of sea-coal has been discovered in the island of Disco. Three hot springs are the only volcanic indications that have hitherto been observed. During the short season of summer, the air, which is very pure on the mainland, is obscured in the islands by fogs. The flitting glimmer of the aurora borealis, in some degree softens the gloomy horror of the polar night. What has been termed the smoke of ice, is a vapour which rises from the crevices of marine ice. The rare occurrence of rain, the small quantity of snow, and the intense degree of cold produced by the east-north-east wind, lead us to suspect that the most eastern parts of Greenland form a great archipelago, incumbered with perpetual ice, which for many centuries, has been piled together by the winds and currents.

There is some land that admits of cultivation; and probably barley might be made to grow in the southern part of the country. The mountains are covered with moss to the north, but the parts that have a southern exposure produce very good herbs, gooseberries, and other berries, in abundance, and a few little willows and birch. Not far from Julianshaal is a valley covered with birch; but the tallest of the trees are only eighteen feet high. Near the Danish colonies cabbages and turnips are cultivated.

The most remarkable animal of this region is the White Bear, the largest of his tribe. These animals are sometimes 12 feet in length and are distinguished for their tremendous ferocity. Sometimes they are seen on floating ice out at sea, and are often in this manner conveyed to Iceland. At sea they prey upon fish, seals, and the carcases of whales. On land they devour deer and other animals, yet they often feed upon berries. In winter they dig themselves dens under the snow or ice and sleep till the sun appears in spring. Among the animal kingdom we also meet with large hares, which are excellent eating, and afford a good fur; rein-deer of the American variety, great numbers of foxes, and large dogs, that howl instead of barking, and are employed by the Greenlanders in drawing their sledges. An immense number of aquatic birds live near the rivers, which abound with salmon.

Turbots and small herrings swarm in every direction in the sea. The natives have been supplied with nets, and now begin to experience their utility. In north or west Greenland, the Danes and natives go in companies to the whale-fishing; but this tumultuous, and, to the natives, far from lucrative occupation, spreads vice and misery through this district. The natives of the south confine themselves to hunting the seal. The flesh of this animal is their principal food; its skin furnishes them with dress, and at the same time they construct their boats of it; thread is made of its tendons, and its bladder is converted into bottles; its fat is sometimes used as a substitute for butter, and at other times for tallow; and even the blood itself is considered by the Greenlanders as excellent for making broth; in fact, he cannot possibly comprehend how any one can live without the sea-dog, which, to him, is like the bread-fruit tree to the Otahaitian, or wheat to the inhabitants of Europe.

The Walrus, or Morse, called also the Sea Cow, is very common in these parts. It is much larger than the seal and is generally found in company with that animal. Like the elephant the Walrus has two large ivory tusks in the upper jaw which weigh from 10 to 30 pounds each. They are hunted for their fat, and are sometimes encountered in herds of an hundred. When wounded they become exceedingly furious, and bite the lances of the hunters in pieces with their teeth. When in great numbers they will sometimes attack boats and attempt to overturn them.

The Greenland Company, established at Copenhagen, estimate its annual revenue at 104,000 rix-dollars, (20,000 to 25,000 pounds Sterling;) and the exportations alone have amounted to 50, or 100,000 rix-dollars, without including the produce of the whale fishery. The expenses of the company are estimated at 16,000 pounds Sterling.

The natives are of a very low stature, have long black hair, small eyes, a flat face, and a yellowish brown skin, evidently indicating them to be a branch of the Esquimaux or Samoïedes of America. This connexion is particularly proved by their language, which is also remarkable for the copiousness of its grammatical forms.

The Greenlanders have not preserved any positive trace of a communication with the Scandinavian colony, whose establishments they invaded and destroyed. The sun, they consider to be a deified female, and the moon, a man, conformably with the belief of the Goths, which differed from that of the other Scandinavians; but as we find a God called Lunus, or Men, among even the classical nations themselves, this analogy either proves too much or nothing. As to ourselves, we have, on the contrary, recognized in the Greenlanders, a crowd of characteristic circumstances, which demonstrate his connexion with the Esquimaux, even with those that live at the remotest distances from them. The fishing implements employed by the inhabitants of Russian America, among others, are made exactly like those of the Greenlanders. Both of these people, too, make use of the bladder of the sea-dog, distended with wind, and attached to the javelin with which they strike the whale, in order that it may thus serve to prevent the animal, when once he is wounded, from remaining any length of time plunged under water. A similar invention observed both at the eastern and western extremity of North America, must lead us unavoidably to infer that an habitual communication is kept up between those distant tribes. The little boats used by the inhabitants of Oonalaska, in Prince William's inlet, (the Tchougatchian Gulf of the Russians,) by the Esquimaux of Labrador and the Greenlanders, are all precisely of the same construction, and resemble a box formed of slight branches and covered on every side with the skin of the sea-dog. They are twelve feet long, but only a foot and a half wide. In the middle of the upper surface there is a hole surrounded by a wooden hoop, with a skin attached to it, which admits of being drawn together like a purse, by means of a thong. It is in this hole that the rower places himself. Supplied with a single oar, which is very thin, three or four feet long, and becoming broader at the two sides, the navigator, or to speak more correctly, the manfish, paddling rapidly to the right and left, advances in a straight line across the foaming waves in the midst of the tempest itself, without incurring more risk than the whales and phocæ of whom he is become the companion and rival. This invention, which was admired by Captain Cook, and is adopted in part by the Norwegian and Danish pilots, could not possibly have made its appearance by mere chance under exactly the same form, among all the tribes of the northern extremities of America. These tribes consequently, must have had the same common descent, and must long have communicated together.

The present character of the Greenlanders is an indelible mixture of good and bad qualities; while their attachments to their national customs, opposes the influence of foreign civilization. The Greenlanders bitterly accuse the Danes and other navigators of having brought among them the double scourge of small-pox and spirituous liquors. The present well regulated Danish administration follows a plan of colonization calculated for establishing order and happiness; but the ancient defects and modern vices of the Greenlanders present great obstacles to the system. Almost entirely destitute of every idea of religion and of law, our religious worship appears in their eyes, nothing but a useless ceremony, while they look upon our criminal punishments as an unjust abuse of power. The malefactor appears to them to be sufficiently punished, when in a public assembly, he is loaded with reproaches. The missionaries confess that the conversion of the Greenlanders advances slowly, and exerts but little influence over their moral ideas. For some years back however, the preaching of natives educated as missionaries, has been productive of a happy change. The Moravians have also succeeded in a remarkable manner in engaging the affections, and reforming the conduct of this simple people, who are gifted with considerable quickness of perception. The commercial administration, by introducing numerical calculation, and even paper money, have given them new notions with regard to property. In the southern part of the country, they have been taught to make barrels and construct boats. The name of their ancient divinity, Torngarsook, to whom they never offered any worship, is already forgotten as well as the malevolent goddess without a name, who was supposed to inhabit a palace at the bottom of the sea, guarded by terrific sea-dogs. Even a kind of philosophy has introduced itself among them, and various new opinions exist concerning a future state and the transmigration of souls. The freethinkers of Greenland will not admit the prevalent belief that there is a paradise, where the soul in a state of happy indolence, is nourished with the heads of sea-dogs. The priests and sorcerers, called Angchok, and the malevolent enchanters denominated Riseets, are daily losing their influence. Perhaps the period may not be far distant, when the sublime devotion of the virtuous Egede will meet with its reward, and a Christian and civilized people will at length inhabit this memorable colony, the most northern that the Europeans have ever established. A mild and pure glory will then recompense Denmark for the pecuniary sacrifices which this struggle with the elements has cost her, a struggle into which she has been drawn by a pious zeal, and the influence of historical recollections.

Green Mountains, a branch of the Apalachian chain in Vermont, extending through the state from N. to S. In the southern part they constitute a single range, but toward the centre of the state they divide into two branches and pass off separately into Canada. The eastern slope of the mountains is watered by the tributaries of the Connecticut, and the western slope by the streams falling into Lake Champlain. The highest point is Killington Peak, near Rutland, 3,924 feet above the sea. Camel's Rump, between Montpelier and Burlington, and Mansfield Mountain in the same neighbourhood, are each about 3,500 feet high. Throughout the state these mountains are from 10 to 15 miles in breadth. They are every where intersected with valleys, abounding in springs and streams, and exhibiting that perpetual verdure which has conferred upon them their name. Their sides are completely covered with woods, and their rocky summits are clad in a coat of green moss. The trees appear old, but small; they are all of the evergreen sort, pine, spruce, hemlock and fir, intermixed with shrubs and bushes. Vegetation decreases on approaching the top of the mountains; the trees diminish in size, and frequently terminate in a shrubbery of spruce and hemlock, two or three feet high, with branches so interwoven as to prevent all passage through them. Trees of this height with shrubs and vines producing berries, and a species of weed called winter grass, mixed with the moss of rocks, are all the vegetation which the mountains produce. The sides of the mountains are generally rugged and irregular; some of them have large apertures and caves. The thick, green moss which coats their tops, is so compact and firm, and lies in such extensive beds, as to reach from rock to rock, and they will sometimes bear the weight of a man without being broken through. These immense spongy masses receive the moisture supplied by the clouds and rain, and while a part of it runs down the sides of the mountain, much of it is absorbed, and penetrates the whole mass. In this manner, several of these mountains are continually wet on their tops, and have large marshy spots, which are the constant resort of water fowl during the warm season. The roads across them are frequently wet and miry, when the valleys below are dry.

The mountains exhibit but few rocky or sterile tracts, and afford generally excellent pasturage for sheep and cattle.

Greenock, the chief sea-port of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, at the mouth of the Clyde, with a small fort for the defence of the harbour. Here are several dry docks, and the building and rigging of ships is much followed. It has a great trade; and the fisheries, particularly for herrings, and the Newfoundland fishery, are carried on to a great extent. In 1801 the number of inhabitants was 17,458, and in 1821, 22,088. It is 24 miles W. by N. of Glasgow, of which it is the port. Long. 4. 47. W., lat. 55. 56. N.

Green River, a stream of Kentucky falling into the Ohio, about 250 m. in length.

Greensborough, p.t. Orleans Co. Vt. 30 m. N. E. Montpelier. Pop. 781. Also towns in Caroline Co. Maryland, Mecklenburg Co. Va., Guilford Co. N. C., Green Co. Ala., and Greene Co. Geo.

Greensburg, p.t. Westchester Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,195. Also towns in Westmoreland and Green Cos. Pa., Greene Co. Ken. and Decatur Co. Ind.

Greestead, a village in Essex, Eng. 1 m. W. of Ongir, remarkable for its little church, (built prior to the Conquest) the walls of which are formed of the trunks of trees.

Greenrille, a frontier county of the E. District of Virginia, bounded on the N. by the great Notaway river, and S. by North Carolina; superficies about 300 square miles. Pop. 7,117. Hicksford is the chief town.

Greenup, a frontier county, the extreme N. E. point of Kentucky, with a superficies of about 800 square miles. Pop. 5,553. Greenupsburg is the chief town.

Greenville, a district at the N. W. extremity of South Carolina; superficies about 600 square miles. Pop. 16,476. The chief town of the same name in the centre of the county is 95 m. W. N. W. of Columbia.

Greenville, p.t. Greene Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,565. Also towns and villages in Providence Co. R. I., Luzerne and Somerset Cos. Pa., Sussex Co. N. J., Augusta Co. Va., Pitt Co. N. C., Greenville and Darlington Districts, S. C., Greene Co. Tenn., Muhlenberg Co. Ken., Darke Co. Ohio, Floyd Co. Ind., Bond Co. Illinois, Jefferson Co. Mississippi and Butler Co. Alabama.

Greenwich, formerly a district town, but now an appendage to the British metropolis. It is seated in the county of Kent, on the S. bank of the Thames, 5 m. below London Bridge. It is celebrated for its hospital for wounded and decayed seamen of the national marine, which is one of the finest architectural edifices in the world. The buildings consist of four distinct piles, two along the bank of the river, with a noble terrace in front 800 feet in length; between these two piles is a lawn 270 feet wide; the two other piles are built behind, projecting into the square or lawn, so as to form a quadrangle with an opening in the centre, which is terminated by an elegant building more recently erected for a naval school; behind this on the summit of a hill, is the royal observatory, from whence the English mariners reckon their longitude: a beautiful colonnade adjoins the buildings in the interior of the quadrangle, and immediately contiguous is a spacious park most beautifully undulated and planted with trees, affording the most delightful promenades and interesting prospects, whilst the liberality and economy of the establishment is in every way worthy of the celebrity it has acquired, and the interest inspired by the beauty and magnificence of the edifice and its surrounding objects. Here was once a royal palace, in which Edward VI. died, and queen Mary and queen Elizabeth were born: it has been long pulled down, and on part of its site now stands the house belonging to the ranger of the park. Here is a college, for the maintenance of 20 decayed housekeepers; and another called Queen Elizabeth college. In 1799, the chapel of the hospital, the dining-hall, and eight wards were destroyed by fire; but the whole were soon rebuilt. The town is irregularly built, and with the exception of the church, which is a noble structure, and the hospital, has nothing to recommend it to particular notice. Since 1820, one or two new churches have been built, and the town generally has undergone some improvement, Pop. in 1801, 14,339, and in 1821, 20,712. See Blaekheath, and Deptford. The observatory is in the lat. of 50. 29. N.

Greenwich, p.t. Hampshire Co. Mass. Pop. 813. Also a town in Fairfield Co. Conn. Pop. 3,805. Also 2 towns in Kent Co. R. I. called East and West Greenwich. Pop. of the former 1,591; of the latter 1,817. Also a town in Washington Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,850, and towns in Gloucester and Cumberland Cos. N. J., Berks Co. Pa. and Charleston District S. C.

Greenwood, a township of Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 694. Also a town in Columbia Co. Pa.

Greensburg, p.v. Beaver Co. Pa.

Greystown, a village of Somerset Co. N. J.

Greiffen, a town of Switzerland, on a small lake of its name, 9 m. E. S. E. of Zurich.

Greiffenberg, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark, on the river Sernitz, 13 m. S. S. E. of Prenzlau, and 28 N. N. E. of Berlin.

Greiffenberg, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Jauer, with a fortress on a mountain. It is celebrated for its linen manufactures, and seated on the Queiss, 28 m. W. S. W. of Lignitz.

Greiffenhagen, a town of Further Pomerania, on the river Oder, 12 m. S. of Stettin.

Greifswalde. See Gripswald.

Grein, a town of Austria, on the Danube, 28 m. E. of Linz.

Greit. See Graitz.

Grenada, an island in the West Indies, the last of the Windward Caribbees, and 30 leagues N. W. of Tobago. It is 29 m. long, and 13 broad, finely wooded, and the soil suited to produce sugar, tobacco, and indigo. It was taken from the French in 1762, confirmed to the English in 1763, taken by the French in 1779, and restored to the English in 1783. In 1795, the French landed some troops, and caused an insurrection in this island, which was not finally quelled till June 1796. St. George is the capital.

Grenadillas, or Grenadines, a cluster of islands in the West Indies, dependent on Grenada, and situate between that island and St. Vincent. They are upwards of 20 in number, most of them fertile, and capable of producing cotton, coffee, indigo, and sugar. The most considerable is Cariacou.

Grenade, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne, seated at the junction of the Save with the Garonne, 17 m. N. W. of Toulouse. Pop. 3,925.

Gre noble, a city of France, capital of the department of Isere, and a bishop's see, with a fortified castle. The leather and gloves that are made here are highly esteemed. It is seated on the Isere, over which are two bridges to pass into the part called Perriere, a large street on the side of the river. It is the head quarters of the 7th military division, and seat of the Cour Royale for the department of the Upper Alps, Drome, and Isere; 300 m. S. S. E. of Paris, 60 from Lyons, and 100 due W. of Turin. Pop. in 1822, 23,602.

Gretna-Green, a village of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, near the mouth of the Esk, and on the borders of Cumberland. It has long been famous for the clandestine marriages of fugitive lovers from England, which are usually performed by two illiterate and drunken mechanics in the village, who have no form in the operation, excepting the entry of the name of the parties in a school-boy's copy-book. All their inquiries turn upon the length of the applicant's purse, that they may know how to regulate their demand; as they are not usually nice as to fees, any sum from half-a-crown to 100 guineas will be accepted, provided in all cases it is as much as they can get. It is 10 m. N. of Carlisle.

Greussen, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, on the river Helbe, 15 m. N. of Erfurt.

Greysville, p.v. Huntingdon Co. Pa.

Griffinsburg, p.v. Culpeper Co. Va.

Grimaud, a town of France, in the department of Var, 12 m. S.W. of Frejus.

Grimbergen, or Grumberghen, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, with an abbey and a castle, 6 m. N. of Brussels.

Grumma, or Grumna, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a trade in wool, linen, thread, and flannel, seated on the Mulda, 14 S. E. of Leipzig.

Grimmen, a town of Hither Pomerania, 16 m. S. of Stralsund.

Grimby, a borough in Lincolnshire, Eng. It has a large church, like a cathedral, and a good trade in coal and salt. The harbour, at the mouth of the Humber, has been improved. It is 35 m. N. E. of Lincoln, and 168 N. of London. It returns two members to parliament. Pop. in 1821, 3,064.

Grimshy, a town of Lincoln Co. Upper Canada.

Grindenvald, a village of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, seated among mountains, at the foot of a celebrated glacier, 5 m. S. E. of Thun.

Grindon, a village of Eng. in that part of Durham called Northainshire, 6 m. S. W. of Berwick. To the S. of it, at a place called Grindon Rigg, are 4 upright stone pillars, funeral monuments of the chieftains slain in a famous victory gained here over the Scots, in 1553, by the earl of Northumberland and his brother.

Grinstead, East, a borough in Sussex, Eng. Here is Sackville college, a large stone building, founded by the duke of Dorset, in 1616, for 24 aged persons of both sexes. It is seated on a hill, 20 m. N. of Lewes, and 29 S. of London. It returns two members to parliament.

Grinton, a mountainous and mineral parish in the north riding of Yorkshire, Eng. comprising the four townships of Grinton, Melbecks, Muker, and Reith, seated near the head waters of the Swale river. Pop. of the parish in 1820, 5,300. Grinton is 8 and Muker about 20 m. W. of Richmond.

Gripswald, or Griefcalde, a town of Hither Pomerania, with a good harbour, and a university. It is seated on the river Rik, which is navigable to the Baltic, 14 m. W. of Walgost, and 22 S. E. of Stralsund.

Grisons, a new canton of Switzerland, bounded on the S. by Milan and Venice, E. and N. by Tyrol, and W. by the cantons of Glaris, Uri, and Tessin. It formerly included the Valteline, and the counties of Chiavenna, and Bormio, now included in the Austrian dominions. The country was formerly divided into three leagues, namely, the Grey League, the League of God's House, and the League of the Ten Jurisdictions: each of them had a distinct internal government, and they were connected as one republic by an annual diet, held alternately at the towns of Coire, Hantz, and Davos. But in 1803, the constitution was changed by the French, and the country made an additional canton of Switzerland. The inhabitants, amounting to about 73,000 are partly Calvinists and partly Catholics; but the former are most numerous. The principal subsistence of the peasantry is by breeding oxen, most of which are sent to Milan. The capital is Coire. The Rhine and the Inn both have their source in the Grisons.

Grodno, the principal town, though not the capital, of Lithuania. It has the appearance of a decayed town, containing a mixture of wretched hovels, falling houses, and ruined palaces, with magnificent gateways, remains of its ancient splendour. A few habitations in good repair, make the contrast more striking. Here is a college and physic garden. In the new palace, built by Augustus III. the diets were sometimes held; particularly the last in 1793, which was compelled, at the point of the bayonet, to consent to the second partition of Poland; and here, in 1795, Stanislaus III. formally resigned his crown. Grodno is now subject to Russia. It is seated partly in a plain, on the river Niemen, and partly on a mountain, 140 m. N. E. of Warsaw. Long. 24. 25. E., lat. 53. 28. N. Pop. about 5,000.

Griswold, a township of New London Co. Conn. on the Thames, 5 m. below Norwich. Pop. 2,212.

Grohnde, a town of Hanover, near which is a monument of stone, erected in memory of a battle fought here in 1421. It is seated on the Weser, 9 m. S. of Hameln.

Groll, a small town of Holland, in Gelderland. A duty is collected here on all merchandise passing through it for Germany. It is seated on the Slink, 20 m. E. by S. of Zutphen.

Groindines, a seignior of Hampshire Co. U. C. on the St. Lawrence, 45 m. above Quebec.

Groningen, the most N. E. province of Holland, bounded on the E. by East Friesland, W. by Friesland, N. by the German Ocean, and S. by Drenthe. It is divided into 2 parts, called Groningen and Omelands. The excellency of this country consists in pastures which feed a great number of large horses.

Groningen, a city of Holland, capital of the province of the same name, with a citadel and university. It is seated on the rivers Hunse and Aa, and has a communication, by a canal, with a bay of the German Ocean, at the distance of 10 m. by which large quantities of butter are exported. The inhabitants are computed at 20,000. It is 96 m. N. E. of Amsterdam. Long. 6. 35. E., lat. 53. 12. N.

Grossa, an island in the gulf of Venice, near the coast of Dalmatia, 25 m. long and 2 broad. Long. 15. 7. E., lat. 44. 18. N.

Grossenhayn, or Hayn, a town of Upper Saxony, in Meissen, with manufactures of cotton and woolen cloths, seated on the Roder, 8 m. N. of Meissen.

Grossetto, a town of Tuscany, in the Siennese, with a castle, situate near the sea; 30 m. S. W. of Sienne.

Grotkau, a town of Silesia, in the district of Neisse. The forests round this town are the joint property of all the inhabitants. It is 16 m. N. N. E. of Neisse, and 30 S. of Breslau.

Groton, t. Grafton Co. N. H. 45 m. from Concord. Pop. 689. Also a p.t. Caledonia Co. Vt. 18 m. E. Montpelier. Pop. 836. Also a p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 35 N. W. Boston. Pop. 1,925. Also a p.t. New London Co. Conn. Pop. 4,750. Also a p.t. Tompkins Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,597, and a township in Huron Co. Ohio

Groce Hill, p.v. Warren Co. N. C.

Groeland, t. Livingston Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,703

Groyne. See Corunna.

Grubenhagen, a town and castle of Hanover. The castle is now in ruins. It is 7 m. S. by W. of Eimbeck.

Grubenhagen, a principality of Hanover, at the S. extremity of the circle of Lower Saxony, comprising a portion of the Hartz mountains. The principal towns are Osterode, Grund, Clausthal, Cellerfeld, &c.

Grumberg, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, where the kings of the Merolingian race and Charlemagne held their court. It is 10 m. E. of Giesen.

Gruberg, or Grumberg, a populous town of Silesia, in the principality of Glogau, surrounded with vineyards. Here is a manufacture of cloth, and a great trade in vinegar and dried fruits. It is 20 m. N. W. of Glogau.

Grunde, a town of Hanover, in the mountains of Hartz, 4 m. W. of Clausthal.

Gruboyan, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a trade in copper and lead, 16 m. S. by W. of Chemnitz.

Grüningen, a town in the canton of Zurich, Switzerland, with a castle on an elevated rock, 10 m. S. E. of Zurich.

Grunstadt, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, county of Leiningen, 22 m. N. N. W. of Spire, and 25 S. of Mentz.

Gruyeres, a town and bailiwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Frisburg, with a castle on a hill. It has a great trade in cheese, and is 15 m. S. W. of Frisburg.

Gryfe, a river of Scotland, which rises in the S. W. angle of Renfrewshire, runs over several precipices into the lower country, falling into the Black Cart, near the town of Paisley.

Guadalaxara, an interior province of Spain, forming the N. W. part of the kingdom of New Castile. Superfices 163 square leagues, with a pop in 1810, of 121,115. The chief town of the same name is seated on the banks of the river Henares, 30 m. N. E. of Madrid. It has a woolen manufacture. Pop. about 12,000.

Guadalaxara, one of the 15 intendencies or divisions of Mexico, bounded on the W. by the Pacific Ocean. Superfices 73,628 sq. m. with a pop. in 1793 of 630,500. It is intersected by the Santiago river, or Rio Grande. The chief town of the same name is seated on the W. bank of the Santiago, in the lat. of 21. 19. N., 70 m. N. of Chapala, and 275 N. W. of the city of Mexico. Pop. about 20,000.

Guadaloupe, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, with a celebrated convent; seated on a rivulet of the same name, 34 m. E. by N. of Truxillo.

Guadaloupe, one of the Leeward Carribean islands, in the West Indies, between Antigua and Dominica. It is divided into two parts by a strait, called the Salt River. At this place the land on each side is not above 4 m. broad, and by this strait the sea on the N. W. communicates with that on the S. E. The S. W. part is 60 m. long and 24 broad; and the N. E. part is much the same. The soil is exceedingly good, and well watered near the sea, by rivulets which fall from the mountains, and produces large quantities of sugar, cotton, and coffee. On this island is a volcano, called the mountain of Sulphur; and on its E. side are two mouths, which open into a pit of sulphur; the blacks who sell brimstone fetch it from this pit. The French settled on this island in 1635. It was taken by the English in 1759, but restored in 1763; again taken by the English in 1794, but evacuated the next year. The English again took it in 1810; and, in order to allure the Swedes into the late coalition against France, gave them this island. It was, however, by the consent of Sweden, restored to France in 1814. Basseterre, at the S. W. extremity of the island, is the capital. Lat. 16. N., 61. 48. W. long.

Guadalquivir, a river of Spain which rises in the S. part of New Castile, flows through the kingdoms of Jaen, Cordova, and Seville, and enters the bay of Cadiz at San Lucar, after a course of about 300 m.

Guadarrama, a town of Spain, in Old Castile. It has a great trade in cheese, and is seated on the Guadarrama, 25 m. N. W. of Madrid.

Guadiana, a river which rises in New Castile, in Spain, crosses Estremadura into Portugal, and, separating Algarve from Andalusia, enters the bay of Cadiz at Ayamonte.

Guadix, a town of Spain, in Granada, and a bishop's see. It contains three parishes and six convents, and is situate in a rich country, on a river of the same name, 36 m. E. N. E. of Granada.

Guam, the chief of the Ladrone Islands, in the Pacific Ocean, 100 m. in circumference. The Spaniards have a garrison here; but the inhabitants are almost all natives of the country, and reputed to be skilful in building boats. It abounds with excellent fruit, and has several good harbours. Umata is the capital. Long. 143. 15. E., lat. 13. 10. N.

Guamanga, a city of Peru, capital of an interior province of the same name. It is famous for its mines of silver. It is 180 m. E. S. E. of Lima. Long. 74. 5. W., lat. 13. 20. S. The province in 1795 contained 111,559 inhabitants, of whom 75,284 were native Indians, and 29,620 Mestizoos.

Guanahani, or Cat Island, one of the Bahama Islands, the first land of America, discovered by Columbus in 1491, and named by him St. Salvador. See Bahamas.

Guanoce, an interior town of Colombia, seated on a branch of the Apure River, 195 m. S. W. of Caracas, and 130 E. of Merida. Pop. estimated at 12,000.

Guanoato, a small interior province of Mexico, containing only 6,878 sq. m. but a pop. of 517, 300; it is the most densely populated part of the country, and is considered the most productive mineral district in Mexico. The chief city, of the same name, is seated on the eastern declivity of the Cordilleras, upwards of 6,800 feet above the level of the sea, in the lat. of 21. N., and 101. 55. of W. long., giving a mean distance from the city of Mexico of 190 geographical, or 214 British statute m. Pop. about 40,000, exclusive of about 30,000 more, employed in, or dependant on, the mines in its immediate vicinity.

Guancavelica, an interior province of Peru, E. of the maritime range of the Andes, extending about 190 m. from N. to S. between the lat. of 12. 20. and 14. 30. S., and is about 50 m. in mean breadth; it is thinly populated but has mines of quicksilver. The chief city, of the same name is seated in an elevated glen of the Andes, in the lat. of 13. 5. S., and 74. 35. of W. long., 170 m. S. E. of Lima.

Guanoce, a town of Peru, capital of a fruitful district of the same name. It is 172 m. N. N. E. of Lima.

Guarco. See Gagnete.

Guarda, a town of Portugal, in Beira, and a bishop's see. It is strong by nature and art, and has a stately cathedral, 138 m. N. E. of Lisbon. Guardafui. See Gardefan.

Guastalla, a fortified town of Italy, capital of a small duchy, included in that of Parma, with an ancient decayed castle. It is seated near the river Po, 19 m. N. E. of Parma.

Guasteca. See Panuco.

Guatemala, a province of South America, having about 400 m. of sea-coast on the shore of the Pacific Ocean, between the lat. of 14. and 17. N., being from 30 to 50 in breadth; it forms part of the chain of territory which connects the two great divisions of the western hemisphere, and was formerly with several other provinces included in the government of Mexico: but, since the subversion of Spanish authority in the western world, it has been formed into an independent republic, by the name of Central America. This republic is bounded N. by Chiapa and Yucatan in Mexico, and the bay of Honduras; E. by the Gulf of Nicaragua and Colombia, and S. and W. by the Pacific Ocean. It contains about 150,000 sq. m. It is divided into 5 states. Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica: these are subdivided into 45 districts.

The name of Guatemala, or more correctly Quauhitemallan, that is to say, the place full of trees, originally belonged to a single district. The Spaniards applied it to a Captain-Generalship, which bore the title of kingdom, and to one single province, comprehended within this kingdom.

The province of Guatemala, properly so called, extends from the confines of Guaxaca to those of Nicaragua, along the Pacific Ocean. The climate in general is hot and moist. The plains are fertile, both in American and European fruit of a delightful flavour. The maize produces 300 for one, as well as the cocoa. Indigo of a superior quality is produced there, and the annatto is cultivated. The forests with which the mountains are covered give shelter and food to animals that are still imperfectly known; and many nondescript shrubs are met with, from which they distil valuable balsams. Many ports on the South Sea afford this province great facility for carrying on an advantageous commerce with Peru, Terra Firma, and New Spain. The coasts abound with fish, but fishing is not followed with any considerable activity. They likewise neglect their silver mines, which are said to be rich; but they collect the sulphur that floats on the surface of several lakes. The whole province is filled with volcanoes, and exceedingly subject to earthquakes.

Guatemala is the capital, and is the see of an archbishop, and the seat of a University. The ancient city was destroyed on the 7th June, 1777, by one of the most tremendous earthquakes of which we have any record. From the 3d of June the agitated sea had risen from its bed; the two volcanoes adjacent to the town appeared to boil; one of them shot out torrents of water, the other, waves of blazing lava. On every side the earth was seen to gape in deep fissures. At length, after five days of unutterable anguish, the abyss opened, and the town, with all its riches, and 8,000 families, was instantly swallowed up, while torrents of mud and sulphur, rushing over the ruins, obliterated forever all vestiges of its former existence. The spot is now indicated by a frightful desert. The new city is built at the distance of four leagues from the site of the old town. We must not omit noticing Amatitan, or the town of letters, so called in consequence of the talent which the Indians, its inhabitants, displayed for carving hieroglyphics on the bark of trees. The district of Soconusco, of which the chief place is Guaguatlan, produces the best cocoa of all America; but very little of it is met with in commerce. In the district of Quasaltenango, very fine alum and sulphur are found. Solola produces the best figs in the kingdom, and a good deal of cotton is spun there. Two volcanoes are met with in the vicinity, the one called Atitan, and the other Solola. The district of Suchitepec, fertile in annatto, is subject to excessive rains.

In the forests very large trees are met with, from which a fragrant odour is diffused, and odiferous resin distils. Different varieties of gum, balsam, incense, and dragon's blood are also collected. Canes of a hundred feet long are found, and of such a thickness, that from one knot to another twenty-five pounds of water are contained. The bees of this region make a very liquid honey, which, after becoming acid, is made use of, they say, instead of orange juice. The forests are infested with wild animals, amongst which Alcedo distinguishes the Tapir or Danta. When enraged, the animal shows his teeth like the wild boar, and, it is asserted, cuts through the strongest tree. Its skin is six fingers thick, and when dried, resists every kind of weapon. Very large bears are also met with.

The province of Honduras is very little known. It extends from that of Vera Paz to that of Nicaragua. The first Spanish navigators perceiving a great number of pompions floating down the banks of the river, called it the Coast of Hibueras, that is to say, the Coast of Pompions. The most western part of this province contains the little Spanish towns of Comayagua and of Truxillo. The latter of these has been built near a lake, where floating islands, covered with large trees, move from place to place at the discretion of the wind. Near the river Sibun, caverns have been discovered, or rather immense subterranean galleries, which run under several mountains, and appear to have been hollowed out by ancient currents. The interior of the country is inhabited by a savage and ferocious nation, the Mosquito-Sambos. The coasts, especially near Cape Gracias a Dios, are occupied by another tribe of Indians, whom the English navigators denominate the Coast Mosquitoes.

This appellation originates in the insupportable cloud of mosquitoes, or stinging flies, that here torment the wretched inhabitants, and compel them to pass one part of the year in boats on the river. The Mosquito Indians of the coast, a tribe governed by aristocratic chiefs, do not reckon more than fifteen hundred warriors. We are unacquainted with their notions of religion; but, according to the older voyagers, they divided the year into eighteen months and twenty days; and they termed the months Iolar, that is to say, a moveable thing,—a very remarkable denomination, because it evidently approaches the word Iol, by which the ancient Scandinavians designated the feast that terminated the year,—a term apparently analogous with wheel or cycle. Similar divisions of the year into eighteen months prevailed among the Aztecs of Mexico. Each month consisted of twenty days, and five complementary days were added at the end of the year, which was denominated Cempohualihuitl, from cempohualli, twenty, and ihuitl, festival. The cazique of these Mosquitoes, who inhabit the coast between Black River and Cape Gracias a Dios, lately sold or transferred that territory to a person of the name of Gregor MacGregor, who had attained some notoriety in the late Colombian struggle for liberty.

According to the respectable testimony of Gomara, and almost all the accounts and maps that have been published, the great lake of Nicaragua, is covered with beautiful and populous islands, amongst which only one contains a volcano, named Omo that always continues burning; it has no outlet towards the South Sea; all its waters descending by the river St. John, in the direction of the North or Atlantic Sea. This river, the scene of Nelson's earliest exploits, forms about thirty fells before it reaches the marshy shores of the sea, where a pestilential air, and Indians distinguished alike for their perfidy of character, and the ferocity of their disposition, fill the most intrepid navigators with alarm. The lake, then, is situated on a plateau, but at what elevation? "The coast of Nicoya," says Dampier, "is low, and covered with shrubs. To reach San Leon de Nicaragua one must walk twenty miles across a flat country, covered with mangroves, pasture land, and plantations of the sugar cane." These remarks of a judicious observer appear to indicate that there is no considerable chain of mountains between the Lake of Nicaragua and the Pacific Ocean. The physical geography of this country is unquestionably possessed of great interest, and yet it is too largely neglected.

Among the numerous volcanoes of this country, that of Masaya, three leagues (Castilian) from Granada, and ten from Leon, appears to be the most considerable. Its crater, which is half a league in circumference, and 250 fathoms in depth, ejects neither cinders nor smoke. The matter, which is perpetually boiling within it, diffuses so intense a light through the air that it is visible at the distance of 20 leagues. So much, in fact, does it resemble gold in a state of fusion, that the first Spaniards actually supposed it to be this metal, the object of their anxious search; and stimulated by their avaricious temerity, vainly attempted to seize, with iron hooks, some of this very singular lava.

No mines have as yet been discovered in the province of Nicaragua; but it is fertile in every description of fruit, and abounds in large and small cattle, especially in mules and horses. They also carry on a great trade in cotton, honey, wax, aniseed, sugar, cochineal, cocoa, salt, fish, amber, turpentine, and petroleum, together with different balsams and medicinal drugs. The palm trees grow to a colossal size. Leon, the capital, is situated on the margin of a lake, which empties itself into the Nicaragua. Its inhabitants, rich, voluptuous, and indolent, derive but little advantage from the excellent port of Realajo, formed by a bay of the South Sea

The province of Costa Rica contains no mines, and hence it has been said that this name has been ironically applied to it; but its extensive forests of building timber, its rich pastures, and picturesque scenery, afford abundant reasons for this appellation. Cattle, and especially hogs, swarm here to an extraordinary degree. In the Gulf of Salinas the muscle yielding purple is caught.

Guatemala declared itself an independent state in 1823. The government bears a close resemblance to that of the United States. The Congress consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The executive are a President and Vice President chosen for 4 years. The government however is little more than nominal, the country having been lately in a perpetual state of turbulence and dissension. The population is about 1,800,000.

Guatemala, city, the capital of the above republic, commonly called Guatemala La Nueva, or New Guatemala, stands on a little stream called the Yucas flowing into the Pacific. It is in lat. 14. 40. N. and long. 91. 25. W. It is handsomely built, with regular streets and many elegant public buildings. It was greatly damaged in 1830 by an earthquake. Previous to that event it contained 40,000 inhabitants.

Guazaca, a province of the chain of territory now forming the republic of Guatemala, comprising about 25,000 square miles, extending from sea to sea. The chief city of the same name is seated on the banks of a river, which falls into the gulf of Mexico, in the lat. of 17. 15. N., and 96. 20. of W. long., 450 m. N. W. of the city of Guatemala.

Guyaquil, one of the 12 provinces of Colombia, according to the division of 1825, bordering on the Pacific Ocean, comprising the S. W. part of the republic. The capital or chief town of the same name, is seated on the W. bank of a river falling into a gulf or bay of the same name, about 20 m. from the sea. Guyaquil is the sea-port of Quito, from which it is distant about 150 m. S. S. W. The surrounding country produces an abundance of the finest cocoa, of which large quantities are exported to all parts of Europe. Lat 2 11. S. W. long. 79. 40. Pop. about 20,000.

Guayra la, or Lagaira, a sea-port of Colombia, on the shore of the Carribean sea, and in the new province of Venezuela. It is in lat. 10. 37. N., and 66. 58. of W. long., 7 m. N. of the city of Leon de Caracas, of which it is the sea-port; it exports large quantities of cocoa to Europe, and mules and cattle to the West India Islands; and although the harbour is inconvenient, the traffic is considerable. Pop. about 6,000.

Guben, a town of Lusatia, capital of a circle of its name, which yields great quantities of excellent red wine. It is seated on the Lubst near its conflux with the Neisse, 24 m. N. E. of Cotbus, and 68 S. E. of Berlin. Pop. about 6,000.

Guldensberg, a town of Germany, in Lower Hesse, 10 m. S. S. W. of Cassel.

Guarande, a town of France, in the department of Lower Loire, with a considerable trade in salt. It is 3 m. from the Atlantic, and 40 W. by N. of Nantes. Pop. 7,252.

Guercy, a town of France in the department of Ille and Vilaine, 20 m. E. S. E. of Rennes. Pop. 3,980.

Gucret, a town of France, capital of the department of Creuse. It is seated on the river Creuse, 35 m. N. E. of Limoges, and 190 S. by W. of Paris. Pop. 4,014.

Guernsey, an island in the English Channel, 35 m. S. W. of Cape la Hogue, a promontory of the N. coast of France. It formed part of the dukedom of Normandy; but Henry I. of England, annexed it to Great Britain, to which it has ever since continued an appendage, although the language, dress, manners, and form of government of the ancient Normans still continues. The island is about 36 m. in circumference, well defended by natural rocks; the surface is considerably varied, generally fertile, and breed a considerable number of small cattle. It is divided into 10 parishes, which in 1821 contained an aggregate population of 29,827. St. Peter's port, on the E. side of the island, in lat. 49. 33. N., and 2. 40. of W. long., is the chief place of the island, containing more than one half of the total population. The principal point of intercourse with England is Weymouth, from which it is distant 72 m.

Guernsey, an interior county in the E. part of Ohio, containing about 650 square m. It is intersected by Will's Creek, a branch of the Muskingum. The population, which in 1810 was only 3,651, in 1830 had increased to 18,036. Cambridge, the chief town, in the centre of the county, is 85 m. due E. of Columbus.

Guerta, or Huerta, a town of Spain in New Castile, 52 m. E. by S. of Madrid.

Guglingen, a town of Suabia in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, situate on the Zaber, 20 m. N. of Stuttgart.

Guiana, an extensive territory of South America, comprising the whole country between the two great rivers Amazon and Orinoco, extending W. from the Atlantic Ocean through 16 degrees of long. Prior to the war between England and France, which commenced in 1793, this extensive territory was divided between Portugal, Spain, France, and Holland; the Portuguese claimed the whole country lying N. of the Amazons, to about 1. 40. of N. lat. By a treaty in 1801, a line of demarcation was agreed upon between France and Portugal, this line extended from the island of Carpory in the lat. above mentioned, through about 8 degrees of long. From this line French Guiana, extends along the coast to the Maroni river, in the lat. of 5. 44. N., giving about 300 m. of sea-coast, but westward it is not more than 130 m. wide. Dutch Guiana, next extends along the coast from the river Maroni in 5. 44. of N. lat., and 53. 55. of W. long., to Cape Nassau, in 7. 34. N., and 58. 54. of W. long. giving about 360 m. of sea-coast, and a mean breadth of about 170 m.: and Spanish Guiana comprised the coast from the river Maroni, to the Delta of the Orinoco, and all the country W. of Dutch and French Guiana, as far as the 68 degree of W. long. Portuguese Guiana now forms part of the empire of Brazil. French Guiana surrendered to the English in 1809, but was restored at the peace of 1814: see Cayenne. The Dutch had formed four settlements upon their portion of the territory, viz. Surinam, Berbice, Demarara, and Essequibo, along the banks of four several rivers of those names, which also surrendered to the English during the war. At the peace of 1814, Surinam was restored to the Dutch, and all the rest confirmed to England by treaty. The greater portion of this vast territory is comprised of extensive swamps and low lands of unbounded fertility, of which various kinds of animals, reptiles, and insects, are the chief possessors, the human inhabitants being very limited except upon the rivers Surinam, and Demerara.

The coast, from its lowness, is subject in many places to inundations; the land, at the distance of several leagues from the sea, is deluged by the tides. The sailor loses sight of the capes or promontories at a short way from the shore; but ships can approach them without danger, for the distance may be ascertained with sufficient accuracy by means of the sounding line. The turbid appearance of the sea is owing to the great quantity of alluvial matter borne down by rivers. The mangrove grows on the low grounds, in which the sea water remains stagnant; several fens or marshes, occasioned by the inundations of rivers, are covered with reeds, that afford shelter to the cayman and different sorts of water fowl. The dry season lasts from the end of July to November, and the rainy season corresponds with the winter months in Europe, but the most violent rains fall sometimes in January and February; the weather is dry and agreeable during the month of March and the beginning of May; this period has, for that reason, been denominated the short summer. The whole of April and the latter part of May are subject to continued rains. The climate of Guiana is not liable to the excessive heat of the East Indies, Senegambia, or the Antilles.

It is well known that the trees which bear fruit during the whole of the year in this country, yield more abundant crops in particular seasons, as the orange, the lemon, the guava, the laurus persea, the sapota, the amiona and others, which grow only in cultivated lands. The trees in the woods and all those in a wild state bear fruit but once a year, and the greater number of them at a season that corresponds with our spring; the most remarkable of these trees are the grenadilla and different species of palms. The mango and other East Indian plants thrive in Guiana, but the fruits of Europe, with the exception of the grape, the fig and pomegranate, are not adapted to the climate. The first European settlers observed in this county three species of the coffee tree, the Coffea guyanensis, Coffea pariculata, and Coffea occidentalis; a fourth kind from Arabia was afterwards added by the colonists. Many aromatic plants were imported by the earlier settlers; the country produces in abundance cloves, cinnamon, and different sorts of pepper. The tree which produces the Cashew nut bears a considerable re semblance to the walnut, and the leaves have nearly the same scent. It bears a sort of apple at the end of which grows the Cashew nut, enclosed in two shells, between which is a native inflammable oil, so caustic as to blister the skin. The kernel has a fine flavour, and is used to give a pleasant taste to chocolate and many products of cookery. The cocoa tree grows spontaneously on the east of the Oyapok; indigo and vanilla are indigenous to the soil; manioc and cassada are considered the best alimentary plants; the potato, the igname, two kinds of millet and the tayove are also very nutritive.

The quadrupeds of Guiana are the same as those of Brazil and Paraguay. M. Bajon states, that the jaguar is smaller in this country than in any other part of America; he adds, that it can bring an ox to the ground, but that it is afraid of man, and never ventures to attack him. Stedman on the other hand observes, that these animals sometimes carry off negro women, and too frequently their children, while they are working in the fields. The cougar, or red tiger of Surinam is less than the jaguar, but resembles it in its habits, and is equally ferocious. The tiger-cat is a very beautiful animal of the same class; it is not much larger than the common cat, and of a yellow colour with annulated black spots; like the rest of its kind, it is lively, mischievous, and untameable. It is evident, from Stedman's account of the jaguaretta, that he supposes it to be different from the jaguar; but this opinion is contrary to the common one and to that of the most celebrated naturalists, who consider the jaguaretta to be the same animal as the jaguar. The ant bear is indigenous to the country; the two species, which are best known are the tamanda and the tamarois; the former is almost eight feet in length; it attacks the jaguar, and seldom leaves its hold without destroying it. The cancrophagus, or dog-crab, frequents the seashore and uses its feet very dexterously in drawing shell-fish out of their cavities. There are many species of monkeys in Guiana; the quata is, perhaps, the most remarkable from its likeness to man; a fanciful traveller takes notice of a striking resemblance between these animals and Indian old women. The quata has short ears, four fingers on its hands, and five toes on its feet; the extremity of its tail is of a spiral form, and enables it to suspend itself on the branches of trees. Some naturalists maintain that the orang-outang has been observed in Guiana, but this is by no means certain, and many well-informed travellers are of a different opinion. Three species of deer are said to be indigenous to the country, and one of these, (the cariacon), resembles the roe-buck in size and form. The agouti and paca are considered the best game in Guiana. The cabiai is an amphibious animal armed with strong tusks, and covered with bristles; it has been classed as a species of cavey on account of its not having a tail. The peccary or Mexican hog has an orifice on its back containing a fetid liquor not unlike musk, for which reason it has been called the porcus moschiferus; they go together in herds and sometimes lay waste orchards and cultivated fields. The Indians shoot them with poisoned arrows.

The boa, or, as it is called in the country, the aboma, is a large amphibious snake about forty feet in length, and four or five in circumference; it is indifferent as to its prey, and destroys, when hungry, any animal that comes within its reach; the negroes consider it excellent food, and its fat is converted into oil. The rattle snake and dip-sas are the most noxious reptiles in Guiana; the sting of the latter is not always fatal, but it produces fever accompanied with excessive thirst, from which circumstance it has derived its name; Guiana is besides infested with serpents, lizards, and alligators. Waterton the traveller has given us an account of his amusement in riding upon the back of one of these latter animals. Those that have visited Holland and Lower Holstein, may form an imperfect notion of the Dutch and British settlements in Guiana;—a vast plain covered with plantations, or enamelled with a rich verdure, bounded on one side by a dark ridge of impenetrable forests, and watered on the other by the azure billows of the ocean. This garden, between the sea and the desert, is intersected by a great many streams confined by dikes, and separated from each other by excellent roads or navigable canals. Each habitation seems to be a village, from the number of small buildings attached to it, and the natural beauties of the country form a striking contrast with its rich cultivation. The revolted negroes have established several petty republics in the interior; although the inhabitants of these states go naked, they live in abundance. They make their butter from the fat of the palm-tree worm, and extract good oil from the pistachio nut. They are not only skilled in the chase, but are expert fishermen, and acquainted with the art of curing their provisions. Like the Hindoos, they obtain salt from the ashes of the palm-tree: and if a sufficient quantity of that article cannot be procured, they season their food with red pepper. The palm-tree furnishes them with plenty of wine; their fields are covered with rice, manioc, ignames and plantains. The manicole supplies them with all the materials of which their huts are constructed; their cups of gourds are made from the calabash tree, and a sort of net-work woven by an insect, serves them for hats. The nebes or banes, so common in the forests, are converted into cordage.

Guienne, a late province of France, 220 m. long and 85 broad, on the S. W. coast, of which Bordeaux was the capital. It now forms the department of Gironde, Lot and Garonne, Dordogne, Lot, and Aveyron.

Guildford, a borough in Surry, Eng. It is seated on the Wey, on the side of a hill, and had a castle and a palace, now in ruins; here is also part of a monastery, which is still occupied. The summer assizes are alternately held here and at Croydon; but the election of members for the county is always held here. It is a well built town, with two churches, and an elegant town hall. The Weir is navigable to the Thames, and the trade in timber and corn is considerable. It is 23 m. W. S. W. of Croydon, and 29 S. W. of London. It returns two members to parliament. Pop. 3,161.

Guilford, an interior county of North Carolina, a sq. of about 25 m. each way; it is well irrigated by the head waters of Cape Fear river. Pop. 15,735. Greensborough is the chief town.

Guilford, p.t. Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 655. Also a p.t. Strafford Co. N. H. Pop. 1,827. Also a p.t. of Connecticut, in New Haven county, situate on a bay in Long Island Sound, 17 m. E. by S. of New Haven. Pop. 2,344. Also a p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,634. Also townships in Franklin Co. Pa. and Medina Co. Ohio.

Guillac, or Gaillac, a town of France, seated on the N. bank of the river Tarn, in the department of Tarn; it is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 7,310. It is 35 m. N. E. of Toulouse, and 15 W. by S. of Alby.

Guimaraens, a town of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, which has formerly been the residence of its kings. It is divided into the old and new town, the former situate on an eminence surrounded by walls. Here is a manufacture of linen in high estimation. The public buildings are magnificent, and the collegiate church is said to be founded on the ruins of a temple of Ceres. It is 10 m. S. E. of Braga and 25 N. E. of Oporto.

Guinea, Upper, an extensive region of North Africa, comprising about 1,500 m. of sea coast, from Cape Mesurado, in the lat. of 6. 26. N., and 10. 39. of W. long., to the Calabar river, in 4. 10. N., and 6. 42. of E. long., and from thence S. to the equator; of the interior parts of this country either N. or S. very little is known. The coast of Upper Guinea, from Cape Mesurado, to Cape Palmas, a range of 240 m., is called the Grain Coast, from the vast quantity of grains of paradise or Guinea pepper which it was found to produce on first being visited by Europeans; further E. for upwards of 200 m. is called the Tooth or Ivory Coast, from the large quantity of fine elephants teeth which are brought to its markets; eastward of the Ivory Coast to the meridional line, is called the Gold Coast, from the gold dust which is found in its rivers; and eastward of the meridional line is called the Slave Coast, from the extensive traffic in slaves which was formerly carried on from thence by the English, Spaniards, French and Americans, to the West Indies and America. This extensive tract of territory is occupied by various tribes and communities of negroes; the most numerous are the Fantees who occupy the coast from Cape Mesurado to the meridional line; from a long continued intercourse with Europeans, the Fantees have acquired strong trading habits, and among them most of the trading nations of Europe have formed settlements protected by forts. In the rear of the Fantees are the Ashantees, who, although they appear to be one people, live in continued hostility with each other. North of the Ashantees, is a tribe called the Chambas, who are represented as an arable and industrious people, diligent in the pursuit of agriculture; and it was from this peaceful and social occupation from which the Ashantees were wont to drag the people to the coast as slaves, when that traffic was carried on by the English. The cessation of this traffic seems to be the cause of the revenge of the Ashantees who acted as robbers and drovers to the inhabitants on the coast, their enmity being extended to the English whom they regard as the cause of the cessation; and in 1823 and 1826, they waged for a time successful war against the discipline and skill of the British arms. The principal towns or trading stations on this part of the coast, westward of the meridional line, are Cape Coast Castle, Annamaboe, and Anconah: eastward of the meridional line is the kingdom of Dahomey, the principal town of which, on the coast, is Griwee, and in the interior Abomey, distant about 90 m. The people of Dahomey are represented as fine looking and industrious, their fields being productive in maize, legumes, and yams, and their pastures well stocked with sheep, goats, and cattle. Great ravages are frequently committed among them by leopards and hyenas, whilst the termites or white ants, insidiously intrude in such vast numbers into the habitations of the people, as to commit the most destructive ravages before resistance can be applied; there have been instances of their devouring an ox in a single night, and persons debilitated by disease are liable to be attacked by them. Another remarkable animal of Dahomey is a bat of enormous size; they suspend themselves in the thousands by their claws, to the branches of trees, immediately contiguous to the habitations of the people. Eastward of Dahomey on the banks of a river about 25 m. from the sea, is the town of Adrah, with a pop. of from 7 to 10,000, which seems an independent or free town under the protection of the Ihos, a powerful and numerous people, whose country extends 180 to 300 m. into the interior. The country around Adrah is represented as exceedingly beautiful and productive in every variety of tropical vegetation; further east is the town of Lagos, the country to the northward of which is inhabited by the Jaboos, a very industrious people, who manufacture great quantities of cotton cloth, and whose country is well cultivated, and rich in all the products of agriculture; east of the Jaboos is the kingdom of Benin, supposed to be very extensive, the capital of the same name is about 40 m. from the coast, the sea-port being Gatto; further east, extending to the 10th degree of longitude, are the kingdoms of Warri, and Old New Calabar. It was from this part of the coast from whence the most active slave trade was carried on by the English, a people from the interior called the Heebas, being the principal victims, and the town of Bonny the principal market. Since the abandonment of this traffic in slaves by the English, the inhabitants of this coast have directed their attention to agriculture and commerce, and now export large quantities of palm oil, ivory and dye woods. From Old Calabar the coast extends to the south, which is commonly called Lower Guinea.

Guinea, Lower, consists of Biafra, Calbonga, Lopez, Malemba, Loango, Congo, Benguela, &c. &c., it is from this part of the coast, from whence the Brazilians still continue to draw 30 or 40,000 slaves annually. Malemba, in the lat. of 5. 24. S., and 12. 20. of E. long., is represented as having a very salubrious climate, and as affording the most favourable spot on the whole western coast of Africa for the residence of Europeans. Off this coast, N. of the equator, are the islands of Fernando, Pó, Princes, and St. Thomas, which also afford favourable situations, from whence to dispense the blessings of civilization and social order. The Pintado, or Guinea Hen, now well known and domesticated in Europe and America, was originally from this country and is still found wild in various parts.

All the rivers are filled with crocodiles, called by some travellers caymans; they are generally 25 feet long, according to Cavazzi; there are some also which never enter the water, but hunt fowls, sheep, and she-goats. In another place, however, he states, that there are lizards which differ very little from crocodiles. Camelions are found in great numbers, and are considered very venomous. The flying lizard, or palm-rat, a pretty little animal, is an object of religious worship; the rich preserve it with great care, and exhibit it to the adoration of the people, who offer it presents. Frogs and toads are of an enormous size.

Monstrous serpents infest these inhospitable countries. The boa, or boma, in length from 25 to 30 feet, and 5 in thickness, darts from trees upon men and animals, swallowing them at once, and in its turn becomes a prey to the negroes, who attack it during its digestion, or burn it by setting fire to the woods at the termination of the rains. It wages an interminable war against the crocodiles. The bite of another species of serpent is mortal within 24 hours. Travellers who are fond of the marvellous, represent it as blind, and describe it with 2 heads; they mean the amphisbena.

The mamba, as thick as a man's thigh, is 20 feet long, and very nimble. It instinctively chases the n'damba, and devours it whole and alive. This last is only an ell long, with a wide and flat head like the viper, and the skin beautifully spotted; its poison is very subtle. The n'bambi, is one of the most venomous; is with difficulty distinguished from the trees themselves, the trunks of which it entwines, lying in wait for its prey. It is reported that the touch only of the leata, a variegated viper, is followed by death, but that the bite of the animal is its antidote. The country swarms with scorpions and centipedes; the former often creep into houses and books.

The fleas, bugs, and flies of Europe, are not found in Guinea; there are, however, gnats and mosquitoes in abundance, which form one of the plagues of the country. The sting of the barzo, of the same size as our gadfly is said to be mortal. Different species of very formidable ants infest both men and animals. Malefactors, who are sometimes bound and exposed to them, are consumed to the bones in one day. The insondi or insongongi, enter the trunk of elephants, and cause them to die in extreme madness. The sting of the inzeni, which are a black and very large species, produces violent pains for some hours. The salale (ants,) small, round, red, and white, are the most dangerous; they insinuate themselves every where, and destroy linen, merchandise, furniture, and even houses, the wood work of which they hollow out, leaving nothing but an external shell. According to Grandpre, they have the instinct to fill up with clay the stakes which support the houses, to prevent their fall. Fire alone, and marble, can resist their devouring teeth; but furniture may be secured by placing the feet in pans of water.

In a country so infested with noisome and destructive insects, it is pleasant to know that one, at least, of considerable utility exists; it is a scabæus, of the size of a cockchafer, which contributes essentially to the salubrity of the atmosphere, by making deep holes, and burying in them all impure and corruptible matters under ground; it is the more valuable in consequence of its wonderful fecundity. Numberless swarms of bees wander in the forests, occupying the hollows of trees,—and it is only necessary to drive them away by lighting fires under them, and thus take their honey. Grasshoppers are esteemed as food by the natives, and are not despised even by Europeans.

The ostrich and peacock are esteemed by the negroes. In Angola, the king has reserved the sole privilege of keeping peacocks. There are both brown and red partridges, which have the peculiarity of perching upon trees. The quail, pheasant, thrush, the widow and cardinal birds are found in abundance. The cuckoo differs from ours in its note. The Cuculus indicator, found in every part of the torrid zone, here bears the name of sengo. The parrot varies much as to size, colour, and voice. Very different from those we see in cages; strong, nimble, and bold, they fly with great rapidity, and are very formidable to other birds, which they attack, and lacerate most unmercifully in the combat.

The different species of the turtle doves, pigeons, fowls, ducks, and geese of this country are not well distinguished. The idle disposition of the natives has never thought of profiting by the use of the eggs of fowls in domestic economy. The hen, left to herself, deposits her eggs where she pleases, and runs undisturbed about the fields with her chickens in search of food. Among the fisher birds, is the pelican, the puffin, and gulls of every variety. The skin of the pelican, applied to the stomach, is said to restore its vigour.

It is astonishing to behold the immense number of eagles, vultures, falcons, hawks, and other birds of prey, which hover over the woods when set on fire by the negroes, and snatch from the midst of the flames quadrupeds and serpents half roasted. According to the report of travellers, who have given a very superficial account of birds, the number of owls, screech owls, and bats, is also considerable.

Among the quadrupeds, the hippopotamus affords the negroes an agreeable dish; which, on meagre days, is not unacceptable to Europeans.

The wild boar (engalli), of which there are several varieties, is a scourge to the country. The hog, introduced by the Portuguese, is less remarkable for its size than for the goodness of its flesh. The blacks rear a few guinea-pigs. Though originally a native of hot climates, this animal lives and breeds in temperate and cold countries. Its skin is of little value, and the flesh although sometimes eaten, is indifferent food. They are so cleanly that much of their time is spent in licking and smoothing each other's fur. They feed on all sorts of herbs, especially on parsley, which they prefer even to bran, flour or bread. They are also exceedingly fond of apples and fruits. Like the rabbit they eat precipitately; little at a time, but very often. They are very prolific and multiply astonishingly. A single couple will produce one thousand in a year. The use of the horse, the ass, and the mule is a nullity to the negro, who dares not even venture to mount them. Whether negroes or Portuguese, the inhabitants find it preferable to be carried about in hammocks.

Guinea, New, or Papua, an island of the South Pacific Ocean, to the N. of New-Holland, from which it is separated by Endeavour Strait, it is next in size to New-Holland, extending S. E. from the equator, to 12. S. lat., and from 131. to 153. E. long., a length of more than 1,200 miles, by a medial breadth of perhaps 300; but the coasts of the eastern part are far from being completely investigated. The northern part is said to have been discovered by the Spaniards, in 1528, who had sailed from Mexico to explore the Spice Islands. The coasts are generally lofty; and in the interior, mountain rises above mountain; but the whole appears covered with such luxuriance of wood and herbage, as can scarcely be conceived. The cocoa, sago, bread-fruit, and plantain tree, beside most of the trees, shrubs, and plants, common to the islands in the South Pacific Ocean, are found here in great perfection. This island is the chosen residence of the singular birds of paradise, which breed here during the wet monsoon, and in the dry migrate in flocks westward, to the smaller islands, particularly Arroo. Here are also elegant parrots; and pigeons that almost equal a turkey in size. The inhabitants of the northern part are called Papous: whence the name of the country. They seem to have the true Malay complexion and features; but in general are of horrible appearance, and great ferocity. Their language and habitations resemble those of Borneo, &c. On the west the women seem the most industrious in making mats, and pots of clay, which they afterward burn with dry grass or brushwood; and they even wield the axe, while the men are indolent, or engaged in the chase of wild hogs. In the interior is a race called Haraforus, who live in trees, which they ascend by a notched pole, drawing it after them to prevent surprise. On this extensive territory, so favoured by nature, there is no European settlement. The chief commerce is with the Malays and Chinese, from whom they purchase blue and red cloth, axes, knives, and other instruments. Their returns are ambergris, tortoise-shell, small pearls, birds of paradise, and other birds, which the Papuans dry with great skill. Some slaves are also exported, probably captives taken in intestine wars.

It consists of four principal streets, which intersect each other at nearly right angles, and has a considerable manufacture of coarse woolen cloth. Part of a monastery here is occupied as a parish church, which is a large and venerable building. It has a town house and county hall; there are also two bridges over the Tyne. The site of the ancient abbey of Haddington is about a mile E. of the town, founded in 1178. In conjunction with Dunbar, North Berwick, Jedburgh, and Lauder, it sends a member to parliament. Here the celebrated John Knox was born.

Haddingtonshire, or East Lothian, of which the preceding is the capital, a county of Scotland, 25 m. long and 15 where broadest; bounded on the W. by Edinburghshire, N. by the Frith of Forth, E. by the German Ocean, and S. by Berwickshire, and comprises an extent of about 297 sq. m. It is divided into 24 parishes, and contained in 1801, a pop. of 29,686, and in 1821, 35,127. The soil is in many places doubly productive; rich crops are raised on the surface, and mines of coal are inexhaustible. The southern part is mountainous, comprehending the north side of Lammermuir hills; but these high grounds feed many sheep. It is intersected by numerous streams, but the principal river is the Tyne. The chief towns are the three royal burghs of Haddington, North Berwick, and Dunbar.

Hambledon, a town in Hampshire, Eng. 15 m. S. E. of Winchester.

Hamburg, a free and imperial city of Germany, in Lower Saxony, seated on the north bank of the Elbe, about 55 m. from its mouth consisting of the old and new town; both nearly of an equal size. Most of the houses are built after the manner of the Dutch, and richly furnished within. The principal streets of the old town have long and broad canals, which are filled by the tide. It is seated on the river Elbe and Alster, and the latter, a tributary stream of the Elbe, before it enters the town by sluices, forms a fine basin. Here is a celebrated college, an arsenal, a bank, and a handsome exchange. The established religion is Lutheran, but all denominations are tolerated. Beside the five principal churches, there are eleven smaller ones for particular occasions, some of which belong to hospitals of which there are a great number. It has a library containing about 100,000 volumes. The cathedral of Our Lady is a very fine structure. The city is well fortified, and on the ramparts are handsome walks, planted with rows of trees. On the east is the suburb of St. George, and on the west the Hamburger Berg. Hamburg, from its situation, has all possible advantages for foreign and domestic trade; particularly from its communication, by the Elbe, with some of the principal navigable rivers of Germany; and hence it is one of the most commercial places in Europe. The number of vessels that frequent its port is about 2,000. It is distinguished for its sugar-refinery, and it has manufactures of cotton stockings, gold and silver lace, silk, linen, handkerchiefs, sail-cloths, thread, ribands, and velvets. The commerce however, received a severe shock in 1806; and since that the city itself has been almost reduced to ruin. Previous to the year 1806, this city became the depot of all the continental commerce, and numbers of merchants flocked here from every part of Europe, bringing their property along with them, as to a place free from military sway, and secure from the warlike commotions which then agitated Europe; but after the defeat of the Prussians at the battle of Jena, the French took possession of it, and afterwards annexed it to the empire. In 1813, on the advance of the Russians into Germany, the French evacuated the town, and the Russians immediately entered. In May following, the French laid siege to it for more than a month, when the Russians finding it impossible to defend it any longer, retired. The French, on re-entering, began to strengthen the fortification; and after the battle of Leipzig, the commander, marshal Davoust, hearing of the approach of the allies, made preparations for a long siege. For this purpose he destroyed the suburbs and gardens; and expelled all the inhabitants who were not able to provide provisions for six months. On the restoration of the Bourbons, however, the French garrison was withdrawn, and the place delivered up to the allies in May, 1814; since which it has recovered its former independence and activity. This city suffered much from the pestilential cholera in the autumn of 1831. It is 55 m. N. E. of Bremen, and 40 S. W. of Lubeck. Pop. about 115,000. Lat. 53. 84. long. 9. 58.

Hanover, a territory in the N. of Germany, bounded on the N. E. by the river Elbe, N.W. by the German Ocean, S.W. by Dutch Friesland and Prussian Westphalia, and S. E. by Saxony. Since 1815 it has been divided into the provinces of Calenberg, Gottingen, Luneburg, Hoya and Diepholtz, Hildesheim, Osnaburg, Verden, Duchy of Bremen, Bentheim, East Friesland, Lingen, and the lordship of Meppen. The chief towns are, Hanover the capital, Embden, Hildesheim, Luneburg, Osnaburg, Gottingen, Zell, Clausthall, Goslar, Einbeck, and Hameln. In the S. is the mountainous tract of the Hartz, covered with forests, and with the exception of which the whole country is a vast plain. (See article Hartz). Towards the N. are numerous barren heaths; but the valleys in the S. are very fertile. This country abounds in extensive mines of silver, iron, copper and lead. The iron mines are the most valuable, and bring annually to the revenue about £115,000 sterling. The principal rivers are, the Elbe, the Weser, and the Embs with their tributary streams, and the chief lakes, Steinheim and Dummer.

The corn cultivated is much the same as in Britain. The extensive heaths of Luneburg produce honey annually to the amount of £40,000. The chief manufactures are thread, linen, woollens, paper, and glass. The exports are linen, iron, copper, timber, horses, and black cattle. The imports are linen, broadcloth, silk and jewelry.

The revenue of Hanover is about £1,000,000. The prevailing religion is the Lutheran; but all denominations are tolerated. The Catholics amount to 150,000, and the Calvinists to 40,000. In every village elementary schools are established, and in more populous places academies, or high schools, which are well conducted, as well as the university of Gottingen. The frankness, simplicity and hospitality, mentioned by Tacitus as characteristic of the ancient Germans, is still a prominent feature in the manners of the Hanoverians, particularly the inhabitants of the heaths.

Hanover though under the government of Great Britain for more than a century, has undergone no political incorporation. At the diet of Germany, the king of Hanover occupies the fifth rank, and has four votes at the general assembly. The king's power is limited, having a counterpoise in the nobility of Wolfenbittel, the heads of the church and the deputies of the towns. The only order of knighthood, is that of the Guelph, instituted in 1815.

Hanover was taken possession of by the king of Prussia in 1801, and invaded by Bonaparte in 1803, and in 1806 partly ceded to the Prussians. But on the expulsion of the French in 1813, the whole electorate was restored to the king of Great Britain; and the electoral office having been annulled, he assumed, in 1815, the title of king of Hanover. Population of the whole territory about 1,300,000, of whom about 8,000 are Jews.

Hanoever, a city of Germany, and capital of the above kingdom. It is built in the form of a half moon, and divided by the river Leine into the old and new town. The old town presents an antiquated appearance, but the buildings in the new town are in a better style. Hanover contains a considerable number of public buildings, among which are the elector's palace, and the public library; the latter founded by Leibnitz, to whom an elegant monument has been erected in the town. There are five Lutheran churches, besides the chapels of the Calvinists and Catholics, and a Jewish synagogue. There are small manufactures of gold and silver lace, printing of cotton, linen, brewing, vinegar, &c. Pop. 25,000. 41 m. W. by N. Brunswick, and 154 W. of Berlin.

Hanse Towns, the name of certain free towns of Germany, which, being infested with pirates and robbers, entered into a mutual league for their protection. This association is supposed to have continued from the 13th to the 16th century. It consisted at first of only two towns, but it so increased in strength and reputation, that at last it consisted of 66 cities. Having at length proclaimed war against Woldemar, king of Denmark, with 40 ships and 12,000 troops, several merchants were ordered by the princes of their respective kingdoms, to withdraw their effects, and the association for the most part was dissolved. Several towns in Germany still retain the name, though the laws by which they are governed are annulled.

Hartford enjoys a considerable commerce with Boston, New York and the southern cities. The bookselling trade is carried on here extensively, and there is much inland traffic with the towns on the Connecticut and in the neighbourhood. On the opposite bank of the river is East Hartford which is connected with the city by a bridge. The inhabitants point out to the stranger an ancient oak tree in the southern part of the city which bears the name of the Charter Oak, from the following circumstance. In 1686 Sir Edmund Andros was sent by James II. to seize the charters of the New-England colonies. On arriving at Hartford he convened the legislature and declared his mission. Delays were practised till evening, when the instrument was brought into the hall and laid upon the table, but before Andros could lay his hand upon it, a signal was given and all the lights were immediately overturned. When they were re-lighted the charter was no-where to be found. It had been secretly conveyed away and hidden in the tree above mentioned, where it remained safely till the deposition of Andros and the accession of King William III.

It is seated near the Bristol channel, on a promontory called Hartland Point, 28 m. W. S. W. of Barnstaple, and 217 W. by S. of London. Lat. of the point 55. 1., long. 4. 30.

Hartlepool, a sea-port of Eng. in the county of Durham, about 6 m. N. of the mouth of the Tees. In the vicinity are coal mines, and a large flour manufacture. It is seated on the German Ocean, partly surrounded by rocks and hills, 19 m. E. S. E. of Durham, and 258 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 10. W., lat. 54. 41. N.

Hartley, a sea port in Northumberland, Eng. 6 m. N. W. of Tynemouth. Its prosperity is chiefly owing to the mineral productions of the neighbourhood. A haven has been constructed half a mile to the N. whence coal is shipped to London; and a canal is cut through a solid rock to the harbour. Here are also large salt, coppers, and glass works. About a mile to the N. W. stands Seaton Delaval, a magnificent and modern structure, equalled by few in the kingdom, the interior of which was destroyed by fire a few years ago.

Hartsille, p.v. Bucks Co. Pa. Also a p.v. Sumner Co. Tenn.

Hartwick, p.t. Otsego Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,772.

Hartz, a mountainous tract lying chiefly in the S. of Hanover, extending from Goslar to Hartzgerode, 70 m. long, and 20 broad. It is part of the ancient Sylva Hercynia, and still covered with large forests, the timber of which is of great importance in supplying the numerous mines, and forges with fuel. (See Hanover.) There are many natural curiosities in the Hartz. The caverns of Scharfeld and Baumann are the most interesting. The magnetic rocks of Ilsestein, and the Brocken or Blocksberg mountain also deserves notice, the latter of which commands a prospect of about 8,000 sq. m.

Hartzgerode, or Hartzgerode, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt-Bernburg, situate near the Hartz mountains. It has a mine-office and a castle, and is 23 m. S. W. of Brenburg. Pop. about 1,800.

Harvard, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. Pop. 1,601.

Harvard University. See Cambridge.

Harwich, p.t. Barnstable Co. Mass., on Barnstable Bay. Pop. 2,464.

Harwich, a sea-port and borough on the coast of Essex, Eng. It has a capacious harbour, in which a great number of the largest ships may anchor, and a convenient dock for the building of men of war. Much company resort hither for the purpose of sea-bathing, and it is the principal place of embarkation for Holland and Germany. The entrance into the harbour is defended by a battery and Langard Fort. The town is seated on a tongue of land, opposite the united mouths of the Stour and Orwell, which are navigable 12 m. above the town, 42 m. E. by N. of Chelmsford, and 17 E. N. E. of London. Long. 1. 13. E., lat. 51. 56. N. Pop. about 4,010.

Harwinton, p.t. Litchfield Co. Conn. Pop. 1,516.

Haslemere, a borough in Surrey, Eng. 12 m. S. W. of Guildford, and 42 of London. It sends two members to parliament. Pop. in 1821, about 880.

Hastingsden, a town in Lancashire, Eng. with considerable manufactures of linen, woolen, and cotton. It is 16 m. N. by W. of Manchester, and 204 N. N. W. of London.

Hasselt, a fortified town of Holland, in Overryssel, seated on the Vecht, 6 m. N. of Zwoll.

Hasselt, is also the name of a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, 15 m. W. N. W. of Mestricht. Pop. about 6,000.

Hassera, or Asorghar, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, province of Candeish, 20 m. N. of Burhampoor.

Hassfurt, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Wurtzburg, on the N. E. bank of the river Maine, 8 m. E. of Schweinfurt. Pop. about 1,500.

Hasslach, a town of Suabia, in the Brisgau, on the river Kintzig, 14 m. S. S. E. of Gengenbach, 20 N. E. of Friburg.

Hastenbeck, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick, near which the French gained a victory over the duke of Cumberland, in 1757. It is 5 m. S. E. of Hamelin.

Hastings, a borough on the eastern extremity of Sussex, Eng. It is one of the Cinque Ports, and had once a castle, now in ruins. The harbour, formerly of much consequence, is now only an indifferent road for small vessels. The town is commanded by a strong fort, has two churches, and is a fashionable watering place, which is now the chief source of its prosperity. In 1066, a bloody battle was fought here, between Harold II. of England, and William, duke of Normandy, in which the former lost his life and kingdom. Hastings sends two members to parliament, and is seated between a high cliff towards the sea, and a high hill towards the land side, 24 m. of Lewes, and 64 S. S. E. of London. Long. 0. 38. E., lat. 50. 52. N.

Hathorough, p.v. Montgomery Co. Pa.

Hatchersville, p.v. Chesterfield Co. Va.

Hatchee, p.v. Onslow Co. N. C. Also a township in Montgomery Co. Pa.

Hatchy, a tributary stream of the Mississippi, which it joins in Tennessee.

Hatfield, p.t. Hampshire Co. Mass. on the W. side of the Connecticut, nearly opposite Hadley, to which place there is a ferry. It is 5 m. of Northampton. Pop. 893.

Hatfield, a town in Hertfordshire, Eng. It formerly belonged to the bishop of Ely, in whose palace Elizabeth resided, and was thence conducted, on the death of Mary, to ascend the throne. She procured the alienation of this manor; and James I. exchanged it with Sir Robert Cecil, afterwards earl of Salisbury, for Theobald; and on the site of the episcopal palace, that nobleman built the magnificent seat called Hatfield-house. It is seated on the river Lea, 20 m. N. by W. of London.

Hathaz, a town of Hungary, in the county of Szabolts, 11 m. N. of Debretzin. The number of inhabitants are about 4,000, and chiefly Calvinists.

Hatherley, or Hatherleigh, a corporate town in Devonshire, Eng. with a woolen manufacture. It is seated on the river Oke, 28 m. N. W. of Exeter and 200 W. by S. of London.

Hatras, a fort and tower of Hindoostan, province of Agra, 18 m. S. S. W. of Coel, and 35 N. E. of Agra.

Hattem, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, seated on the Yssel, 4 m. S. W. of Zwoll. Pop. about 2,400.

Hatteras, a cape on the coast of North Carolina, in the lat. 35. 7. N., and long. 75. 30. It is beset with dangerous shoals.

Hattigen, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Mark, seated on the Roer, 22 m. E. N. E. of Dusseldorf. Pop. about 2,000.

Hatran, a town and fort of Upper Hungary seated on a mountain, 28 m. E. N. E. of Buda.

Hatzfeld, a town and castle of Germany, in Upper Hesse, capital of a county of its name seated on the Eder, 17 m. N. N. W. of Marburg and 60 N. E. of Coblenz.

Havana, a city and sea-port on the N. W. part of Cuba, two m. in circumference, and the capital of the island. The houses are elegant, built of stone, and there are 11 churches richly ornamented, 2 hospitals, a dock-yard, lazaretto, and other public buildings. The harbour is capable of containing upwards of 1,000 vessels, and the entrance which is so narrow that only one ship can enter at a time, is defended by two strong forts, called the Moro and the Puntal; there are also many other forts and platforms, well furnished with artillery. A citadel of great strength is erected near the centre of the town, which contains the captain general's palace, and where the treasure is deposited. Here all the ships that come from the Spanish settlements rendezvous on their return to Spain. This city was taken by the English in 1762, but restored to the Spaniards in 1763. It is seated on the W. side of the harbour, and watered by two branches of the river. This town exceeds, in point of commerce, every other town in Spanish America. Pop. about 70,000. Lat. of fort Moro, 28. 9., long. 82. 15.

Havant, a town in the S. E. extremity of Hampshire, Eng. 7 m. N. E. of Portsmouth, and 66 S. W. of London. Pop. in 1821, 2,009.

Havelberg, a town in Brandenburg, in the mark of Pregnitz, seated on the Havel, near its conflux with the Elbe. Many vessels for the navigation of the Elbe are built here, and great quantities of wood sent hence to Hamburg. It is 37 m. N. N. W. of Brandenburg. Pop. about 2,000.

Haverford, a township of Delaware Co. Pa.

Haverfordceest, a borough of Wales, in Pembrokeshire, seated on the side of a high hill. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, con tains three parish churches, and has a considerable trade, and sends one member to parliament. The assizes and county gaol are kept here; and it had once a wall and castle, now in ruins, the latter built in the reign of Stephen. It is seated on the Cleddaw, which is navigable for vessels of small burden as high as the bridge, and which soon after enters a creek of Milford haven, 15 m. E. S. E. of St. David, and 263 W. by N. of London. Long. 5. 0. W., lat. 51. 50. N.

Haverhill, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H. on the Connecticut, 35 m. N. W. of Dartmouth College. Pop. 2,153.

Haverhill, p.t. Essex Co. Mass. on the Merrimack, 12 m. above Newburyport. Pop. 3,912. This is a pleasantly situated town and has considerable ship building and trade by the river. It was settled in 1640 and suffered much in the early Indian wars. In 1698 the Indians attacked and set fire to the town. A troop of them approached the house of a Mr. Dustan, who at that time was abroad in the fields. He flew to the house, which contained his wife and eight children. He directed the children to escape as fast as possible while he attempted to save his wife who was sick in bed. Before this could be done, the savages were at hand. He flew to the door, mounted his horse, seized his gun and hastened away with his children. The Indians pursued and fired upon them, but Dustan returned the fire and keeping himself in the rear of his troop of little ones held the savages at bay till he had retreated to a place of safety. Mrs. Dustan with her infant, six days old and their nurse, fell into the hands of the Indians.

The child was soon dashed against a tree and killed. The Indians divided into several parties for subsistence; and Mrs. Dustan and her nurse, and a boy taken from Worcester, fell to the lot of a family of twelve, with whom they travelled through the wilderness to an island at the mouth of Contoocook river, in the town of Boseawen, N. H. where they encamped for the night. Just before daylight, finding the whole company in a profound sleep, she arose and armed herself and companions with the Indian tomahawks, which they wielded with such destructive effect, that ten of the twelve were instantly despatched; one woman escaping, whom they thought they had killed, and a favourite boy was designedly left. They took the scalps of the conquered enemy, and taking a canoe for their own use, and cutting holes in one or more that were left, to prevent pursuit, they descended the river, and arrived home in safety. She received a reward of 50 pounds from the treasury of the colony. The place whence they were taken, is about one m. north of the town; it is still owned by her descendants, and part of the house is still standing.

Haveril, a town in Suffolk, Eng. on the borders of Essex, with a manufacture of checks, cottons, and fustians. It is 16 m. S. W. of Bury, and 59 N. E. of London.

Haverstraw, p.t. Rockland Co. N. Y., on the Hudson. Pop. 2,306.

Havre de Grace, a very important and commercial sea-port of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a strong citadel, a good arsenal, and storehouses for the construction and arming of ships. It is surrounded by lofty walls, and large ditches filled with water. The harbour has particular advantages above all others on the coast: for the water does not begin to ebb till near three hours after the full tide. It is capable of containing a great number of the largest vessels. This town was bombarded by the English in 1694 and 1759. It is seated at the mouth of the Seine, 45 m. W. of Rouen, and 112 N. W. of Paris, of which it is the sea-port. Long. 0. 6. E., lat. 49. 29. N. Pop. 21,000.

Harre de Grace, a town of Maryland, in Hartford county, on the W. side of the Susquehanna, at the head of Chesapeake bay, 37 m. N. E. of Baltimore.

Hausen, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, on the river Kintsig, 22 m. N. N. E. of Friburg.

Hausruckviertel, on the quarter of Hausruck, a circle of Upper Austria, bounded on the N. E. by the Danube, S. E. by the quarter of Traun, S. W. by Bavaria, and N. W. by the quarter of Inn, comprising a superficies of 733 square m. Pop. about 109,000. The chief town is Lintz.

Hauterive, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne, seated on the Arriege, 18 m. S. of Toulouse.

Hawarden, a town of Wales, in Flintshire, with a considerable manufacture of earthenware, and a foundry for cannon. On an eminence between the town and the river Dee, are the remains of an ancient castle. It is 7 m. W. of Chester, and 196 N. W. of London.

Hawick, a town of Scotland, in Roxburghshire, with manufactures of carpeting, woolen stockings, and tape. It is seated on the Tiviot, where it receives the small river Slitridge, by which it is divided into two parts, and over which there are two bridges. It has a parish church, and three chapels for dissenters. It is 21 m. S. W. of Kelso, and 47 S. S. W. of Edinburgh.

Hawke, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H., 20 m. S. W. Portsmouth. Pop. 528.

Hawkesbury, a river of New Holland, which empties itself into Broken Bay, on the eastern coast. It is navigable upwards of 100 m. for small vessels. See Broken Bay.

Hawkshead, a town in Lancashire, Eng. Here is a neat town house, and an excellent free school, founded by archbishop Sandys, a native of this place. It is 24 m. N. N. W. of Lancaster, and 276 N. N. W. of London.

Hawkins, a county of East Tennessee, bordering on Virginia, watered by the rivers Holston and Clinch. Pop. 10,949. Rogersville, is the chief town.

Hawley, p.t. Franklin Co. Mass. Pop. 1,037.

Haws-water, a lake in Westmorland, Eng. S. of Penrith, 3 m. long, and half a mile over in some places. It is almost divided in the middle by a promontory of inclosures, so that it consists of 2 sheets of water.

Hay, a town of Wales, in Brecknockshire. It had a fine castle, now demolished; and about 2 m. below is the ruin of Clifford castle, where fair Ross mond was born. Hay is seated on the Wye, over which there is a bridge, 15 m. N. E. of Brecknock, and 156 W. N. W. of London.

Heap, a township of England, in Lancashire, 3 m. S. E. of Bury, and 194 N. W. by N. of London. Pop. in 1801, 4,283, and in 1821, 6,000.

Heath, p.t. Franklin Co. Mass. Pop. 1,199.

Hebrides, or Western Islands, a large cluster of islands, situated in the Atlantic Ocean, on the W. coast of Scotland, extending from the lat. of 55. 17. N., to 58. 29. They are upwards of 300 in number, and contain about 2,000,000 acres. The chief of these are, Lewis and its circumjacent islands, belonging to Rossire; Harris, N. and S. Uist, Benbecular, St. Kilda, Bara, Sky, Raaza and Egg, attached to Inverness-shire; Cana, Rum, Muck, Coll, Tirey, Mull, Jura, Colonsay, Isla, Gighu, and Cara, belonging to Argyleshire; and Bute, Arran, Greater and Less Cambray, and Incharnock, which compose the shire of Bute. The ancient history of the Hebrides is connected with much uncertainty. They were governed by independent princes of their own, until the destruction of the Picts, by Kenneth II., and for several centuries were the resort of pirates; and their chieftains were long lawless and seditious, till they were at last brought under the controul of the royal power. The influence of the independent chieftains of the Western Isles was completely destroyed by the act of parliament in 1748, which abolished all heritable jurisdictions. About 86 are inhabited, and are computed to contain about 70,000 inhabitants.

Hebridees, Nevc, islands in the South Pacific Ocean, lying between 14. 29. and 20. 4. S. lat., and 166. 41. and 170. 21. E. long. They were discovered by Quiros, in 1606, and considered as part of a southern continent, under the name of Tierra Australia del Espiritu Santo. Bougainville visited them in 1768, and found that the land was not connected but composed of islands, which he called the Great Cyclades. Cook, in 1774, ascertained the extent and situation of the whole group and gave them the name they now bear. The principal islands are Tierra del Espiritu Santo, and Mallicollo, beside several of less note, some of which are from 18 to 25 leagues in circuit. In general they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood, water, and the usual productions of the tropical islands. The inhabitants are of very different appearances at different islands, but are chiefly of a slender make and dark colour, and most of them have frizzled hair. Their canoes and houses are small, and poorly constructed; and except their arms, they have scarcely any manufacture, not even for clothing. They are, however, hospitable and good-natured, when not prompted to a contrary conduct by the jealousy which the unusual appearance of European visitors may be supposed to excite.

Hebron, a town of Syria, in Palestine, with a Christian church, said to contain the tombs of Abraham and Sarah, to which the Mahometans, as well as Christians, come on pilgrimage. Constantine built a church here, the walls of which are still standing. It is 25 m. S. of Jerusalem.

Hebron, p.t. Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 915. Also a town in Grafton Co. N. H. Pop. 538. Also a p.t. Tolland Co. Conn. Pop. 1,939. Also a p.t. Washington Co. N. Y. 50 m. N. E. Albany. Pop. 2,685.

Hechingen, a town and castle of Suabia, which gives name to a branch of the family of Hohenzollern, and is the residence of the prince. It is seated on the Starzel, 4 m. N. of Hohenzollern, and 30 S. of Stuttgart. Pop. about 2,600.

Hecla, Mount. See Iceland.

Hector, p.t. Tompkins Co. N. Y. Pop. 5,212.

Hedemora, a town of Sweden, in Dalecarlia, with a manufacture of gunpowder, seated on the Dahl, 30 m. S. S. E. of Fahlun.

Hedon, a borough in East Yorkshire, Eng. seated on a creek of the Humber, 6 m. E. of Hull, and 179 N. by W. of London. It sends two members to parliament.

Hedsjaz, or Hejaz, a division of Arabia, extending along the Red Sea, from Arabia Petrea to Yemen. It contains Mecca, the capital, and Medina.

Heermund, or Hindmend, a river of Persia, in the province of Sigistan, which after a westerly course of about 400 m. falls into the lake of Zereh or Durrah.

Heidelberg, a township of Berks Co. Pa. Also a village in Lebanon Co. and a township in York Co. Pa.

Heidelberg, a city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine, with a celebrated university. It has manufactures of woollen stuffs, carpets, silk stockings, velvet, and soap. It was the capital of the palatinate, and celebrated for a great tun, which held 800 hogsheds. The city has undergone so many calamities by war and fire, that it is not so large as formerly. The protestant electoral house becoming extinct in 1693, a bloody war ensued, in which the castle was ruined, and the elector removed his residence to Mannheim. The French took possession of this town in 1800, and in 1803 it was given to the elector of Baden. It is seated on the Neckar, over which is a bridge, 12 m. S. E. of Mannheim, and 52 S. of Frankfort. Pop. about 10,000.

Heidelsheim, a town of Germany, in Lower Rhine, 17 m. S. of Heidelberg. Pop. about 1,800.

Heilbron, a town of Suabia, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg. It is a handsome place situate in a country yielding good wine, and derives great advantages from its baths. It stands on the Neckar, 25 m. N. of Stuttgart. Pop. about 6,000.

Heilbrunn, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach, with a medicinal spring, 10 m. E. N. E. of Anspach.

Heiligenbeil, a town of Prussia, in the province of Natangen. It is famous for fine beer and white bread, and seated on a small river which soon after enters the Frisch Haff, 32 m. S. W. of Königsberg.

Heiligenberg, a town of Suabia, in the principality of Furstenberg, 12 m. N. N. E. Constance.

Heiligenhafen, a town of Lower Saxony, in Holstein, seated on the Baltic, opposite the island of Femen, 40 m. N. of Lubec. Lat. 54. 27. N., long. 10. 48. E.

Heiligenstadt, a town of Lower Saxony, capital of the territory of Eichfeld, with a castle and a college. It is seated at the conflux of the Geisland with the Leine, 17 m. S. E. of Göttingen.

Heilsberg, a town of Prussia, in the province of Ermland. In 1703 Charles XII. of Sweden fixed his head-quarters here. It is seated on the Alla, 45 m. S. of Königsberg.

Helder, a town of North Holland, with a strong fort which defends the entrance of the Texel. In September, 1799, the fort was taken by the English, and the whole of the Dutch fleet lying in the Texel surrendered to them, for the service of the prince of Orange; but the English abandoned the fort in November following. It is situated on the N. W. point of the province, opposite the W. end of Texel island, 24 m. N. of Alenmer, and 45 N. by W. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 34. E., lat. 53. 0. N.

Helena, p. v. Phillips Co. Arkansas.

Helena, St. an island in the Atlantic Ocean, 27 m. in circuit, belonging to the English East India Company. It lies between the continents of Africa and South America, about 1,200 m. W. of the former, and 1,800 E. of the latter; and was discovered by the Portuguese, in 1501, on St. Helena's day. Afterward the Dutch were in possession of it till 1600, when they were expelled by the English. In 1673 the Dutch retook it by surprise; but it was soon after recovered. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana Peak, which is covered with wood to the very top. There are other hills also, which bear evident marks of a volcanic origin, and some have huge rocks of lava, and a kind of half vitrified flags. The climate of St. Helena is temperate, being exempted from the extremes of heat and cold, from thunder and lightning and hurricanes. It is moist, however, and only about one day in three is illumined by sunshine. The interior valleys and little hills are covered with verdure, and interspersed with gardens, orchards, and various plantations. There are also many pastures, surrounded by inclosures of stone and filled with a fine breed of small cattle, and with English sheep; goats and poultry are likewise numerous. The inhabitants do not exceed 3,000, including nearly 500 soldiers, and 1,600 blacks, who are supplied with corn and manufactures by the Company's ships in return for refreshments. The town, called James-town, is small, situated at the bottom of a bay on the S. side of the island, between two steep, dreary mountains. The principal street is well built and contains about 30 houses, at the top of which two other streets branch off to the east and west. In the latter are the barracks, the hospital, and several shops, stored with every kind of commodities. On the left side of the parade are situated the government-house and the main guard-room, in the former of which the governor and public officers reside. The church is situated in front of the gateway, by which the town is entered, and near it there is a small theatre. St. Helena is particularly celebrated for having been the prison of Napoleon, the late emperor of France, and for being the place in which he breathed his last, and where his mortal remains are deposited. He died in May, 1821. Lat. of James-town, 16. 35. S., long. 5. 43.

Helena, St. one of a cluster of islands on the coast of S. Carolina, composing the parish of St. Helena, in the district of Beaufort. Pop. 8,799

Helens, St. a village in Hampshire, Eng. at the E. end of the Isle of Wight, 2 m. N. E. of Brading. It has a bay or road of considerable note as a rendezvous for ships that are outward bound.

Helens, St. a village in Lancashire, Eng. 3 m. N. E. of Prescot. In and near it are a variety of manufactures; particularly an extensive copper-work, and a still larger one at Ravenhead, for casting plate-glass. The Sankey canal begins at the coal mines here, and takes a circuitous course by Newton to the Mersey, below Warrington.

Helier, St. the capital of the island of Jersey, seated on the E. side of the bay of St. Aubin, with a harbour and a stone pier. It has of late rapidly increased from a small village to a respectable town. The inhabitants are computed to be 10,000, and have manufactures of woolen, stockings, and caps. At the top of the market-place is the statue of George II.; and in the church, where prayers are read alternately in English and French, is a monument to the memory of major Pierson, who fell here in the moment of victory. Besides the church there are chapels for dissenters. There are three gazettes published weekly in French, and one in English. Long. 1. 58. W., lat. 49. 11. N. See Jersey.

Helier, St. a little island near the town of the same name, in the bay of St. Aubin, on the S. side of Jersey. It took its name from Elerius, or Helier, a holy man who lived in this island, and was slain by the Pagan Normans. His cell, with the stone bed, is still shown among the rocks; and in memory of him, a noble abbey was founded here. On the site of this abbey now stands Elizabeth castle, the residence of the governor, and garrison of Jersey. It occupies the whole island, which is near a mile in circuit, and is surrounded by the sea at every half flood; and hence, at low water, is a passage to the town of St. Helier, called the Bridge, half a mile long, formed of sand and stones.

Heligoland, or Helgoland, a group of small islands in the German Ocean, off the coast of Denmark, to which they formerly belonged; but now to Great Britain. They are situated about 28 m. from the Weser, the Elbe, and the Eyder. The principal island which is divided into the Cliff and Lowland, is about 2 m. and a half in circumference, and on it is erected a light-house, which is visible nearly 30 m. distant. Heligoland has two good harbours, and to the east of the smaller island, called the Downs, is good anchorage in 48 feet of water. The number of inhabitants is about 2,000 who live chiefly by fishing and acting as pilots. Lat. of the light-house, 54. 11. N., long. 7. 55.

Helipolis, or Materea, a village of Egypt, 4 m. E. N. E. of Cairo, where the French gained a decisive victory over the Turks in 1800. Here is a celebrated spring of fresh water, said to be the only one in Egypt; and, according to tradition the Holy Family came here on their flight from Herod, and bathed the child Jesus in this fountain.

Hellam, a township of York Co. Pa.

Herculaneum, an ancient city of Naples, totally overwhelmed by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Titus. Its situation was long doubtful till 1711, when something of this city was discovered by a peasant digging a well in his garden; and from 1738 to the present time, researches being frequently made by digging, a great number of manuscript, paintings, statues, busts, domestic utensils, instruments of husbandry, &c. have been found. The village of Portici now stands on part of its site. It is 5 m. E. by S. of Naples. See Pompeii.

Herzyna, a river of Greece in Bœotia, with two streams, the larger called by the ancient Lethe, and the smaller Mnemosyne.

Herefordshire, a county of England, bordering on Wales, and bounded on the N. by Shropshire, E. by Worcestershire, S. by Monmouthshire, and Gloucestershire, and W. by the counties of Brecknock and Radnor. It contains 556,400 acres, and is divided into 11 hundreds and 221 parishes. It has one city, Hereford, and 7 market towns. Leominster, Ross, Weobly, Ledbury, Kington, Bromyard, and Pembridge, and sends 8 members to parliament; two for the city of Hereford, and two for the boroughs of Weobly, and Leominster and two for the county. Herefordshire is almost entirely an agricultural county. About nine-tenths of the land are in a state of cultivation, and it excels in almost every department of husbandry. The face of the county is rich and picturesque; the climate is mild and the soil extremely fertile, which arises from the subsoil of limestone on which it rests. Hops are cultivated, and the apples producing the cider, for which Herefordshire is celebrated, grow in greater plenty than in any other country. Red and yellow ochres are often met with. Fuller's earth is dug near Stoke, and on the borders of Gloucestershire iron ore is found. It is watered by several streams, the chief of which are, the Wye, the Munner and the Lug. Before the invasion of the Romans, Herefordshire was inhabited by the Silures, a brave people, who long checked the progress of the Roman arms; but being at last overcome, they retired into the fastnesses of Wales. It was a part of Mercia, one of the kingdoms of the Saxon Heptarchy. Pop. in 1811 94,073, and 1821, 103,231.

Hereford, an ancient city, and chief town of Herefordshire, Eng. seated on the N. bank of the Wye, over which there is a stone bridge of six arches. It has manufactures of gloves, flannels, and hats. It was anciently defended by a castle which is now destroyed, and only part of the walls remain. It has four churches, the principal of which is the cathedral, a large and venerable structure, and there are also several places of worship for dissenters. It has also an infirmary, a county gaol, a house of correction, and a lunatic asylum and a free grammar school. The city is in general well built, the streets wide and the environs delightful. It sends two members to parliament. Hereford, from its situation on the borders of Wales, suffered much from the wars between that country and England, and in later times, from the contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, and the civil broils in the time of Charles I. It is 135 m. W. N. W. of London, and 30 N. W. of Gloucester. Pop. in 1811, 7,306, and in 1821, 9,090.

Hernhuth, a village in Lusatia, 12 m. N. N. W. of Zittau. It was founded in 1722, by some persecuted Moravian brethren in the fields belonging to count Zenzendorf, who they considered as their bishop and father; and they were for some time called Hernhuthers, as this place continued their principal nursery.

Hernosand, a sea-port of Sweden, in Angermannia, situated on an island in the gulf of Bothnia, which is joined to the continent by a bridge. It was formerly a staple town, and has a considerable trade in linen. In 1710, 1714, and 1721, it was burned by the Russians. It was 240 m. N. by W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 53. E., lat. 62. 53. N.

Hernosand is also the name of an extensive government of Sweden, of which the preceding is the capital, comprising the provinces of Angermannland, Jemtpland, and Medelpad, containing 18,000 sq. m. with only 100,000 inhabitants.

Hero, North and South, two islands in Lake Champlain.

Herstal, or Heristal, a town of the Netherlands in Leige, seated on the Mæse, 4 m. N. of Leige. Pop. 4,750

Hertford, p.v. Perquimans Co. N. C.

Hertford, an interior county of England, extending in a north-easterly direction, about 32 m. in length, and 16 in mean breadth; bounded on the S. by Middlesex, E. by Essex, N. by Cambridge, and Bedford, and W. by Buckingham and part of Bedford. It contains 337,920 acres, is divided into eight hundreds, 135 parishes, and has 19 market towns, the chief of which are St. Albans, Hertford, Ware, and Royston. It sends six members to parliament, two for the county, and two for each of the two boroughs. The north part is hilly, forming a scattered part of the chalky ridge, which slopes towards London. A number of clear streams take their rise from the S. side. Flint stones are scattered in great profusion over the face of this county; and beds of chalk are frequently to be met with. The soil, however, with the aid of proper culture, is favourable to wheat and barley, which come to as great perfection here as in any part of the kingdom. The W. part is, in general, a tolerable rich soil and under excellent cultivation. The principal rivers are, the Lea, Stort, and Coln, and the artificial one called the New River. The Grand Junction Canal passes through the S. extremity of the county. Corn is the principal object of agriculture, and a great trade in malt is carried on. The manufactures are inconsiderable. Pop. in 1821, 129,714.

Hertford, or Hartford, a borough, and the capital of Hertfordshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Lea, which is navigable for barges, as it was once for ships. In 879 the Danes erected two forts here, for security of their ships; but Alfred turned the course of the river, so that their vessels were left on dry ground. Edward, the eldest son of Alfred, built a castle here, which has been often a royal residence.—The town is governed by a mayor, and had formerly five churches, but now only two. Here is a fine hospital belonging to Christ's hospital in London; also a noble shire hall, and a large county gaol. About a mile to the E. is a basin of water called Chadwell, which is the head spring of the New River, and at the distance of two miles and a half on the London road is the East India College for the education of 100 students.—Hertford is 21 m. N. of London. Pop. in 1811, 3,900.

Hertford, a county of North Carolina, bordering on Virginia, and bounded on the N. E. by Chowan River. Pop. 8,541. Windsor is the capital.

Hesse Cassel, a territory in the west of Germany, bounded by Hanover, the Prussian States, Franconia, Nassau, and Hesse Darmstadt, comprising an extent of 4,350 square miles. The chief towns are Cassel, the capital, Marburgh, Fulda, and Hanau. It is chiefly composed of Upper and Lower Hesse, the grand duchy of Fulda, the district of Hanau, and the lordship of Schmalkalden. The country is rather mountainous, and produces abundance of wood and minerals, among which are copper, silver, iron, cobalt, salt, pitecoal, and marble. Pop. in 1817, was 545,000, of whom the greater number are Calvinists.

Hesse Darmstadt, or the grand duchy of Hesse, a district of Germany, belonging to Hesse Cassel, like which it is far from being compact; being divided by a strip of land into two parts, stretching from east to west. It contains about 4,000 square miles. The chief towns are Darmstadt and Gies-sen. Its acquisitions by the French revolution were considerable. It is mountainous like Hesse Cassel, and is equally productive of minerals. The principal rivers are the Rhine, Maine, Lahn, Niddu, and the Ietir. Pop. about 600,000, of whom the greater number are Lutherans.

Hesse Homburg, a small principality of Germany, near Frankfort, belonging, with the title of landgrave, to the younger branch of the house of Hesse Darmstadt. Pop. about 21,000.

Hettstadt, a town of Upper Saxony, on the Wipper, 9 m. N. of Eisleben.

Hiltonen, p.t. Bucks Co. Pa.

Himmaleh, a vast chain of mountains, extending from the 73rd degree of E. long. to the borders of China, and separating Hindoostan from Thibet and Tartary.

That part which forms the northern boundary of India, is a continuation of the same range with that to the west of the Indus, known among the Afghans under the name of Hindoo Coosh. To the east of that river, it increases in height, and assumes a character of additional grandeur, both from that circumstance and from its great extent in every direction. It forms, in fact, one of the sublimest features in the structure of the old continent and of the globe. Here a long range of summits, covered with perpetual snow, presents itself to the Hindoo, who has in all ages raised towards it an eye of religious veneration. All the names by which it is distinguished are derived from the Sanscrit term Hem, signifying snow. Hence have arisen the name Imaus and Emodus among the ancients, and Himmaleh, Himadri, Himachal, and Himalaya, of the moderns. The river Indus passes through a series of narrow defiles in lat. 55. which scarcely offer any interruption to the mountain chain. The direction of the mountain is eastward, as far as the north-east point of the valley of Cashmere: from this point, its direction is to the south-east, extending along the sources of all the rivers which run across the Punjab to fall into the Indus, with the exception of the Sutledge, which, like the Indus itself, rises on the N. side of the range, and takes its passage across its breadth. Pursuing the same direction the Himmaleh mountains cross the heads of the umna, the Ganges, and their numerous tributary rivers. Farther east, they seem to be penetrated by several rivers, as the Gonduh, the Arum, the Teesta, and Così, and the Burrampooter. The geography of the countries to the east of this last river is so little known, that it is a question whether the same mountain range is continued any farther. It seems agreed that, if it is continued, its height ceases to be equally great; it is probable, however, that a continuation of it extends along the northern frontier of the provinces of Quang-si and Quang-tong all the way to the Chinese sea, declining gradually as it advances to the east.

The following are the heights of some of the peaks which have been ascertained:

Dhawalagivri, or the White Mountain, near the sources of the Gonduk river, above the level of the sea,	26,862
amootri, - - - - -	25,500
Dhaiboon, seen from Catmandoo,	24,768
Another peak seen from the same capital,	24,625

Thus the Himmaleh mountains exceed in elevation the Andes of America; that of Chimborazo, the highest of the latter, not exceeding 21,470 feet above the sea. Through this stupendous chain there are different passes, but all of them laborious to travel, and some highly dangerous. One of the most practicable is that which in its upper part, follows the bed of the river Sutledge. To the east of this, there are some practicable only at a favourable season, and where the traveller still runs the hazard of being caught in a fall of snow, or otherwise perishing with cold. Through the whole mountainous tract, and even before ascending much above the inhabited parts, the traveller is liable to be attacked with an alarming failure of respiration, from the great rarity of the air, an affection attributed by the natives to various fanciful and sometimes superstitious causes. Some of the most difficult passes are occasionally traversed by marauding parties from the one side of the Himmaleh to carry off the property of the inhabitants on the other. Such passes exist between Nepal and Thibet, or that stripe lying close to the north side of the Himmaleh which is inhabited by Bhootces, and may probably come under the name of Bootan, a name of which we are not at present able to assign the exact local extent. Here there are also one or more easier passes chiefly along the beds of the rivers Gonduk, Arum, and Teesta. Hence armies have crossed from Nepal to attack the territory of Thibet, and a Chinese army has in return invaded and subjugated Nepal. The difficulty of access to these regions, heightens the ardour of the admiring Hindoo, actuated in some degree by curiosity, but much more by superstition, to bathe himself in the icy streams which give origin to the Ganges or its mighty tributaries; to contemplate the mystic rock, which so closely resembles the hind quarters of a bullock, and is reputed to have been the result of a holy transmutation of a divine being, a scene where it is reckoned a merit to make a voluntary sacrifice of life, by precipitating the body over the fatal crag. Superstition has in many instances chosen to cherish its propensities in localities signalized as the origin of large and fertilizing rivers. No where is this carried so far as in this mountainous tract, and it must be confessed, that in no locality is the sublime character of the scenery so much in unison with such feelings. In the Hindoc Pantheon Himmaleh is defined, and is described as the father of the Ganges, and of her sister Ooma, the spouse of the destroying power Siva, the favourite object of propitiatory adoration.

Hinchinbrook Isle, an island on the west coast of America, in Prince William's Sound. Lat. 60. 24. N., and long. 142. 35. to 146. 10. W.

Hinchinbrook Isle, one of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific Ocean. Long. 168. 38. E., lat. 17. 25. S.

Hinchley, a town in Leicestershire, Eng. It has a large church, with a lofty spire; and had formerly a castle and walls, traces of which are still to be seen. Here is a considerable manufacture of common stockings, thread, and worsted. It is seated on an eminence, 12 m. S. W. of Leicester, and 99 N. N. W. of London.

Hindelopen, a town of the Netherlands, in Friesland, seated on the Zuider Zee 21 m. S. S. W. of Lewarden.

Hindia, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a country of the same name, in Candeish; situate on the S. bank of the Nerbudda, 90 m. N. N. E. of Burhampour.

Hindoostan, or India, and by the Aborigines, called Bharatta, a region of Asia, which comprises all the countries between the mountains of Tartary and Thibet on the N., Bootan, Assam, and the bay of Bengal, on the E., the Indian Ocean on the S., and the same ocean and Persia on the W. But this country must be considered under the three grand divisions of Hindoostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindoostan Proper includes the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and all those that lie to the N. of the river Nerbudda; the principal of which are Agimere, Agra, Alla habad, Cashmere, Delhi, Guzerat, Lahore, Malwa, Moultan, Oude, and Sindy. The Deccan has been extended to the whole region S. of Hindoostan Proper; but in its most restricted sense, it means only the countries situate between Hindoostan Proper and the river Kistna. See Deccan. The tract S. of the river Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula; although its form does not authorize that appellation: it includes a small part of Golconda, Mysore, and the Carnatic, with Madura, and other smaller districts; the W. coast being called that of Malabar, and the E. that of Coromandel. The sheiks possess Lahore, part of Moultan and Delhi; the king of Candahar, Cashmere, Cabul, Sindy, and part of Moultan; Berar and Orissa, Malwa, Candeish, Visiapour, and part of Agimere and Guzerat, are in the possession of the Mahrattas; and the nizam of the Deccan possesses Golconda, part of Dawlatabad and Berar.

The British possessions are Bengal, Bahar, part of Allahabad, and Orissa, the Northern Circars, the Jaghire in the Carnatic, the countries north and south of Calicut, Bombay, and the island of Salsette. The allies of the British are the Rajahs of Mysore, Tanjore, Madura, Travancore, Tritchinopoly, the nabobs of Oude and Arcot, and the district of Cochín. The principal rivers are the Ganges, the Indus, Nerbudda, Puddar, Taptee, Caggar, Mahanada, Godavery, Kistna. The chief mountains are the Himmaleh, the western and eastern Ghauts, and those which divide Bengal from Ava. The number of inhabitants is upwards of 100,000,000, of which the greater proportion are idolaters, and are divided into three great sects; the first worship the Triad, Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva; the second are the followers of Boodh, whose principal tenet is the doctrine of transmigration; the Jains are the third, who chiefly worship Pariswanath; the other class of inhabitants are Mahometans, of whom there are about the eighth part of the number of Hindoos. To give an idea of the modern revolutions in the empire of Hindoostan, it is proper to observe, that from a pure Hindoo government, it became, at last, a Mahometan state, and continued to be so, under various dynasties, till the beginning of the 15th century. The first irruption of the Mahometans was in the year 1000. From this period the provinces of Hindoostan were held rather as tributary kingdoms, than as provinces of the same empire; and the conquest of the Deccan, in particular, was for ages an object of considerable importance to the emperors. In 1389 the Mogul Tartars, under the conduct of Timur, or Tamerlane, invaded Hindoostan; but the conquest of the country was not effected till 1525, by sultan Baber, one of his descendants, who, from this circumstance, was the founder of the Mongul dynasty; and hence Hindoostan has been called the Mongul Empire, and its chief, the Great Mogul. The illustrious Achar, his son, failed in his attack upon the Deccan; an attempt in which many of his successors were equally unfortunate, and which tended, in the sequel, to the decline and dissolution of the empire. In 1615 emperor Jehangire, his son, received Sir Thomas Roe, as the first English ambassador, and the Portuguese had, by this time, acquired considerable settlements in Bengal and Guzerat. In the reign of his grandson Aurungzebe, which lasted from 1660 to 1707, the empire attained its full extent; his authority reached from 10 to 35 degrees in lat. and nearly as much in long., and his revenue exceeded 32,000,000. sterling. But in the course of 50 years after his death, a succession of weak princes and wicked ministers reduced this astonishing empire to very narrow limits, and deprived it of all its power and splendour. In consequence of the intrigues of the nizam of the Deccan, Nadir Shah, the Persian usurper, invaded Hindoostan in 1738. In the reign of Ahmed Shah, successor of Mahomed Shah, the entire division of the empire took place; nothing remaining to the house of Tamerlane but the city and small territory of Delhi. The last imperial army was defeated by the Rohillas, in 1749. The Jats, a Hindoo tribe, founded a state in Agra; Oude was seized by Mahomed Kooli; and the Mahrattas, beside their ancient domains in the Deccan, obtained great part of Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, and Orissa. The Mongul empire was now become nearly nominal; and the emperors, from this period, must be regarded as of no political consequence, otherwise than as their names and persons were made use of, by different parties, to promote their own views; for the name and person of the emperor retains a considerable degree of veneration among the bulk of the people in Hindoostan. Ahmed was deposed in 1753, and his successor was deposed and murdered in 1760. He was succeeded, however, by his son Shah Ahlum, who was alternately dependent on the contending powers, and more particularly upon the English, who obtained from him a grant of the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, Orissa, and the Circars. This prince died in 1806, and was succeeded by his second son, Achar Shah. The Mahometans or Musselmans, whom the English improperly call Moors, are represented to be of a detestable character. The Hindoos, or Gentoos, are of a black complexion; their hair is long, their person straight and elegant, and their countenance open and pleasant. They differ materially from all other nations, by being divided into tribes or castes. The four principal tribes are the Brahmims, Soldiers, Labourers, and Mechanics; and these are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are Brahmims of various degrees of excellence, who have the care of religion allotted to them, and are held sacred by the rest; some of these acknowledge the errors that have crept into their religion, own one Supreme Being, and laugh at the idolatry of the multitude, but insist upon the necessity of working upon the weaknesses of the vulgar; yet the generality of them are as ignorant as the laity. Such as are not engaged in worldly pursuits are a very superstitious, innocent people, who promote charity as much as they can, both to man and beast. but those who engage in the world are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; but, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and being exempt from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice (under the Gentoow governments) they run into much greater excesses. The Soldiers are commonly called Rajahpoots; that is, descended from rajahs. They are much more robust than the rest, have a great share of courage, and a nice sense of military honour, which consists, among them, in fidelity to those they serve. Fighting is their profession; they readily enter into the service of any that will pay them, and will follow wherever he leads; but should their leader fall in the battle, their cause is at an end, and they run off the field without any stain of their reputation. The English East India Company have many battalions of them in their service; they are called Sepoys, and are clothed and disciplined in the European manner. The Labourers include farmers, and all who cultivate the land. The Mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade; these again are subdivided into each profession. Besides these, are the Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse of all the tribes. They are a set of unhappy wretches, who perform all the vilest offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away every thing that is polluted. All the different tribes are kept distinct from each other by insurmountable barriers: they are forbidden to intermarry, to cohabit, to eat with each other, or even to drink out of the same vessel with one of another tribe. Every deviation from these points subjects them to be rejected by their tribe, renders them polluted forever, and obliges them, from that instant, to herd with the Hallachores. The members of each caste adhere invariably to the profession of their forefathers, from generation to generation the same families have followed, and still continue to follow, one uniform manner of life. To this may be ascribed that high degree of perfection conspicuous in many of the Indian manufactures; and also that striking peculiarity in the state of Hindoostan, the permanence of its institutions, and the immutability in the manners of the inhabitants. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese, in respect to the antiquity of their nation. Their institutions of religion form a complete system of superstition, upheld by everything which can excite the reverence of the people. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious ceremonies splendid; and the absolute dominion which the Brahmims have obtained over the minds of the people is supported by the command of the immense revenues with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends to a thousand particulars which, in other countries, are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, custom, and fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages, and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoos is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee (a kind of imperfect butter), milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. The warrior caste may eat of the flesh of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior castes may eat poultry and fish; but the inferior castes are prohibited from eating flesh or fish of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spices and perfumes, of which the great people are very avish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. They are taught by their religion that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man who does not entirely separate himself from the world from a principle of devotion; and, as none but male descendants can perform the obsequies to the manes of their ancestors, it is thought an irreparable calamity to die without male issue. Scarcely any state can be more degrading than that of Hindoo females. Till three years after the nuptial age, a girl is entirely at the disposal of her father. When married, she is inured in her husband's dwelling; her dependence upon him is perpetual and entire; she is not permitted to eat in his presence, and is considered not as a companion to aid him in enduring the evils of life, but as a slave to bear children, and be subservient to his rule. Polygamy is tolerated; out females, except among the Nairs, are not permitted to marry a second time. A husband can dismiss his wife at any time; but there is nothing that can dissolve the wife from her matrimonial engagement. The inhuman custom of women burning themselves on the funeral pile of their deceased husbands has however been recently prohibited in the presidencies of Fort William and Madras; and the progress of Christianity affords reason to hope for the speedy abolition of other revolting practices. The code of Gentoo laws, with their sacred books, the Veidam and the Shastah, are written in the Sanscrit language, which is very copious and nervous, although the style of their best authors is wonderfully concise. Hindoostan, towards the N., is pretty temperate, but hot towards the S.; and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products are diamonds and other precious stones, silks, spices, aromatics, drugs, maize, rice, and sugar; and the chief manufactures muslins and calicoes.

The great forests and marshy districts are peopled with elephants. The tiger is common in Malabar and Bengal and is the scourge of every district he inhabits. The mountain bear is even more terrible than the tiger; he inhabits the Ghauts and is probably a sort of hyæna. The common bear is found in the forests of the south. Wolves and jackals are common in the interior parts. The serval or panther cat which inhabits this country is little known. The lynx and caracal inhabit the northern provinces. The rhinoceros seeks amid the mud and water of the marshes a shelter from the scorching heat of the climate. He is a much rarer animal than the elephant, and is never seen in troops like that animal. He never attacks men unless when provoked. Hindoostan swarms with serpents, and almost every river and lake abounds in crocodiles.

Hintercersdorf, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, 8 m. E. of Freyburgh.

Hinzuun, Joanna, or Anjouan, one of the largest of the Comoro Islands, situated off the eastern coast of Africa. It is of a triangular form; and the whole island appears to have undergone the action of a volcano, the rocks being every where volcanized. It is entirely mountainous, but is covered with vegetation, which reaches even to the summit of the highest conical hill. The coasts can be approached with safety. The sovereign of Hinzuun takes the title of sultan, and formerly ruled over the whole group of the Comoro Islands. His subjects view him with the most profound respect, and never approach him without kneeling, and touching the earth with their forehead. The nobles are on a familiar footing with the king, and must be consulted on many occasions. The natives are in general tall, robust, and well made; they have long black hair, piercing eyes, and are of a colour between olive and black. They profess Mahomedism; but the native African worship of fetiches is still very prevalent. They are courteous and hospitable, and all shipwrecked mariners have been received with the greatest kindness. The pine apples are most delicious, and the other fruits are excellent. Yams and sweet potatoes are in abundance; also goats and poultry. The bullocks are of a moderate size, are excellent food. This island is often frequented by Europeans, and particularly by Eng lish vessels, for the sake of procuring water and provisions. The commodities in demand are arms, toys, looking-glasses, shirts and blue and red cloth. Saltam is the capital. Long. 41. 30. E., lat. 12. 54. S.

Hio, a town of Sweden, in Gothland, seated on the lake Wetter, 145 m. S. W. of Stockholm.

Hiorring, a decayed town of Denmark, in N. Jutland, 27 m. N. N. W. of Aalborg.

Hiram, pt. Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 1,026. Also a village in Portage Co. Ohio.

Hirschberg, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Jauer, famous for its mineral baths. In the neighbourhood are extensive bleaching-grounds, and next to Breslau it is the most considerable trading town in Silesia. It is seated on the Bober, 23 m. S. S. W. of Jauer.

Hirschfeld, a town of Germany, in Lower Hesse, capital of a principality of the same name, depending on a famous abbey, which was secularised in a favour of the house of Hesse-Cassel. It is seated on the Fulda, 34 m. S. by E. of Cassel. Long. 9. 42. E., lat. 50. 50. N.

Hirschholm, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, with a castle, 12 m. N. of Copenhagen.

Hischorn, a town of Hesse-Darmstadt, with a castle; seated on the Neckar, 7 m. E. of Heidelberg.

Hispaniola. See Domingo, St.

Hissar, a town of Hindoostan, in the country of Dehli, capital of a district of the same name; seated near the river Sursoory, 112 m. W. N. W. of Dehli. Long. 75. 40. E., lat. 29. 5. N.

Hit, a town of Syria, near which is a spring of naphtha and bitumen. It stands on a river of the same name, which soon after joins the Euphrates, 100 m. W. by S. of Bagdad.

Hitchin, a town of Hertfordshire, Eng. with a great trade in malt. It has a handsome parish church, and several meeting-houses. 15 m. N. N. W. of Hertford, and 34 N. W. of London.

Hithe, or Hythe, a borough in Kent, Eng. It is one of the principal Cinque Ports. Near it are the remains of Saltwood Castle, now turned into a farm house, barns, &c. In consequence of the harbour becoming gradually choked up, the trade declined; and the town itself was almost annihilated by pestilence and famine. At present, however, it is a thriving and respectable place. It is 10 m. W. S. W. of Dover, and 63 S. E. of London.

Hoai-king, a city of China, of the first rank, in Ho-nan. 320 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 112. 34. E., lat. 35. 6. N.

Hooin-gan-foo, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kian-nan. It is seated in a marshy, and inclosed by a triple wall. The suburbs extend to the distance of a league on each side of a canal, and from their extremity a kind of port on the Hoang-ho. The canal, being above the level of the city, occasions perpetual danger of inundation. 515 m. S. S. E. of Peking. Long. 118. 4. E., lat. 53. 30. N.

Hoang-ho, a large river of Asia, also called the Yellow River, from the quantity of clay which it devolves. Its sources are two lakes, situate among the mountains of that part of Tartary known by the name of Kokonor, in about 35. N. lat. It pursues a N. E. direction to about 42. N. lat., and after running due E. it suddenly bends S. penetrating China to a latitude nearly parallel to its source; and then it pursues an easterly direction till it enters the Eastern Ocean, 100 m. to the N. of the mouth of the Kian-hu. The length of its course is estimated at 2,000 m. At 70 m. from the sea, where it is crossed by the great canal, the breadth is little more than a mile; but it is so rapid and shallow as to be scarcely navigable.

Hoboken, a village in Bergen Co. N. J., on the Hudson, opposite New York, and noted as the spot where many duels have been fought.

Hochberg, a castle of Baden, situate on a mountain, 2 m. N. E. of Emmendingen.

Hochst, a town of Germany, in Nassau, with an extensive tobacco manufacture; seated on the Maine, 6 m. W. of Frankfort, and 17 N. E. of Mentz.

Hochstadt, a town and castle of Bavaria, famous for a single victory gained near it by the duke of Marlborough, in 1704, and which the English call the battle of Blenheim, from a village 3 m. S. W. of this place. It is seated on the Danube, 17 m. S. W. of Donawert.

Hochstadt, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg, on the river Aisch, 23 m. S. S. W. of Bamberg.

Hochocking, a river of Ohio, flowing into the Ohio, 200 m. below Pittsburg. It is navigable for boats.

Hocking, an interior Co. of Ohio. Pop. 4,606. Logan is the chief town. Also a township of Fairfield Co. Ohio.

Hoddlesdon, a town in Hertfordshire, Eng. seated near the river Lea, 4 m. S. E. of Hertford, and 17 N. by E. of London.

Hodeida, a town of Arabia, in Yemen, with a harbour for small vessels, on the Red Sea, 90 m. N. N. W. of Mocha. Long. 43. 30. E., lat. 14. 10. N.

Hoi-teheou, a city of China of the first rank, in Kian-nan, famous for its tea, varnish, and japanned work, 625 m. S. of Peking.

Hoi-teheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Quang-ton, 1,010 m. S. of Peking.

Hockelm. See Heukelum.

Hoff, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Bayreuth, with manufactures of cotton, linen, and fine paper. The adjacent country has quarries of excellent marble. It stand on the Saale, 32 m. N. N. E. of Bayreuth.

Hoff, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Olmutz, with a great trade of wool, 23 m. N. E. of Olmutz.

Hog Island, one of the smaller Shetland islands near the coast of the mainland.

Hog Island, is also the name of several other islands; one in Pamlico Sound, near the coast of North Carolina. Long. 76. 36. W., lat. 34. 56. N.—on the E. side of lake Champlain, 9 m. long and about 3 broad; near the coast of Virginia. Long. 75. 42. W., lat. 37. 30. Holbeach, a town of Lincolnshire, Eng. with a considerable trade in corn and wool. 12 m. S. by E. of Boston, and 109 N. by E. of London.

Holbeck, a sea-port of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, with a good harbour, from which great quantities of corn are annually exported. 30 m. W. of Copenhagen.

Holden, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 6 m. N. of Worcester. Pop. 1,718.

Holdswothy, a town in Devonshire, Eng. seated near the canal from Bude harbour, between two branches of the Tamer, 43 m. W., by N. of Exeter, and 214 W. by S. of London.

Holderness, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H., on Squam Lake. Pop. 1,499.

Hole in the Wall, a village of Talbot Co. Maryland.

Holland, an important province of the Netherlands, which has often given name to the Seven United Provinces. It is divided into two parts, North and South Holland; and is bounded on the N. and W. by the German Ocean, on the E. by the Zuyder Zee and the ci-devant state of Utrecht, and on the S. by the Meuse, and Dutch Brabant; extending from lat 51. 40. to 53. 10.

N.; its longitude is about 180 m. E. of London. It contains 90 walled towns, beside many others, and above 400 villages. Before the Revolution in 1796, six large cities had seats in the states general; viz., Dort, Haerlem, Delft, Leyden, Amsterdam, and Gouda. The number of inhabitants was estimated at 800,000. They also reached this number in 1801; but in 1817 they had been reduced by the war to 748,000. The divisions into the two governments of South and North Holland was recognised by the constitution of 1814: the former contains 1,170 sq. m. with 389,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the six districts of the Hague, Leyden, Rotterdam, Dort, Gorcum, and the Briel; while Holland which in official papers, is called by its ancient name of West Friesland, contains 930 sq. m. with 359,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the four districts of Amsterdam, Haerlem, Hoorn, and Alkmaar. The whole province is a continued flat; and, but for the constant care in forming ditches and canals, it would be hardly capable of cultivation; some part of it lies even lower than the sea, from which it is secured by dikes, 25 or 30 feet high, and as many broad at the top. The climate is moist and variable, and in various places, particularly in North Holland, unfavorable to health. The winters are severe, and the rivers are almost every season rendered unnavigable, for several weeks together, by the ice. The soil is rich, consisting of a deep fat loam; but, owing to the humidity of both soil and climate, tillage is very limited. Wheat, madder, tobacco, hemp, and flax, are raised, but the chief agricultural wealth of the country consists in the pastures, which feed great number of cows; the making of butter and cheese being a principal occupation. The meadows are generally under water during the winter, and the inhabitants only discharge them from it by mills adapted as in the fenny parts of England to this particular purpose.

The natives of the United Provinces are of good stature, and inclined to be corpulent, but they are remarkable in general for a heavy, awkward mien; their features are regular, and their complexions fair. The better sort of people imitate the French fashions in their dress; but those who are stamped with the genuine character of their native country, never fail to load themselves with enormous incumbrances of clothes. The hats of the woman are as large as tea-boards, projecting forward on each side so as to overshadow face and body. They are chiefly of straw, with two broad ribands, not tied, but pendent from the sides. This hat forms a striking contrast with the short dress, of which the milk-maids sold in our shops is a faithful picture. Both men and women wear at least two waistcoats, with as many coats, and the former cover their limbs with double trowsers.

The dress of the young girls is the most singular, especially at the time of any festival or holiday. In speaking of these, an amusing writer observes, that any one would have supposed that the figures which appeared were masques, or designed as caricatures. Imagine, says he, a short figure, with more breadth than goes to the proportion of elegance, and with very little alteration in the width downward to the waist, the petticoats descending only half way below the knee. Imagine further, a round small face covered with a hat of three feet in diameter, perfectly circular, and applied to the head in a part contiguous to the circumference. Then conceive a number of these figures in motion, brandishing their horizontal hats, rolling their diminutive eyes, and affecting a thousand ridiculous graces under cover of this extensive canopy. The tout ensemble may bring to the recollection those sculptural vagaries in which human figure is made the prop of a cathedral seat, the support of a wainscot pulpit, or the stand of a mahogany table.

The Dutchman, living in continual danger of inundation, and of losing not only the fruits of his industry but his life, becomes habitually provident. His foresight is admirable, his perseverance not to be conquered, and his labours, unless seen, cannot be credited. They astonish the more, when the phlegm of his temper and the slowness of his habits are considered. View the minuteness of his economy, the solicitude of his precaution, and the inflexibility of his methodical prudence! Who would not pronounce him incapable of great enterprise? He builds himself a dwelling; it is a hut in size, and it is a palace in neatness. It is necessarily situated among damps upon a flat, and perhaps behind the bank of a sluggish canal; yet he writes upon it, "My Goethe," "My delight;" "Landlust," "Country pleasures," "Land fight," "Country prospect, or some other inscription, that might characterize the vale of Tempe, or the garden of Eden. He cuts his trees into fantastic forms, hangs his awnings round with small bells, and decorates his Sunday jacket with dozens of little buttons. Too provident to waste his sweets, he cunningly puts a bit of sugar-candy in his mouth, and drinks his tea as it melts; one morsel serves, let him drink as long as he pleases. Around him is every token of care, caution, and cleanliness; but none in his domestic habits, of magnificence, or grandeur of design. The Dutch are usually distinguished into five classes; the peasants and farmers; seafaring men; merchants and tradesmen; those who live upon their estates, or the interest of their money; and military officers. The civet cat which is a fit is obtained by their perfume. The civet of Amsterdam is better than that of the Levant or East Indies. Holland is said to have derived its name from the vast and thick forests of wood with which it was at one time covered; Holtlant, in German, signifying woodland. In the middle ages it was governed by its counts or earls; in the 15th century it became subject to the house of Burgundy; it passed afterwards to Austria; and finally joined the other provinces that declared for independence. On the invasion of Holland by the French, in the beginning of 1795, the stadtholder with his family took refuge in England. Holland was subsequently under various forms of the French domination. At length the people became weary of this connexion. The events of 1813 had weakened the power that bound them; the people rose; their fetters were broken; and a provisional government was formed at Amsterdam on the 18th of November. William Frederick, of Nassau and Orange, landed from England at the close of the same month, entered Amsterdam on the 2nd of December, and was proclaimed Sovereign Prince of the United Netherlands, which had formerly been subject to the dukes of Burgundy, were re-united under the prince of Orange, as William I., king of the Netherlands, and these countries continued under one government till 1830. For an account of the revolution of that year, See Netherlands.

Holland, a strong town of E. Prussia, seated near the river Weeske, 14 m. S. S. E. of Elbing.

Holland, New, an island of the South Pacific Ocean, and the largest known land that does not bear the name of a continent. It extends from 109. to 153. E. long., and from 11. to 39. S. lat., or 2,730 m. from W. to E., and 1,960 from N. to S. When this vast island was first discovered is uncertain. The Portuguese and Spaniards appear to have visited it in the sixteenth century, but it was the Dutch who first made it known to Europe. In the beginning of the seventeenth century they traced the N. and W. coasts; and what was deemed, till lately, the S. extremity, was discovered by Tasman in 1642. Captain Cook, in 1770, explored the E. and N. E. from 38. S., and ascertained its separation from New Guinea; and in 1773, captain Furneaux, by connecting Tasman's discoveries with Cook's, completed the circuit. But the supposed S. extremity, which Tasman discovered by the name of Van Diemen Land, was found, in 1798, to be an island, separated from New Holland by a channel forty leagues wide, named from the discoverer, Bass's Strait. Different parts of the coast have been called by the names of the discoverers, &c. The eastern coast, called New South Wales, was taken possession of in his majesty's name by captain Cook, and now forms a part of the British dominions. See Wales, New South.

Holm Cultram, a town in Cumberland, Eng. sometimes called Holm-Abbey, from the celebrated abbey that formerly stood here, the remains of which have been converted into the parish church. It is seated near the mouth of the Water, 12 m. N. of Cockermouth, and 310 N. N. W. of London.

Holmesburg, p.v. Philadelphia Co. Pa.

Holmes's Hole, a harbour in the island of Martha's Vineyard, whicli See.

Holmesville, p.v. Pike Co. Missouri.

Holstebro, a town of Denmark, in North Jutland, situate on a shallow river which runs into the North Sea. The principal trade is in corn, oxen, and horses. It is 24 m. W. of Wiburg, and 68 N. of Ripen.

Holstein, a duchy at the N. extremity of Germany belonging to Denmark, 100 m. long and 50 broad; bounded N. by Sleswick, E. by the Baltic and the dutch of Saxe-Lauenburg, S. by the dukies of Bremen of Luneburg, and W. by the German Ocean. Its principal rivers are the Elbe, the Eyder, and the Stor. It is a fruitful country, and well seated for trade, having some considerable harbours, particularly those of Hamburg, Lubec, and Kiel; and from the latter is a canal to the Eyder at Rensburg, by which there is a free navigation from the Baltic to the German Ocean. Pop. in 1818, 360,000, most of whom are Lutherans.

Holston, a river of the United States which rises in the Alleghany mountains in Virginia, and flows S. S. W. into the State of Tennessee, where it takes a more Southerly course to Knoxville, and 35 m. below that town is joined by the Clinch, when their united waters take the name of Tennessee. It is navigable for boats of 25 tons upwards of 100 m. On its banks are several iron works; and the adjacent country abounds with iron ore, and has sundry lead mines.

Holt, a town in Norfolk, Eng. with an excellent free school founded by Sir John Gresham. It is situate in a fertile district, 24 m. W. N. W. of Norwich, and 119 N. E. of London.

Holy Island, an island on the coast of England, 8 m. S. E. of Berwick upon Tweed, but belonging to the county of Durham. It is 3 m. long and 2 broad; the soil rocky and full of stones; and at low water it is accessible by horses and carriages. It has a town called Kilo, and a castle on a high rock, under which is a commodious harbour, defended by a block-house. On this island are considerable remains of a stately monastery, called Lindisfarne, and here was anciently a bishop's see, removed with the body of St. Cuthbert, first to Chester le street, and afterwards to Durham.

Holyhead, a seaport and cape of Wales, in the isle of Anglesey. It derives its principal support from the expenditure of passengers to and from Ireland, being the usual place of embarkation for Dublin, and the station of the government packets to and from that city, distant about 20 leagues. In the neighbourhood is a large vein of white Fuller's earth, and another of yellow. Among the principal objects of interest are the venerable ruins of a hermitage, two chapels, and the remains of a Dutch wall; these, with the light-house and suspension bridge, attract the attention of strangers. The church, near the verge of the cliff, is a handsome structure of the thirteenth century: here are also 4 chapels for dissenters, a free school, and some almshouses. Pop. m 1821, 4,007. 267 m. N W. of London. Long. 4 40 W., lat 53. 23. N.

Holyoke, Mount, an eminence near Northampton in Massachusetts. It is about 800 feet high, and may be easily ascended in a carriage. On the summit is a building erected for the accommodation of visitors who resort hither in summer to enjoy the beautiful prospect which the mountain affords. Southwardly is seen Connecticut river, retiring under the shade of Mount Tom, whitened below by South Hadley Falls; beyond which is the hill at Springfield. The river makes several turns, and on the horizon are 2 very distant peaks, which are supposed to be East and West Rocks, at New-Haven, about 70 m. distant. Northeast is seen Monadnoc Mountain in New-Hampshire; and the view toward the east is interrupted by the neighbouring peaks of Mount Holyoke. North, you look up the charming valley of the Connecticut; bordered by distant ranges of hills and mountains, varied by a few isolated peaks, covered with the richest coat of vegetation, and scattered with villages and innumerable farm houses. The river makes a beautiful serpentine course from where it first appears at the foot of Sugar Loaf Mountain, and Mount Toby, until it reaches the village of Hadley, which lies in full view; and then taking a bold sweep to the west, and flowing 4 m. it returns to the end of the street, only a mile distant from where it first meets it. The whole peninsula is rich and fertile, and covered with cultivated fields of wheat, corn, grass, &c. without being disfigured by fences, according to the custom prevalent hereabouts; this is the richest sight upon the river, particularly when viewed in connexion with the scene immediately below, where the river flows on, almost immediately under our feet, and the western shore presents the extensive Northampton meadows, a mile wide. Following the current with the eye, in the West south west, it forms a still more remarkable peninsula, although one of inferior size: the Hockanum Bend being a turn measuring 3 m. in circuit while the isthmus is only 46 rods across, or 150 yards. In the compass of this view, from the north to the west and south, numerous village spires are seen, with level fields, orchards, and gardens, almost without number; and the whole scene is so bounded with mountainous ridges, as to seem to justify the opinion of geologists, who say that it was once covered with an extensive lake, until the water forced a passage between Mounts Tom and Holyoke. Northampton is seen about west-north-west, with Round Hill; and towards the right, the top of Saddle Mountain, in the distance. There are also others still further north, particularly Haystack and Bare Mountain. More than 30 church steeples may be counted here.

Holywell, a town of Wales, in Flintshire, with a market on Friday. It has a neat parish church, and 4 places of worship for dissenters. From its vicinity to the mines, and the extensive manufactures carried on in the neighbourhood, it is become the most flourishing town in the county. Its name was derived from the famous well of St. Winifred, concerning which so many fables and superstitious notions have prevailed, but which is certainly a very remarkable spring, bursting out of the ground with great impetuosity, at the foot of a hill, and discharging upwards of 20 tons of water every minute. The waters have long since lost their reputation for miraculous healing powers, but are much esteemed by the manufacturer, being now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. It is 10 m. E. of St. Asaph, and 207 N. W. of London.

Holzappel, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau. It is situate on the Lahn, at the foot of a mountain, on which is the tower of an ancient castle, the original seat of the princes of Nassau, 4 m. N. E. of Nassau.

Holzminde, a town of the state of Brunswick, in Wolfenbittel, with considerable iron works. It is seated at the conflux of the Holz with the Weser, 25 m. N. W. of Gottingen.

Homburg, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, with an iron forge and a glass manufacture, 20 m. S. of Cassel.—Also a town of Prussia, in the duchy of Berg, 48 m. S. E. of Dusseldorf.—And a town of Bavaria, in Deux Ponts; seated on a mountain, 5 m. N. W. of Deux Ponts.

Hon-an, a province of China, bounded on the N. by the provinces of Pe-tcheli and Chan-si, E. by Kiang-si and Chanton, S. by Hou-quang, and W. by Chensi. As every thing that can contribute to render a country delightful is found in this province, and as it is situate almost in the centre of the empire, the Chinese call it Tong-hoa, The Middle Flower. Besides Cai-fong, its capital, it contains eight cities of the first class and 102 of the second and third.

Honan, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Honan, 360 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 112. 9. E. lat. 34. 44. N.

Honaucera, or Onore, a town of Hindoostan, in Canara, seated in an inlet of the sea, which spreads into a lake, and includes a number of islands. It was formerly a place of great commerce, but was demolished by Tippoo after he had recovered it by the treaty of Mangalore. Here is now a custom-house, and a few shops; also some merchants who live scattered near the banks of the lake, and sell rice, pepper, cocoa, and betelnuts, &c., to the trading vessels that come from Goa, Rajaputra and Bombay. It is 50 m. N. by W. of Kandapura, and 84 S. S. E. of Goa.

Hondtchoote, a town of France, department of Nord, near which a part of the allied troops were surprised and defeated in 1793. 7 m. S. E. of Dunkirk.

Honduras, a province of Mexico, 490 m. long, and 150 broad bounded on the N. by a bay of its name, E. by the Atlantic, S. by Nicaragua, and W. by Guatemala and Vera Paz. The country consists of mountains, valleys and plains, watered by numerous rivers; and is exceedingly fertile. The vineyards bear thrice a year, and the soil in many parts yields 3 crops of maize; other productions are wheat, peas, cotton, wool, logwood, with excellent pastures, honey, wax, and provisions of all kinds. Honduras was formerly one of the most populous countries in America, but at present, though so fertile, is almost deserted. The capital is Valladolid, or Comayaguas.

Honduras Bay, is that gulf of the Caribbean Sea between the peninsula of Yucatan and Cape Honduras. It is well known from the colonies settled on it by the British for the cutting down of mahogany and dye woods. The trees are cut at the wet season of the year, and after being dragged from the forest to the banks of the rivers, they are made into rafts and floated to the shore. The growth of the logwood here is extremely rapid, so much so that it is said to attain maturity in 5 or 6 years, when it is cut and sent to Europe in logs. Besides the mahogany and logwood tree, Honduras Bay, produces 2 or 3 kinds of the mangrove, as the red, white, and black. Cedars are large and abundant, and are commonly used in ship-building. The palmetto, the sapadilla, and the sea-grape trees, are all found very useful; as are also the bullet-tree, the iron-wood-tree, the calabash-tree, and the button-wood-tree. The althea grows at a considerable distance from the coast, and is generally made into rafts for floating the logwood to the sea. The tree that exudes the resinous substance called couthouc, or elastic gum, from which Indian-rubber is made, grows plentifully in several provinces of Guatemala, particularly in various parts of Honduras. In addition to those may be enumerated the locust-tree, the fustic, the cocoa-nut-tree, the cabbage, and the silk-cotton-trees, besides which both trees and shrubs of a medicinal nature grow in great variety and profusion. The soil which has been brought under cultivation is extremely fertile, and the climate is superior to a great part of the American continent. The shores abound with aquatic birds of different kinds. Myriads of swallows are found in some parts, particularly in Honduras, during the periodical rains. The humming-bird is seen in most of its splendid varieties, and the oxilis, one of the most minute and beautiful of this elegant tribe, is very common. The number of fish, insects, and reptiles, is also great.

Honfleur, a seaport of France, in the department of Calvados. The harbour is very capacious, at the mouth of the Seine; and its principal trade is in lace. 8 m. N. of Pont l'Evque, and 110 N. W. of Paris. Long. 0. 15. E., lat. 49 24. N.

Honiton, a borough in Devonshire, Eng. celebrated for the manufacture of broad lace. The church is half a mile from the town, but it has also a chapel belonging to the establishment, and three meeting-houses for Independents, Baptists, and Presbyterians. A fire happened here in 1747, which consumed three-fourths of the town; and another, in 1765, destroyed nearly 180 buildings. It is situated in a delightful vale on the river Otter, 16 m. E. of Exeter. Market on Saturday.

Hooghly, a river of Hindoostan, formed by the two westernmost branches of the Ganges, named the Cosimbazar and Jellinghy, which unite at Nuddea. It flows by Hooghly, Chinsura, Chandernagore, and Calcutta, to the bay of Bengal, and is the only branch of the Ganges that is commonly navigated by ships.

Hooghly, a city of Hindoostan, in Bengal, now nearly in ruins, but possessing many vestiges of former greatness. In the beginning of the eighteenth century, it was the great mart of the export trade of Bengal to Europe. It is seated on the river Hooghly, 25 m. N. of Calcutta.

Horb, a town of Wurtemberg, with a considerable trade in woollen goods, seated on the Neckar, 51 m. W. S. W. of Tubingen.

Horcb, mountain of Arabia Petrea, a little to the W. of Mount Sinai. Here are two or three fine springs, and a great number of fruit-trees.

Horn, a town of Austria, with a trade in beer, made of oats; seated on the Tiffer, 48 m. W. N. W. of Vienna.

Horn, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, 3 m. W. N. W. of Ruremonde.

Horn, Cape, the southern extremity of South America, forming part of Hermite Island, on the coast of Terra del Fuego. Long. 68. 13. W., lat. 55. 58. S.

Hornachos, a town of Spain in Estremadura, near the river Malachel, 30 m. S. S. E. of Merida.

Hornberg, a town of Baden, in the Black Forest, with a fortress on a mountain; seated on the Gutlash, 12 m. N. W. of Rothweil.

Hornburg, a town of Prussian Saxony, on the Ilse, 8 m. S. of Wolfenbuttel.

Hornby, a small town in Lancashire. Eng. situated on the bank of the Wenning, 9 m. N. E. Lancaster. The principal object of attraction is Hornby Castle, erected, as is supposed, by Nicholas deMont Begons, soon after the conquest. Here was formerly a weekly market on Friday, which has merged in the fair for cattle every alternate Tuesday.

Horncastle, a town in Lincolnshire, situated in an angle formed by the confluence of the Bane and the Waring, with a market on Saturday. It was a Roman station, and part of the wall is still remaining. Here are a church, four meeting-houses, a dispensary, &c. 21 m. E. of Lincoln, and 136 N. of London.

Hornellsville, p.v. Steuben Co. N. Y.

Hornsea, a town in E. Yorkshire, nearly surrounded by an arm of the sea, and much resorted to during the bathing season. Near it is a mere, two m. long and one broad, famous for its pike and eels. 16 m. N. of Hull, 193 N. of London.

Horsham, a borough in Sussex, Eng. Here is the county gaol; and the spring assizes are held here. It is seated on the Adnr, 20 m. N. W. Brighton, and 36 S. of London.

Horsham, a township of Montgomery Co. Pa.

Horstmar, a town of Westphalia, with a castle, and a collegiate church; seated on an eminence 15 m. N. W. of Munster.

Hosick, p.t. Rensselaer Co. N. Y. on Hoosack river. Pop. 3,582.

Hot Spring, a country in Arkansas. Pop. 458. It is named from several Springs in the territory which have a temperature equal to that of boiling water. The water has no mineral properties but is remarkably limpid.

Hottentots, Country of the, a large region in the S. extremity of Africa, extending N. by W. from the Cape of Good Hope, beyond the mouth of Orange River, and from that cape, in an E. N. E. direction, to the mouth of the Great Fish River, which parts it from Caffaria. It is bounded on the W., S., and E., by the Atlantic, Southern, and Indian oceans, and on the N. by regions very little, if at all explored. The Hottentots are as tall as most Europeans, but are more slender; and the characteristic mark of this nation is, the smallness of their hands and feet, compared with the other parts of their body. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, resembling that of a European who has the jaundice in a high degree. There are not such thick lips among the Hottentots as among their neighbours the Negroes, the Caffres, and the Mozambiques; and their mouth is of the middling size, with the finest set of teeth imaginable. Their heads are covered with hair more woolly, if possible, than that of the Negroes. With respect to shape, carriage, and every motion, their whole appearance indicates health and content. They are excellent swimmers and divers, and practise bathing several times in the day. The women braid or plait their hair as an additional elegance, and adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. Both the men and women generally go bareheaded, and seldom wear any shoes. Both sexes wear rings on their arms and legs, chiefly made of thick leather straps, cut in a circular shape; but rings of iron, copper, or brass, of the size of a goose-quill, are considered more genteel. Girls are not allowed to use any rings till they are marriageable. Their habitations are adapted to their wandering pastoral life. They are merely huts, resembling a round beehive, from 18 to 24 feet in diameter, and so low that a middle-sized man cannot stand upright in them. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit or lie round it in a circle. The low door is the only place that admits the light, and the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The order of these huts in a kraal, or clan, is most frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. Such are the Hottentots in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope. In 1778, lieutenant Paterson visited a Hottentot village in Little Namaqua Land, in the N. W. part of the country; it consisted of 19 huts and about 150 inhabitants. The ensign of authority worn by their chief was a cane with a brass top, given to him by the Dutch East India Company. The Hottentots amused them, part of the night, with music and dancing: their visitors, in return, treated them with tobacco and dacka, or hemp leaves, which they prefer even to tobacco. Their music was produced from flutes, made of the bark of trees, of different sizes. The men form themselves into a circle, with their flutes; and the women dance round them. Among other tribes of Hottentots are the Bosjesmans, who inhabit the mountains in the interior part of the country, N. E. of the Cape, and live by hunting and plunder. On this account they render themselves odious to the planters, and are pursued and exterminated like wild beasts, or made slaves of when taken alive. Their habitations are not more agreeable than their manners or maxims; bushes and clefts in rocks serve them by turns for dwellings. Many of these savages are entirely naked; but some of them cover their body with the skin of any sort of animal. Being ignorant of agriculture, they wander over hills and dales after certain wild roots, berries, and plants, which they eat raw; also caterpillars, termites, locusts, grasshoppers, snakes, and spiders. Another tribe of Hottentots, near the mouth of Orange River, were observed by lieutenant Paterson, in his journey to the N. W. in 1799. Their huts were loftier, and thatched with grass; and were furnished with stools made of the back-bones of the grampus. Their mode of living is in the highest degree wretched, and they are apparently the most dirty of all the Hottentot tribes. Their dress is composed of the skins of seals and jackals, the flesh of which they eat. When a grampus is cast ashore, they remove their huts to the place, and subsist upon it as long as any part remains. They smear their skin with the oil, the odor of which is so powerful that their approach may be perceived some time before they appear in view. To the N. of the country of the Bosjesmans, and on the banks of Orange River, is another tribe called Koras, who may be reckoned to rank higher than any of the other Hottentots known in the S. of Africa. Their features are of a superior cast; they are more cleanly in their appearance, and neater in their dress and domestic utensils; their huts are also constructed with greater care, and with a view of being more durable. They seem to be a mixed breed, between the Hottentot and Caffre. The Hottentots, in general, are described as a mild, simple, affectionate, and inoffensive race; but extremely indolent in their habits, and limited in their faculties. Where, however, any sort of effort has been made to cultivate their powers, and give them a feeling of hope and liberty in their occupations, they have been found active, intelligent, and useful. No traces of religion appear to have been retained by this people. But Christianity has been introduced, through the exertions of the Moravians and other missionaries, who have recently endeavoured, with some degree of success, to ameliorate the condition even of some of the wilder tribes, who inhabit the N. and N. W. of the colony. The country possessed by the Europeans is considerable; extending from the Cape of Good Hope, N. to lat. 30, and E. to the Great Fish River, about 550 m. in length, and 230 in breadth. The whole is naturally barren and mountainous; but the industrious Dutch overcame all natural difficulties, and it produces not only a sufficiency of all the necessaries of life for the inhabitants, but also for the refreshment of all the European ships that touch at the Cape. The year is considered as divided into two seasons, termed monsoons: the wet monsoon, or winter, begins in March; and the dry one, or summer, in September. Among the quadrupeds of this country are antelopes, which go in large herds; buffaloes; camelopardalises; the gemsboek, a species of antelope, which has remarkably long sharp horns, and, when attacked by dogs, will sit on its hind quarters, and defend itself; wild dogs, which travel in herds, and are very destructive to sheep; elephants; elks; hyenas; the koedo, an animal rather larger than a deer, of a mouse colour, with three white stripes over the back, and the male having very large twisted horns; lions; jackals; tigers; the quagga, a species of zebra, but more tractable; rhinoceroses; horses; domestic horned cattle; common sheep, and a peculiar species of sheep covered with hair instead of wool. The hippopotamus, or river-horse, is frequently seen here. Among the birds are vultures, ostriches (whose eggs are excellent food), and the loxia, a species of gregarious bird. Among the insects are a species of termites, which do no injury to wood as in the East Indies, but, by raising a number of hills, they impede the progress of vegetation. The black or rock scorpion, is nearly as venomous here as any of the serpent tribe, of which there are numerous kinds.

Houut, an island of France, between Belleisle and the continent. It is 10 m. in circumference, and is defended by a fort.

Houdain, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, 9 m. S. of Bethune.

Houdan, a town of France, department of Seine et-Oise, 21 m. W. of Versailles.

Hounsfield, a township of Jefferson Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,415.

Hounslow, a town in Middlesex, Eng., situate on the edge of a heath of the same name, on which are many vestiges of ancient encampments, 10 m. W. by S. of London.

Housatonic, a river rising in Massachusetts and flowing through Connecticut into Long Island Sound. It is navigable for small vessels 12 m.

Houstonville, p.v. Iredell Co. N. C. Also a village in Pendleton Dis. S. C.

Hou-quong, a province of China, which occupies nearly the centre of the empire, and is divided into two parts, the N. and S., by the river Kian-ku. It is a flat, open country, watered by lakes, canals, and rivers; and has plenty of wild fowl and cattle. The soil is remarkably fertile; gold is found in the sands of the rivers; and there is such a variety of all sorts of commodities that it is called, by the Chinese, the store-house of the empire. It contains 15 cities of the first class, and 114 of the second and third. Vou-tchang is the capital.

Hourn, Loch, an arm of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, in Inverness-shire, extending 20 m. inland from the sound of Skye.

Houssa, a considerable town of Negroland, capital of a country of the same name, extending along the N. side of the Niger. It is 200 m. E. of Tombuctoo. Long. 4. 20. E., lat. 16. 10. N.

Hou-tcheou, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Tche-kiang. The quantity of silk manufactured here is almost incredible, and it is the chief place for making writing pencils. It stands near a large lake, called Tai, 110 m. S. E. of Nan-king. Long. 120. 15. E., lat. 30. 55. N.

Howard, a county of Missouri. Pop. 10,844. Fayette is the Capital.

Howard, p.t. Steuben Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,364 Also a township of Centre Co. Pa.

Howden, a town in E. Yorkshire, Eng. It gives name to a small district called Howdenshire. The bishops of Durham had formerly a palace here, the remains of which are now occupied as a farmhouse. Here is a large church, like a cathedral, part of which is in ruins. It is seated near the Ouse, and surrounded by a level country in a high state of cultivation, 21 m. S. S. E. of York, and 175 N. by W. of London.

Howe, Cape, the promontory at the S. E. end of New Holland.

Howell, a township in Monmouth Co. N. Y.

Howland, a township of Trumbull Co. Ohio.

Hoxter, a fortified town of the Prussian states, on the Weser, 23 m. E. by N. of Paderborn.

Hoy, one of the Orkney Islands, situate between the island of Pomona and the N. coast of Caithness-shire. It is 15 m. long and 6 broad. Here is a stupendous rock, called the Beary; and on the W. coast is a great conic hill, called Hoy Head, which is a seamark. Long. 3. 9. W., lat. 58. 46. N.

Hoya, a town of Hanover, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the Weser, 37 m. N. W. of Hanover. Long. 9. 20. E., lat. 52. 47. N.

Hoyer, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, celebrated for its oyster-fishery, 4 m. W. of Tonderen.

Hoyerswerda, a town and castle of Lusatia, on the Black Elster, 17 m. N. N. W. of Bantzen.

Hoym, a town and castle of Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt, seated on the Godel, at its junction with the Selke 7 m. E. of Quedlinburg.

Hradisch, a town of Moravia, capital of a circle of the same name, which produces excellent wine. It is a frontier fortress towards Hungary, and stands on an island in the river Moraw, 30 m. S. S. E. of Olmutz. Long. 17. 30. E., lat. 49. 7. 9.

Huahine, one of the Society Islands, in the S. Pacific, 30 leagues from Tahiti. It is 21 m. in compass, and has a commodious harbour, called Owharra Bay, on the W. coast. Long. 151. 8. W., lat. 16. 44. S.

Hubbard, a township of Trumbull Co. Ohio.

Hubbardston, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 45 m. W. Boston. Pop. 1,674.

Hubbardton, p.t. Rutland Co. Vt. 40 m. N. W. Windsor. Pop. 865.

Hubert, St., a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, with a celebrated abbey, seated in the forest of Ardennes, on the rivulet Homme, 14 m. W. of Bastogne.

Hubertsberg, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, with a magnificent hunting-seat, built by Augustus III., then electoral prince, 22 m. E. of Leipzig.

Huddersfield, a populous and flourishing town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. Here is a large circular hall, in which narrow and broad cloths, serges, kerseymeres, &c., manufactured in the town and neighbourhood, are weekly exposed to sale. It stands on the Colne, 3 m. from the Calder, from which it has a canal to Ashton-under-Line. In addition to the parish church, two others have been erected—Trinity Church, in 1819, and Christ Church, completed in 1824; and there are several meeting-houses for the different denominations of dissenters. The charitable institutions are numerous, and a mechanic's institute was established in 1825, to which a valuable library has since been attached. It is 41 m. S. W. of York, 25 N. E. of Manchester, and 189 N. N. W. of London.

Hudson's Bay, a bay of North America, lying between 51. and 69. N. lat., discovered in 1610 by captain Henry Hudson. The entrance of the bay, from the ocean, is between Resolution Isle on the N. and the Labrador coast on the S., forming the E. extremity of the strait distinguished by the name of its great discoverer. It communicates on the N. by two straits with Baffin's Bay, on the E. side it is bordered by Labrador, on the S. W. by New South Wales, and on the W. by New North Wales. These countries, included under the name of New Britain, abound with animals whose skins and furs are far superior in quality to those found in less northerly regions. In the region to the westward Captain Franklin discovered that beautiful little animal which he named Parry's Marmot in honour of the celebrated navigator of that name. It bears a strong resemblance to the striped squirrel. The natives are called Esquimaux and northern Indians; and are materially different from the southern tribes. In 1670 a charter was granted to a company for the exclusive trade to this bay. The territories claimed by this company are stated by some writers to extend from 70. to 115. of W. long., and as far as 49. S. lat., thus comprehending a length of 1,300 or 1,400 geographical m. by a medial breadth of 350 m. Animated by a prospect of gain, the company have pushed their discoveries into the interior, and thus has a knowledge of these vast wilds been obtained, beyond what any other motives would have supplied. In December, 1770, Mr. Hearne set out from Prince of Wales Fort to explore a river that the Esquimaux, who came to the company's factories to trade, had brought to their knowledge, and which, on account of much copper being found near it had obtained the name of Copper-mine River. Under the convoy of those Indians, he arrived at this river in June 1771, and traced it till he came in sight of the Arctic Ocean, finding it encumbered with shoals and a bar at its mouth, which is in long. 119. W., lat. 72. N. In 1789 Mr. Mackenzie, another officer of the company, explored the country still more to the W.; and entering a river (now called after his name), which is the outlet of the Slave-lake, he traced it to its mouth in the Arctic Ocean, where it forms a wide estuary in long. 135. W., lat. 71. N. Further discoveries have been made by Capt. Franklin.

Hudson, a city of New York, in Columbia county with considerable manufacturing business. The streets are spacious, and cross each other at right angles; and the houses are supplied with water brought in pipes from a spring 2 m. distant. The trade is considerable, and vessels of the largest size can unload here. It is seated on an eminence, on the E. side of Hudson River. Pop. 5,392. 30 m. S. of Albany, and 120 N. of New York.

Hudson, villages in Caswell Co., N. C. and Portage Co. Ohio.

Hudson, a river of the United States, which passes its whole course of 300 m. in the state of New York. It rises between the lakes Ontario and Champlain, and flows S. by Albany, and Hudson, and enters the Atlantic Ocean at New York. It is navigable for ships to Hudson, and for sloops to Albany, and is one of the finest navigable streams in the world.

Hudriksvalld, a seaport of Sweden, the chief town of Helsingia, with a good harbour, on the gulf of Bothnia. The inhabitants carry on an advantageous trade in timber, flax, linen, butter, fish, &c. 185 m. N. by W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 46. E., lat. 62. 6. N.

Hue, or Huefo, the capital of Cochin China, with a royal palace. The inhabitants blacken their teeth, thinking it a shame to have them white, like dogs. It is seated in a beautiful plain, and divided into two parts by a large river, 39 m. from its mouth, in the China Sea. Long. 107. 25. E., lat. 16. 25. N.

Huelca, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the coast of the Atlantic, between the mouths of the Odiel and Tinto, 53 m. W. of Seville.

Huen, an island in the Baltic, with one scattered village, 3 m. from the coast of Sweden, and 9 S. S. E. of Elsinore. It is 6 m. in circumference, and was ceded by the Danes to the Swedes, in 1653. See Uraniburg.

Huesca, an old fortified town in the N. of Aragon, in Spain, situated in a plain on the Isuela. Its works have gone into ruins, but it is still a bishop's see, has a university, two large schools, a cathedral, and 6,800 inhabitants, with manufactures of cloth and leather. 30 m. N. E. of Saragossa.

Huescar, a town of Spain, in Granada, with a castle, 42 m. N. E. of Guadix Huessen, a town of Holland, in Guelderland, seated on the Rhine, 7 m. N. E. of Nimeguen.

Hucta. See Gueta.

Huetinberg, a town of the Austrian States, in Carinthia, 20 m. N. E. of Clagenfurt.

Huffingen, a town of Baden, in the principality of Furstenburgh 4 m. N. N. W. of Furstenburgh.

Hull, p.t. Plymouth Co. Mass. on a peninsula at the extremity of Nantasket Beach, on the S. side of Boston Bay. Pop. 198

Hughesburgh. See Catawissa.

Hull, or Kingston upon Hull, a borough and seaport in East Yorkshire, Eng. The commerce of this place is considerable, and it is deemed the fourth port in the kingdom. Besides its communication with the Yorkshire rivers and canals, it has access also to the Trent, and all its branches, so that it has the import and export trade of many of the northern and midland counties. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic; but it is also one of the privileged ports for trading to the East Indies, and has traffic with the southern parts of Europe, and with America. More ships are sent hence to Greenland than from any other port, that of London excepted. The harbour is artificial; and here are docks for building and repairing ships. Among the public buildings are the Trinity-house, for the relief of seamen and their widows, an armoury, a naval storehouse, a custom-house and an exchange. It is seated on the northern side of the Humber about 20 m. from its mouth, the town extending almost in a direct line along the river Hull, and lying on a level tract of ground, washed on two of its sides by the Hull and the Humber. It is now well secured from inundations by embankments. 38 m. S. E. of York, and 171 N. of London.

Hulledygpura, a town of Hindoostan, in Canara, seated in a plain of rice-ground to the E. of a considerable creek, which runs N. from the entrance into Honawera Lake, 55 m. N. by W. of Kandupura.

Hulmsville, p.t. Bucks Co. Pa.

Hulpen, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, 10 m. S. E. of Brussels.

Hulst, a town of the Netherlands, in Dutch Brabant, strong by its situation and fortifications. It was shamefully surrendered to the French in 1747, and taken by them in 1794. It is seated on a plain, which may be overflowed, and on a canal that communicates with the Scheldt, 15 m. W. N. W. of Antwerp.

Hultschin, a town of Silesia, near the river Oppa, 13 m. E. of Troppau.

Humber, a river formed by the junction of the Trent and Ouse. It is a large estuary, which divides Yorkshire from Lincolnshire, and enters the Gorman Ocean at Spurn Head.

Hummelstown, a township of Dauphin Co. Pa.

Humphreys, a county of W. Tennessee. Pop. 6,189, Reynoldsburgh is the capital.

Humphreysville, p.t. New Haven Co. Conn. It has manufactures of woolen. Also villages in Chester Co. Pa. and Union Dis. S. C.

Hundsmaerk, a town of the Austrian States, in Styria, near the river Muehr, 17 m. W. by S. of Judenburg.

Hunefeld, a town of Germany, in the district of Fulda, with a collegiate church. 10 m. N. of Fulda.

Hungary, a country of Europe, forming an important part of the Austrian dominions. At different periods this name has been applied with a very different signification. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries Hungary comprised part of modern Poland and European Turkey, and was divided into ten separate governments, or kingdoms, viz. Hungary Proper, Croatia, Slavonia, Dalmatia, Bosnia, Bulgaria, Moldavia, Galicia, and Lodomeria, besides the principality of Transylvania. Several of these provinces have long since been detached from Hungary; but that country has still a close political and military connexion with the Austrian provinces of Slavonia, Croatia, and Dalmatia. This kingdom (for such it is still termed) is surrounded by mountains, except on the S. where its frontier is along the Danube and the Drave. It is bounded on the W. by part of Germany, N. by Galicia, E. by Transylvania and Wallachia, and S. by Turkey, Slavonia, and Croatia; and has a territorial extent of 84,500 square m. It was formerly divided into Upper and Lower Hungary; but this division has been superseded by that of the following circles:—1. Circle this side the Danube 2. Circle beyond the Danube; 3. Circle this side the Theyss; 4. Circle beyond the Theyss; 5. Province of Slavonia; 6. Province of Croatia. These are divided into counties, of which there are thirteen in the first circle, and eleven in each of the others. The principal rivers are the Danube, the Drave, the Marosch, the March, the white Korosch, the Izamos, the Theyss, the Waag, and the Temes. The chief lakes are Balaton and Neusiedl, W.; Palitsch on the S. W., and Grunsee or the Grun Lake among the Carpathians. There are also several extensive marshes here, as that of the Isle of Schut on the W. and that of Saxetje on the E. of the kingdom. The climate among the mountains is of course bleak; but in the S. it is in general mild; in the sandy districts extremely hot; on the banks of the rivers and near the marshes there is much humidity: indeed this is a prevailing characteristic of the climate of the level part of Hungary. The country abounds in all the necessaries of life, and the wine, especially that called Tokay, is excellent. There are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron; and also of opal at Czerweniza, which gem is peculiar to this country. There is such plenty of game that hunting is allowed to all. The trade principally consists in cattle, hogs, sheep, flour, wheat, rye, wool, and wine; and these are almost wholly sent to the Austrian provinces. The commerce of the country is fettered by no internal taxes, a circumstance of which the Hungarians are very proud; but the Austrian government has environed it with custom houses, where a duty of one and one-third per cent. is gathered on all goods that pass into it from the other Austrian states. We may thus see that the encouragement of manufactures within the kingdom will never, voluntarily become the policy of that government. The kingdom of Hungary can easily raise an army of 100,000 men. The horsemen are called Hussars, and the foot Heydukes. The government is hereditary in the house of Austria, and the established religion is popery, though there are a great number of protestants. No country in the world is better supplied with mineral waters and baths; and those of Buda, when the Turks were in possession of it, were reckoned the finest in Europe.

Hungerford, a town in Berkshire Eng. with a good trade by its canal navigation. John of Gaunt granted a charter by the gift of a brass bugle horn, which is blown annually for the inhabitants to elect the constable, who is the chief officer. It is seated on the Kennet, 22 m. S. S. W. of Abingdon, and 64 W. of London.

Huninguen, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, seated on the Rhine. The strong fortress of Huninguen, which for a long time held out against the allies in 1815, was afterwards demolished in consequence of a stipulation in the treaty of Paris. 2 m. N. of Basel, and 14 E. of Altkirch.

Hunmanby, a town in East Yorkshire, Eng. The town is pleasantly situated on a rising ground, surrounded by a fine wood on the N. W. within two miles of the sea, and contains many good houses. 39 m. N. E. of York, and 207 N. of London.

Hunter, p.v. Greene Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,966.

Hunterdon, a county of New Jersey, on the Delaware. Pop. 31,066. Trenton is the chief town.

Hunterstown, a village in York Co. Pa. and a township in St. Maurice Co. L. C.

Huntersville, villages in Pocahontas Co. Va. and Lincoln Co. N. C.

Huntingdon, a borough and the capital of Huntingdonshire, Eng. with a market on Saturday, and a great trade in corn, coals, wood, &c. It was once a large place, said to have had 15 churches, which are now reduced to two; and there are the cemeteries of two other parishes, in one of which is an ancient steeple. Huntingdon is the birth-place of Oliver Cromwell. It is seated on the river Ouse, over which is a stone bridge to Godmanchester, 16 m. W. N. W. of Cambridge and 59 N. by W. of London.

Huntingdon, a county in the W. district of Pennsylvania. Pop. 27,159. The capital has the same name.

Huntington, towns in Adams, Luzerne and Westmoreland Cos. Pa. and Carroll Co. Ten.

Huntingdonshire, a county of England, 25 miles long and 20 broad; bounded on the N. W. and N. by Northamptonshire, E. by Cambridgeshire, and S. W. by Bedfordshire. It contains 246,440 acres; is divided into four hundreds, and 167 parishes; and has six market towns. It sends four members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen. The S. E. part consists of beautiful meadows. The middle and western parts are fertile in corn, and adorned with woods; and the upland part was anciently a forest, peculiarly adapted for hunting. The N. E. part consists of fens, which join those of Ely; but they are drained, so as to afford rich pasturage, and even large crops of corn. In the midst of them are some shallow pools abounding with fish; and a lake six miles long and three broad, called Whittleseamere. The principal commodities are corn, malt, and cheese; and it fattens abundance of cattle.

Huntington, p.t. Chittenden Co. Va. on Onion river. Pop. 929. Also a p.t. Fairfield Co. Conn. Pop. 1,369. A p.t. Suffolk Co. N. Y. Pop. 5,582. Also towns in Laurel Dis. S. C., Gallia, Ross and Brown Cos. Ohio.

Huntingtown, p.v. Calvert Co. Maryland.

Huntley, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, with a manufacture of linen cloth; seated on the Bogie, near its conflux with the Deveron, 35 m. N. W. of Aberdeen.

Huddear, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Dehli, where the Ganges first enters the country. It is 100 m. N. by E. of Dehli. Long. 78 23 E., lat. 29. 55. N.

Huron, a lake of North America, which lies between 80. and 85. W. long., and 43. and 48. N. lat. It has a communication with Lake Michigan and Lake Erie. Its shape is nearly triangular, 250 m. in length, and its circumference 800 miles. On the N. side is a chain of islands 150 miles long, called Manitoualin by the Indians, who consider them as sacred: on the S. W. is Saginaw Bay, and a little more to the N. W. is Thunder Bay so called from the frequent thunder that is heard there.

Huron, a county of Ohio, lying upon Lake Erie. Pop. 13,345. Norwalk is the capital.

Hurst Castle, a fortress in Hampshire, 4 m. S. of Lynnington. It stands on the extreme point of a neck of land, about a mile distant from the Isle of Wight. In this castle Charles I. was confined previously to his being brought to trial.

Hus, or Hussu, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia, the see of a Greek bishop. Here Peter the Great made peace with the Turks in 1711. It is situate on the Pruth, 70 m. S. W. of Bender. Long. 28. 34. E., lat. 46. 35. N.

Hussingabad, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Malwah, on the S side of the Nerbudah, 140 m. N. W. of Nagpore. Long. 77. 54. E., lat. 22. 42. N.

Hussum, a sea-port of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a strong citadel. It has a trade in horses and oxen, and manufactures of leather, cotton, and linen. It stands on the river Ow or Aue, near the German Ocean, 16 m. W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 20. E., lat. 54. 36. N.

Huttany, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Visiapor. It is surrounded by mud ramparts, and has a citadel, and a spacious caravan-sara. 30 m. S. S. W. of Visiapor. Long. 75. 6. E., lat. 17. 5. N.

IBARRA, the capital of a fertile province of the same name in South America, is situated on an extensive and delightful plain, watered on the E. by the river Taguando, and W. by Ajavi. The streets are wide and convenient, and the buildings of good construction. 42 m. N. E. from Quito.

Iberville, an outlet for the overflowing waters of the Mississippi, during the seasons of inundation, entering Lake Maurepas.

Iberville, a parish of Louisiana. Pop. 7,050. The chief town has the same name.

Iberia, New, a village of Louisiana, in the district of Atakapas, 200 m. W. of New Orleans.

Iberian Mountains, the most extensive mountain range of Spain, beginning to the W. of the Ebro, and extending to the shores of the Mediterranean.

Ibiza. See Ivica.

Iburg, a small town of Hanover, in the principality of Osnaburg, 10 m. S. W. of Osnaburg.

Iceland, an island of the North Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Denmark, extending according to Henderson from lat. 63. 20. to 67. 20., and be-

Huttonsville, p.v. Randolph Co. Va.

Huy, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, with many paper mills, and iron founderies. It is seated on the Maese, 12 m. W. S. W. of Liege.

Hyannis, p.t. Barnstable Co. Mass., on the S. side of Cape Cod.

Hyattstown, p.v. Montgomery Co. Maryland.

Hyde, a county of North Carolina, lying on Pamlico Sound. Pop. 6,177. Lake Landing is the seat of justice.

Hyde Park, p.t. Dutchess Co. N. Y. on the Hudson. Pop. 2,554. Also a village in Halifax Co. N. C.

Hyderabad, a populous city of Hindoostan, capital of Golconda, and the metropolis of the Deccan. The suburbs, which are very large, are occupied by merchants and tradesmen. It stands in a plain, on a river that runs into the Kistna, 310 m. N. N. W. of Madras. Long. 78. 52. E., lat. 17. 16. N.

Hyderabad, a fort of Hindoostan, in the province of Sinde, and the usual residence of the prince of Sinde; situate near the Indus, 6 m. E. of Nusserpour, and 62 N. E. of Tatta.

Hydra, a small island of Independent Greece, the ancient Aristeia. It lies on the eastern coast of the Morea about 3 m. from the shore. It is a barren rock, but was an important naval station of the Greeks during the war of the revolution. The town of the same name contains 13,000 inhabitants. The houses are built on the side of a rocky hill and make a very picturesque appearance. The inhabitants are enterprising, and engaged altogether in naval affairs. A Greek newspaper is printed here.

Hypolite, St., a town of France, in the department of Gard, seated on the Vidourle, near its source, 12 m. S. W. of Alais.

Hyss, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the Arabian Irak, on the Euphrates, 120 m. S. of Bagdad.

Hythe. See Hithe.

I

tween 15. 30. and 22. 30. W. long. It is of an irregular oval figure, about 380 m. in length, and 230 in its greatest breadth. For two months together the sun never sets; and in the winter it never rises for the same space, at least not entirely. The coast is indented all round with numerous deep gulfs, bays, and creeks, several of which form excellent harbours. The island is mountainous, stony, and barren; but in some places there are excellent pastures. The chief rivers are in the E. part; the Skalfanda, Oxarfird, and Bruna, all flowing from S. to N. Some are white with lime, others smell of sulphur. The principal mountains, clothed with perpetual snow, are called Yokuls; and of these Snafial, hanging over the sea on the S. W. coast, is esteemed the highest, being computed at 6,860 feet. Mount Hecla, about 2,000 feet in height, is the most noted, and is a volcano: there are also several other volcanoes and the convulsions caused by them in 1783 were so dreadful and multiplied that it was feared the island would fall to pieces; the eruptions were the most tremendous of any recorded in history. The last eruption, which was less terrific in its consequences, occurred in December 1821. The climate is not extremely cold, but the seasons are variable. The sea, at a small distance from the shores, is seldom frozen; and very little ice is ever seen near the W. coast, notwithstanding its proximity to Greenland. Iceland is governed as a dependency of Denmark, and is divided into four provinces, 19 shires, and 184 parishes. The inhabitants were estimated at 50,092 in 1824. Their houses are at a distance from each other, and many of them deep in the ground; but they are all miserable hovels of turf, without windows, and those of the common class are such wretched dens that it is wonderful how anything in the human form can breathe in them. The Danes trade with the natives for hides, tallow, train oil, whalebone, and seahorses' teeth, which are as good as ivory. The established religion is the Lutheran, and there are 300 churches in the island. The distressing scarcity of bibles which had long prevailed, was relieved, in 1815, by a liberal distribution from Britain, which were received with the greatest thankfulness. The principal school, held at a place called Bessestadt, near the W. coast, has three masters, who teach the classics, theology, and the Danish language; and societies have been formed for the cultivation of literature.

Icolmkill, or Iona, one of the Hebrides, near the S. W. point of the isle of Mull, only 4 m. long, and one broad. Here are the ruins of an angustine nunnery, monastery, and cathedral, said to have been founded by St. Columba, about the year 735; also a small chapel dedicated to St. Oran, containing many marble tombstones of the great lords of the isles; and adjoining it is a cemetery, in which many ancient kings of Scotland, Ireland, and Norway, are buried. Other ruins of monastic and druidical edifices can be traced; and many places are pointed out, noted for particular acts of St. Columba. This island was the retreat of learning, during the Gothic ignorance which pervaded Europe, after the overthrow of the Roman Empire; and the seminary whence issued those pious monks and laymen who again revived learning, and propagated Christianity through many kingdoms of Europe.

Ida, a lofty and pointed mountain in the middle of the island of Candia, famous in ancient times as being the place on which Jupiter was brought up, and where there was a temple dedicated to Cybele.

Ila, a mountain of Asiatic Turkey, 140 m. to the W. of Olympus.

Idanha a Nuova, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 3 m. S. W. of Idanha a Velha.

Idanha a Velha, a town of Portugal, in Beira. The French took it by assault in 1704. It is seated on the Ponsul, 25 m. E. of Castel Branco. Long. 6. 14. W., lat. 39. 39. N.

Idria, a town of the Austrian states, in Carniola, celebrated for its rich quicksilver mines, 20 m. E. N. E. of Gorz.

Idstein, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, with a castle, the residence of the duke; situate in a district containing several forests and iron works, 16 m. N. of Mentz, 22. S. W. of Wetzlar.

If, an island in the Mediterranean, on the coast of France, the most eastern of the three before the harbour of Marseilles, and well fortified.

Iglau, a fortified town of Moravia, capital of a circle of the same name, with two convents and a college. Good cloth is manufactured here, and the commerce in corn and hemp is considerable. It is seated on the Iglau, 40 m. W. N. W. of Brinn. Long. 15. 32. E., lat. 49. 28. E.

Iglesias, a town of the island of Sardinia, and a bishop's see, 37 m. W. S. W. of Cagliari. Long. 8. 39. E., lat. 39. 18. N.

Ihor. See Johore.

Ikery, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, formerly the capital of a principality. It was of a great size, surrounded by three concentric walls; but, the court being removed to Nagara, the inhabitants willingly followed, and the town was depopulated.

Ila. See Isla.

Ilah, or Jalak, a town of Nubia, on the Nile, supposed by some to be the ancient Meroe. Long. 34. 30. E., lat. 18. 48. N.

Ilanz, a town of Switzerland, in the Grisons, capital of the Grey League. It is seated on the Rhine, 23 m. S. W. of Coire.

Ilchester, or Welchester, a borough in Somersetshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is a place of great antiquity, and the birth-place of the celebrated Roger Bacon. The election of the county members is held here, and here also is the county gaol. It is seated on the Ivel, 16 m. S. by W. of Wells, and 122 W. by S. of London.

Ildefonso, St., a town of Spain, in New Castile, noted for a magnificent summer palace, built by Philip V.; and for a large manufacture of glass, belonging to the crown. It is 5 m. N. of Uzeda, and 40 N. W. of Madrid.

Ildefonso, St., a town of Mexico, in the province of Guaxaca, seated on a mountain, 70 m. E. N. E. of Guaxaca.

Iderton, a village in Northumberland, Eng. 4 m. S. of Wooler. On a hill near it is a semicircular encampment, defended by two high rampiers of earth, and a deep fosse, with an inner circle of stones, which appear uncemented. The area is about 100 yards diameter, and contains many remains of buildings.

Ilfracomb, a sea-port in Devonshire, Eng. It has a spacious natural basin, with a good pier and quay, projecting into the Bristol Channel. This port employs a number of brigs and sloops, chiefly in carrying ore from Cornwall, coal from Wales, and corn from Bristol; also a number of fishing skiffs. It is 49 m. N. N. W. of Exeter, and 202 W. of London.

Ilheos, a province of Brazil, S. of that of All Saints Bay. Its chief town of the same name is seated at the mouth of the river Ilheos, 130 m. S. S. W. of St. Salvador. Long. 40. 15. W., lat. 14 55. S.

Ilkuch, a town of Poland, in the Palatinate of Cracow, remarkable for its silver and lead mines, 15 m. N. W. of Cracow.

Ille, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees, on the river Teck, 10 m. W. of Perpignan.

Ille-et-Vilaine, a department of France, containing part of the late province of Bretagne. It takes its name from two rivers, which unite at Rennes, the capital of the department.

Iller, a river of Germany, which rises in Tyrol, runs N. through Bavaria, and joins the Danube near Ulm.

Illscas, a town of Spain, in New Castle, 15 m. S. S. W. of Madrid, and 15. N. N. E. of Toledo.

Illinois, a river of North America, formed by the junction of several streams near the S. end of Lake Michigan: after taking a S. W. course of 250 m. it enters the Mississippi, 30 m. above the influx of the Missouri.

Illinois, one the United States, bounded on the N. by the N. W. Territory. E. by Indiana. S. by Kentucky and W. by the State and Territory of Missouri. It extends from 37. to 42 30. N. lat. and from 87. 17. to 91. 50. W. long. 350 m. in length and 160 in mean breadth and containing 56,000 sq m. The Mississippi washes its western, and the Ohio its southern border, and it is traversed by the Illinois and Kaskaskia rivers. The N. E. corner touches upon Lake Michigan. This State is not traversed by any ranges of hills or mountains; the surface in general is level, but in a few instances uneven, and approaching to hilly. It may be arranged under three general heads.

1. The alluvions of rivers, which are from one to eight m. in width, in some places elevated, and in others low, and subject to inundation. They consist of an intermixture of woods and prairie. The soil is almost invariably fertile—such are the banks, on the Mississippi, Wabash, Illinois, Kaskaskia, &c. 2. After leaving the alluvions, and rising to the 'bluffs' which bound them, is a tract of level land, elevated from fifty to one hundred feet, and which is sometimes called 'table land.' The greater proportion of this is prairie, which in some places is dry, and in others wet and marshy, depending upon the convexity or concavity of the surface. The soil is less fertile than that of the alluvions, but is generally preferred by emigrants. The tract of country between the Mississippi and Kaskaskia rivers belongs to this class. 3. In the interior and towards the northern part of the State, the country becomes rough and uneven. It consists of an intermixture of woods and prairies, diversified with gentle or abrupt slopes, sometimes attaining the elevation of hills, and irrigated with a number of streams. The most of the country which lies south of a line drawn from the mouth of the Wabash to the mouth of the Kaskaskia, is covered with timber. A very few prairies, and those inconsiderable in point of size, may be found immediately south of this line. Crossing that line, the timber is found to decrease in quantity, and the prairies to expand; yet the latter are still comparatively small, wholly unconnected with each other, and their outlines distinctly marked by the thick forests which surround and separate them. Advancing to the north, the prairie surface begins to predominate; the prairies now become large, and communicate with each other like a chain of lakes, by means of numerous avenues or vistas; still, however, the traveller is surrounded by timber; his eye never loses sight of the deep green outline, throwing out its capes and headlands: though he sees no more than dense forests and large trees, whose deep shade almost appalled him in the south. Travelling on from the centre of the State to its northern limit, we find ourselves surrounded by one vast prairie. In the country over which we have passed, the forest is interspersed with these interesting plains; here, the prairie is studded with groves and copses, and the streams fringed with strips of woodland. The eye sometimes wanders over immense plains covered with grass, discovering no other object on which to rest, and finding no limit to its vision but the distant horizon; while more frequently it wanders from grove to grove, and from one point of woodland to another, charmed and refreshed by an endless variety of rural beauty. The growth of the bottom lands consists of black walnut, ash of several species, hackberry, elm, (white, red, and slippery,) sugar-maple, honey-locust, buck-eye, catalpa, sycamore, cottonwood, pecan, hickory, mulberry, several oaks—as, over cup, bur oak, swamp or water oak, white, red or Spanish oak; and of the shrubbery are red-bud, papaw, grape vine, dogwood, spice bush, hazle, green-brier, &c. Along the margin of the streams, the sycamore and cottonwood often predominate, and attain to an amazing size. The cottonwood is of rapid growth, a light, white wood, sometimes used for rails, shingles, and scantlings, not lasting, nor of no great value. Its dry, light wood is much used in steam-boats.

The northern portion of Illinois is said to be inexhaustibly rich in mineral productions, while coal, secondary limestone, and sandstone, are found in every part. Iron ore is often found in the southern parts of the State, and is said to exist in considerable quantities near the rapids of Illinois. Native copper in small quantities has been found on Muddy river, in Jackson county, and back of Harrisonville, in the bluffs of Monroe county. One mass weighing seven pounds was found detached at the latter place. A shaft was sunk forty feet deep in 1817, in search of this metal, but without success. Red oxide of iron and oxide of copper were dug out. Crystallized gypsum has been found in small quantities in St. Clair county. Quartz crystals exist in Gallatin county. Silver is supposed to exist in St. Clair county, 2 m. from Rock-Spring, from whence Silver creek derives its name. In the early settlements by the French, a shaft was sunk here, and tradition tells of large quantities of the precious metal being obtained. In 1828, many persons in this vicinity commenced digging, and began to dream of immense fortunes, which however vanished during the following winter. They dug up considerable quantities of hornblende the shining specula of which were mistaken for silver. Lead is found in vast quantities in the northern part of Illinois, and the adjacent territory. Here are the richest lead mines hitherto discovered on the globe. This portion of country lies principally north of Rock river and south of the Wisconsin. Dubuque's and other rich mines, are west of the Mississippi. There is scarcely a county in the State, but what can furnish coal in reasonable quantities. Large beds are said to exist near the junction of Fox river with the Illinois, and in the vicinity of the rapids of the latter. Salt is found in various parts of the State, held in solution in the springs. The manufacture of salt by boiling and evaporation is carried on in Gallatin county, 12 m. W. N. W. from Shawneetown; in Jackson county, near Brownsville; and in Vermillion county, near Danville. The springs and land are owned by the State, and the works leased. A coarse marble, much used in building, is dug from quarries near Alton, on the Mississippi, where large bodies exist. Scattered over the surface of the prairies, are large masses of rock, of granitic formation, roundish in form, usually called by the people lost rocks. They will weigh from one thousand to ten or twelve thousand pounds, and are entirely detached, and frequently are found several miles distant from any quarry. There has never been a quarry of granite discovered in the State.

Agriculture is thriving, but education in Illinois is still in its infancy, and many of the settlers have no proper view of its necessity and importance. Many adults, especially females, are unable to read or write, and many more, who are able to read a little, cannot readily understand what they attempt to read, and therefore take no pleasure in books and study. Common schools are usually taught some part of the year in most of the settlements, but more frequently by teachers wholly incompetent to the task. The Methodists are the most numerous religious sect. This state is divided in 52 counties, and has a pop. of 157,575, of whom 746 are slaves. The capital is Vandalia. The state was admitted into the Union in 1818. The legislature is composed of a Senate and House of Representatives called the General Assembly. The Senates are chosen for 4 years and the Representatives for 2. The governor is chosen for 4 years. Elections are popular, and suffrage is universal. In the northern part are many Indian tribes, as the Kaskas, Sauks, Foxes, Potawatamies, &c.

Ilm, a town of Saxony, on a river of its name, 13 m. N. W. of Rudolstadt, and 14 S. by E. of Erfurt.

Imen, a lake of Russia, in the government of Novogorod, 48 miles long, and from 12 to 18 broad. Near it stands the city of Novogorod. It communicates with lake Ladoga, by the river Volkhof.

Imenau, a town of Saxe-Weimar, in Henneberg. Near it is a mineral spring; also a copper and silver mine. It is seated near the source of the Ilm 17 m. E. S. E. of Smarkalden.

Imminster, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. with a manufacture of narrow cloths. It is seated among hills, near the river Ille, 26 m. S. W. of Wells, and 136 W. by S. of London.

Isley, a town in Berkshire, Eng. seated between two hills, 14 m. N. W. of Reading, and 54 W. of London.

Ist, a town of the Netherlands, in Friesland, seated on the Weymer, 12 m. S. of Lewarden.

Istrop, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, 27 m. S. S. E. of Gotheburg.

Itten, a town of Hanover, in the province of Luneburg, 16 m. S. S. W. of Zell.

Itzhofen, a town of Prussian Saxony, 8 m. N. E. of Halle.

Imbro, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, about 20 m. in circumference. It is mountainous and woody, and affords plenty of game. Long. 25. 44. E., lat. 40. 10. N.

Imcritia, a country of Asia, lying E. of the Black Sea; bounded on the S. by Turkey, W. by Mingrelia, N. by Osseta, and E. by Georgia, of which it is properly speaking, a part. The inhabitants estimated at not more than 20,000 families, are scattered over the country in small hamlets. They send yearly considerable quantities of wine to the neighbouring parts of Georgia, in leather bags, carried by horses; but they are without manufactures, very poor and miserable, and cruelly treated by their landlord. Cutais, or Cotatis, is the capital.

Immenstadt, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of the Upper Danube, situate on a small river which soon after joins the Iller, 12 m. S. of Kemp-ton.

Imola, an episcopal town of Italy, in the delegation of Ravenna, with a strong citadel. It is surrounded by walls, towers, and ditches; contains 16 churches and 17 convents; and is seated on the Santerno, 13 m. W. by S. of Ravenna and 45 N. N. E. of Florence.

Inchbroyock, a small island of Scotland, in Forfarshire, within the mouth of the South Esk, near Montrose, with which it communicates by a draw-bridge. It has also a large and convenient dry dock.

Inchcolm, a small island of Scotland, in the frith of Forth, near the village of Aberdour, on the coast of Fife. Here is the ruins of a famous monastery, founded by Alexander I. in 1123, to commemorate the hospitable treatment he received here from a hermit.

Inchgarvie, a small island of the frith of Forth, nearly in the middle of the passage over the Queensferry.

Inchkeith, a small island of the frith of Forth lying midway between the ports of Leith and Kinghorn. Here is a light-house, and also a ruinous fort.

Inchmarnock, a small island of Scotland, on the S. W. side of Bute. The ruins of a chapel dedicated to St. Marnock are still to be seen; and on the W. side are vast strata of coral and shells.

Indal, a town of Sweden, in Medelpadia, on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the gulf of Bothnia, 16 m. N. by W. of Sundiawald.

Indapour See Indrapour.

Inden Hotun, a town of Chinese Tartary capital of the Mantcheou Tartars, 420 m. E. N. E. of Peking.

Independence, a township in Alleghany Co. N. Y. Pop. 877. Also townships in Sussex Co. N. J. Cuyahoga Co. Ohio and Bond Co. Illinois.

India, or Hind, a contraction of Hindoostan, is a name often given to that region of Asia lying to the S. of Tartary, and between Persia and China, with its independent islands. It contains, besides Hindoostan, the Birman Empire, Siam, Cochin China, Touquin, Thibet, Japan, and Ceylon; but is now, in its geographical features, more usually, and far more properly, described under those respective heads, which see.

Indiana, one of the United States, bounded N. by Michigan Territory, E. by Ohio, S. by Kentucky; and W. by Illinois. It extends from 37 45. to 41. 50. N. lat. and from 84. 42 to 87. 49. W. long. It is 257 m. long, and 255 broad, and contains 36,000 sq. m. It is washed on the Southern boundary by the Ohio and traversed by the White and Wabash rivers.

There are no mountains in Indiana; the country, however, is more hilly than Illinois, particularly towards the Ohio river. A range of hills called the Knobs, extends from the falls of the Ohio to the Wabash, in a south-west direction, which, in many places, produces a broken and uneven surface. North of these hills lie the flat woods, 70 m. wide. Bordering on all the principal streams, except the Ohio, there are strips of bottom and prairie land; both together from 3 to 6 m. in width. Between the Wabash and lake Michigan, the country is mostly champaign, abounding alternately with wood-lands, prairies, lakes and swamps. A range of hills runs parallel with the Ohio, from the mouth of the Great Miami to Blue river, alternately approaching to within a few rods, and receding to the distance of 2 m. Immediately below Blue river, the hills disappear, and there is presented to view an immense tract of level land, covered with a heavy growth of timber. North of the Wabash, between Tippecanoe and Ouitanon, the banks of the streams are high, abrupt and broken, and the land except the prairies, is well timbered. Between the Plein and Theakiki, the country is flat, wet and swampy, interspersed with prairies of an inferior soil. The sources of rivers are generally in swamps or lakes and the country around them is low, and too wet for cultivation. There are two kinds of prairies,—the river and the upland prairies. The former are bottoms, destitute of timber and are said to exhibit vestiges of former cultivation; the latter are from 30 to 100 feet more elevated, and are far more numerous and extensive. Some of them are not larger than a common field, while others extend farther than the eye can reach. They are usually bounded by heavy-timbered forests, and not unfrequently adorned with copses of small trees. In spring and summer, they are covered with a luxuriant growth of grass and fragrant flowers, from six to eight feet high. The soil of these plains is often as deep and fertile as the best bottoms. The intervals bordering on the Wabash are particularly rich. Wells have been dug in them, where the vegetable soil was 22 feet deep, under which was a stratum of fine white sand. The ordinary depth is from two to five feet. The principal productions of this state are wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, barley, buck-wheat, potatoes, pulse, beef, pork, butter, whiskey and peach brandy. There are salt springs in different parts, but they are little used. The salt is more cheaply obtained from the neighbouring States. Coal, iron, and copper are found in some places.

The climate is generally healthy and pleasant, closely resembling that of Ohio. The Wabash is frozen over in the winter, so that it may be safely crossed on the ice. This state abounds with large caverns, the most celebrated of which is called the Epsom Salts Cave, from the quantity of that mineral which it contains. The hill, in which the cave is situated, is about 400 feet high from the base to the most elevated point; and the prospect to the south-east, in a clear day, is exceedingly fine, commanding an extensive view of the hills and valleys bordering on Big Blue river. The top of the hill is covered principally with oak and chesnut. The side to the south-east is mantled with cedar. The entrance is about midway from the base to the summit, and the surface of the cave preserves in general, about that elevation. After entering the cave by an aperture of twelve or fifteen feet wide, and in height, in one place, three or four feet, you descend with easy and gradual steps into a large and spacious room, which continues about a quarter of a mile, pretty nearly of the same appearance, varying in height from eight to thirty feet, and in breadth from ten to twenty. In this distance the roof is, in some places arched; in others a plane and in one place, particularly, it resembles an inside view of the roof of a house. At the distance above named, the cave forks; but the right hand fork soon terminates, while the left rises by a flight of rocky stairs, nearly 10 feet high, into another story, and pursues a course at this place nearly south-east. Here the roof commences a regular arch, the height of which, from the floor, varies from 5 to 8 feet and the width of the cave from 6 to 12 feet; which continues to what is called the creeping place, from the circumstance of the visitor's crawling 10 or 12 feet into the next large room. From this place to the Pillar, a distance of about one mile and a quarter, the visitor finds an alternate succession of large and small rooms, variously decorated; sometimes mounting elevated points by gradual or difficult ascents, and again descending us far below; sometimes travelling on a pavement, or climbing over huge piles of rocks, detached from the roof by some convulsion of nature; and thus continues his route, until he arrives at the pillar.

The aspect of this large and stately white column, as it comes in sight from the dim reflection of the torches, is grand and impressive. Visitors have seldom pushed their enquiries further than two or three hundred yards beyond this pillar. This column is about fifteen feet in diameter, from twenty to thirty in height, and regularly reeded from the top to the bottom. In the vicinity of this spot are some inferior pillars of the same appearance and texture. Chemically speaking, it is difficult to say what are the constituent parts of these columns, but lime appears to be the base. Epsom salts, abounds throughout this cave in almost its whole extent, in a manner which, has no parallel in the history of that article. This neutral salt is found in a great variety of forms, and in many different stages of formation, sometimes in lumps, varying from one to ten pounds in weight. The earth exhibits a shining appearance, from the numerous particles interspersed throughout the huge piles of dirt collected in different parts of the cave. The walls are covered in different places with the same article, and reproduction goes on rapidly. With a view to ascertain this, a visitor removed from a particular place every vestige of salt, and in four or five weeks the place was covered with small needle shaped crystals, exhibiting the appearance of frost. The quality of the salt in this cave is inferior to none. The worst earth that has been tried, will yield four pounds of salt to the bushel, and the best, from twenty to twenty five pounds. This quantity is inexhaustible. The next production is the nitrate of lime, or saltpetre earth. There are vast quantities of this. There are also large quantities of the nitrate of alumine, or nitrate of argil, which will yield as much nitrate of potash, or saltpetre, in proportion to the quantities of earth, as the nitrate of lime. The three articles above enumerated, are first in quantity and importance; but there are several others, which deserve notice as subjects of philosophical curiosity. The sulphate of lime, or plaster of Paris, is to be seen variously formed; ponderous, crystallized and impalpable or soft, light, and rather spongy. Vestiges of the sulphate of iron are also to be seen in one or two places. Small specimens of the carbonate, also the nitrate of magnesia, have been found. The rocks in the cave principally consist of carbonate of lime, or common lime stone. Near the forks of the cave are two specimens of painting, probably of Indian origin. The one appears to be a savage, with something like a bow in his hand, and furnishes the hint, that it was done when that instrument of death was in use. The other is so much defaced, that it is impossible to say what it was intended to represent.

This state is divided into 64 counties. The pop. is 341,582. In the N. part are many Potawatamies and Chippeway Indians. There are no slaves. The State was admitted into the union in 1816. The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Representatives, styled the General Assembly. The Senators are chosen for 3 years and the Representative for 1. The Governor is chosen for 3 years. Suffrage is universal. The capital of the state is Indianapolis. There is a college at Bloomington, and provision is made by the state for the support of schools.

Indiana, a county of the Western District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 14,251. The chief town has the same name. Also a town in Alleghany Co. Pa.

Indianapolis, the capital of the state of Indiana is situated in Marion county on White River in the centre of the state. It has but recently been established.

Indian Old Town, a settlement of Penobscot Indians, on an island in Penobscot river Maine, a little above the great falls. It consists of about 500 souls.

Indian Town, villages in Dorchester Co. Md. Currituck Co. N. C. and Williamsburg Dis. S. C.

Indies, East, the name given by Europeans to that vast tract of country in Asia which is situated to the S. of Tartary, between Persia and China (see Hindoostan), as well as to a great number of islands in the Indian Ocean, extending from the peninsula of Hindoostan as far E. as New Guinea, and from the bay of Bengal and the China Sea as far S. as New Holland. The most western of them are the Maldives, and the most eastern the Moluccas; between which are several very large ones, as Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, and Celebes; besides many others of considerable importance as to riches, though much inferior in extent.

Indies, West, a denomination under which is comprehended a large chain of islands extended in a curve from the Florida shore on the northern peninsula of America to the gulf of Venezuela on the southern. Columbus gave this name to them under the notion that they formed part of the Indian continent, which it was his object in his first voyage to find; and this opinion was so general that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of an agreement granted to Columbus, upon his return, gave them the name of Indies. Even after the error which gave rise to this opinion was detected, and the position of the New World was ascertained, the name has remained, and the appellation of West Indies is given by all the people of Europe to these islands, and that of Indians to the inhabitants, not only of these islands, but of the continent of America. The principal of these islands are Curacao, Trinidad, Tobago, Grenada, St. Vincent, Barbadoes, Martinique, Dominica, Marie Galante, Guadaloupe, Antigua, Barbuda, St. Christopher, St. Eustatia, St. Bartholomew, St. Martin, Anguilla, St. Thomas, Porto-Rico, St. Domingo, Jamaica, Cuba, and the Bahamas.

Most of the Antilles are situated under the tropic of Cancer, and there is not much difference in their climate; accurate observations made on any one of them may be applied with little variation to them all. The spring begins about the month of May; the savannas then change their russet hue, and the trees are adorned with a verdant foliage. The periodical rains from the south may at this time be expected; they fall generally about noon, and occasion a rapid and luxuriant vegetation. The thermometer varies considerably; it falls sometimes six or eight degrees after the diurnal rains; but its medium height may be stated at 78 of Fahrenheit. After these showers have continued for a short period, the tropical summer appears in all its splendour. Clouds are seldom seen in the sky; the heat of the sun is only rendered supportable by the sea breeze, which blows regularly from the south-east during the greatest part of the day. The nights are calm and serene, the moon shines more brightly than in Europe, and emits a light that enables man to read the smallest print; its absence is, in some degree, compensated by the planets, and above all by the luminous effulgence of the galaxy. From the middle of August to the end of September, the thermometer rises frequently above 90, the refreshing sea breeze is then interrupted, and frequent calms announce the approach of the great periodical rains. Fiery clouds are seen in the atmosphere, and the mountains appear less distant to the spectator than at other seasons of the year. The rain falls in torrents about the beginning of October, the rivers overflow their banks, and a great portion of the low grounds are submerged. The rain that fell in Barbadoes in the year 1754, is said to have exceeded 87 inches. The moisture of the atmosphere is so great, that iron and other metals easily oxydated are covered with rust. This humidity continues under a burning sun;—the inhabitants, (say some writers,) live in a vapour bath; it may be proved, without using this simile, that a residence in the lower part of the country at this season is disagreeable, unwholesome, and dangerous to a European. A gradual relaxation of the system diminishes the activity of the vital functions, and produces at last a general atony.

It has been observed by travellers that most of the wild animals indigenous to the West Indies are of a small size, as the Vespertilio molluscus, the Viverra caudivolvula, and the Mus pilorides. Lizards and different sorts of serpents are not uncommon; but the greatest number of them are harmless, and, with the exception of Martinique and St. Lucia, no scorpions are to be found in the Lesser Antilles. This noxious reptile is frequently observed in Porto Rico, and it exists probably in all the larger islands. The cayman haunts the stagnant waters, and negroes are sometimes exposed to its murderous bite. The parrot and its various species from the macaw to the paroquet frequent the forests; aquatic birds in unnumbered flocks enliven the shores. The colibri or humming-bird is the sportive inhabitant of these warm climes; it seldom remains long in the same place, but is seen for a moment on the blossoms of the orange or lime tree, and displays in its golden plumage the brightest tints of the emerald and the ruby. Trees similar to those that we have admired in other tropical countries grow in equal luxuriance on these islands. The Banana, which in its full growth appears like a cluster of trees, is at first weak, and requires the support of a neighbouring plant. A canoe made from a single trunk of the wild cotton tree, has been known to contain a hundred persons, and the leaf of a particular kind of palm tree affords a shade to five or six men. The royal palmetto or mountain-cabbage grows to the extraordinary height of two hundred feet, and its verdant summit is shaken by the slightest breeze.

Many of the plantations are enclosed by rows of Campeachy and Brazilian trees; the corab is as much prized for its thick shade as for its excellent fruit, and the fibrous bark of the great cecropia is converted into strong cordage. The trees most valuable on account of their timber, are the tamarindus, the cedar, the Spanish mountain ash, the iron tree, and the laurus chloroxylon, which is well adapted for the construction of mills. The dwellings of the settlers are shaded by orange, lemon, and pomegranate trees, that fill the air with the perfume of their flowers, while their branches are loaded with fruit. The apple, the peach, and the grape ripen in the mountains. The date, the sapata, and sapotilla, the mammee, several oriental fruits, the rose apple, the guava, the munga and different species of spondias and annonas grow on the sultry plains.

The heights are covered in many places with groves of the Myrtus pimenta, and no other shrub grows under its fragrant shade. The ignama and potato are the principal food of the negroes; manioc and angola pulse have been imported from Africa. But the West Indian planter is wholly occupied in ministering to the wants or luxuries of Europeans; were it not for the immense supplies of corn brought annually from Canada and the United States, these fertile islands might be desolated by famine. Sugar is the great staple considered in many respects superior to the common creole plant.

A field of canes is in arow or full bloom about the month of November. At this period of its growth there are few objects in the vegetable kingdom that can vie with it in beauty. The canes are seldom lower than three feet and sometimes higher than eight; this difference proceeds from the nature of the soil and the mode of cultivation.

A ripe field may be compared to an immense sheet of waving gold tinged by the sun's rays with the finest purple. The stem with its narrow depending leaves is at first of a dark green colour but changes as it ripens to a bright yellow; an arow or silver wand sprouts from its summit, and grows generally to the height of four or five feet; the apex is covered with clusters of white and blue flowers not unlike tufts of feathers. The finest plantations are sometimes destroyed by fire, a calamity which occurs too frequently in these islands. No conflagration is more rapid, none more alarming; those who have witnessed such scenes can best describe them. The hopes and fortune of the husbandman, the painful toil of many hundred slaves, the labour of years are in a few moments destroyed. If a plantation is by any accident set on fire, the inhabitants sound the alarm shell, and the shrill blast is repeated from the neighbouring hills. Rolling smoke, spreading flames, and cracking reeds are sometimes the first indications of danger. Louder notes are afterwards heard from a distance; bands of negroes hasten to the flames, their fears and exertions, the cruelty of their overseers, the noisy impatience of the planters, groups of horses and mules moving in the back ground increase the effect of so sublime a picture.

The cotton plant flourishes on dry and rocky lands, if they have not been too much exhausted by former cultivation. Dryness is of great advantage to it in all its stages; when the shrub is in blossom or when the pods begin to unfold, the plant is rendered completely useless by heavy rains. These observations apply to every species, but more particularly to that sort which is cultivated by the French settlers. There are several varieties of this shrub, all of them resemble each other; the best are the green seed, the Brazilian, and the French or small seed.

There is but one species of the coffee tree here; it is supposed to be a native of Arabia Felix. This commodity of the West Indies; the cane was transported hither from the eastern continent by Columbus in his second voyage. The Otaheite cane has been generally introduced into the Antilles since the time of Captain Cook; it is considered to be a native of Arabia Felix. This plant was brought to Batavia, from thence to Amsterdam and Paris, and afterwards transplanted to Surinam and Martinique. It seldom bears fruit before the third season, and sometimes not until the fifth or sixth; it never lasts more than thirty years, and frequently decays long before that time. A single plant may produce from one to four pounds of coffee.

These islands were the resort of the Buccaneers, those celebrated freebooters, so noted and formidable during the seventeenth century. These bold adventurers attacked, in small numbers, and with small means, but with an intrepidity which bade defiance to danger, not only single merchant vessels, but several of them together, and sometimes armed ships. Their common mode of attack was by boarding. They directed their efforts especially against the Spanish ships which sailed for Europe laden with the treasures of America. By the repeated losses which they suffered, the Spaniards were at last so discouraged, that they seldom offered a serious resistance. Their manner of dividing their booty was remarkable. Every one who had a share in the expedition swore that he had reserved nothing of the plunder. A false oath was of extremely rare occurrence, and was punished by banishment to an uninhabited island. The wounded first received their share, which was greater according to the severity of their wounds. The remainder was divided into equal parts, and distributed by lot. The leader received more than the others, only when he had particularly distinguished himself. Those who had perished in the expedition were not forgotten. Their part was given to their relations or friends, and, in default of them, to the poor and to the church. Religion was strangely blended with their vices, and they always began their enterprises with a prayer. The wealth which they acquired was spent in gambling and debauchery, for it was the principle of these adventurers to enjoy the present and not care for the future. The climate and their mode of life gradually diminished their number, and the vigorous measures of the English and French governments at last put an end to their outrages, which had, perhaps, been purposely tolerated.

Indore, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Malwah, capital of one of the Poonah Maharratta chiefs, who was defeated by the British in 1804, and his successor compelled to enter into an engagement to renounce all connexion with the enemies of the British, and to furnish, when required, 3,000 cavalry. It is seated on a river that flows into the Nerbuddah, 28 m. S. S. E. of Ougein. Long. 76. 11. E., lat. 22. 5. N.

Indrapour, a seaport on the W. coast of Sumatra, capital of a district of the same name. 160 m. N. W. of Bencoolen.

Indre, a department of France, including part of the ci-devant province of Berry. It has its name from a river, which rises in this department flows into that of Indre-et-Loire, and joins the Loire 4 m. below the influx of the Cher. Its area is estimated at 5,869 sq. m.; its pop. 205,000 Chateauroux is the capital.

Indre-et-Loire, a department of France, including almost the whole of the province of Touraine and bounded by the departments of the Loire-et-Cher, the Indre, the Vienne, and the Maine. It consists mostly of fine plains, interspersed, however, with small hills. The principal rivers are the Loire, the Vienne, the Cher, and the Indre. Tours is the capital.

Indus, or Sinde, a great river of Asia, having its source in a range of mountains of Tartary, between 38. and 39. of N. lat. From Thibet it takes a S. W. course, and enters Hindoostan in about 35. N. lat. It has always been considered as the western barrier of Hindoostan. 60 m. from its source it is joined by the Cabul, when it is no longer fordable. Between 25. and 26. of lat. it enters the province of Sinde, and here we find it again divided into two considerable branches; the principal or western divided into numerous streams, which form a Delta similar to that of the Nile or Ganges: they are, however, very shallow and only navigable by boats. It is said to be 1,350 m. in length and some parts of it are capable of bearing vessels of 200 tons. But there is very little commerce transported by it. Its water is very wholesome. On the E. of this river is a great sandy desert, extending nearly 500 m. in length, and from 60 to 150 in breadth.

Industry, pt. Somerset Co. Me. Pop. 962.

Ingelzungen, a town of Wurtemberg, on the Kocher, 20 m. S. S. W. of Mergentheim.

Ingelheim, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, seated on an eminence, on the river Salva, 9 m. E. of Bingen.

Ingelborough, one of the highest mountains of England, in Yorkshire, 8 m. N. N. W. of Settle. It is 2,361 feet above the level of sea.

Inglescille, p.v. Montgomery Co. Va.

Ingleton, a village in West Yorkshire, Eng. at the foot of Ingelborough mountain. It is tolerably well built, and has manufactures of cotton yarn. Near it are several collieries, which supply the surrounding country to a considerable distance with coals. 10 m. W. N. W. of Settle, and 245 N. W. of London.

Inglis Island, an island on the N. coast of New Holland, near the entrance of the gulf of Carpentaria.

Ingolstadt, a town of Bavaria. It is one of the strongest places in Germany, surrounded by a morass. The houses are built of stone, and the streets are large. Here was formerly a university, which in 1800 was transferred to Landshut. It is seated on the Danube, 9 m. E. of Neuburg, and 45 N. by W. of Munich. Long. 11. 25 E., lat. 48. 46. N.

Ingraham Islands, a cluster of islands, seven in number, in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Ingraham, of Boston, in 1791, and named Washington, Adams, Lincoln, Federal, Franklin, Hancock, and Knox. Federal island (or Nocheva) is considered the largest, most populous, and fertile. They appear generally to be diversified with hills and valleys, and to be well wooded. Most of them are inhabited, and the people resemble those of the Marquesas.

Ingrande, a town of France in the department of Maine-et-Loire, situate on the Loire, 15 m. W. S. W. of Angers.

Ingre, a town of France in the department of the Loiret, 4 m. N. W. of Orleans.

Inishannon, a town of Ireland in the county of Cork, with a considerable linen manufacture; seated on the Brandon, 7 m. N. W. of Kinsale.

Inn, a large river of Austria, which rises in the Swiss canton of Grisons, flows N. E. through Tyrol and Bavaria, and joins the Danube at Passau, where it is nearly 900 feet wide. It becomes navigable at Hall, in the Tyrol, and its whole course is more than 250 m.

Innaconda, a fortress of Hindoostan, in the Guntoor circar, situate on a hill, 46 m. N. W. of Ongole.

Insch, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, 26 m. W. N. W. of Aberdeen.

Inspruck, a fortified town of Austria, capital of Tyrol, with a strong castle, formerly the residence of the archdukes of Austria. The principal manufacture is that of cotton, but it has also manufactures of silk and woollen stuffs, and all kinds of glass wares; and the transit trade from Germany to Italy is considerable. Inspruck was entered by the French in 1805, and was the scene of several heroic efforts of the Tyrolese against the French and Bavarians in 1809. It is seated in a pleasant valley, on the river Inn, 62 m. S. of Munich.

Insterberg, a town and circle of East Prussia, on the Angerap, in the government of Gumbinnen. Its chief trade is in corn and linseed. The circle is of great extent, comprehending a pop. of 150,000. Part of it is covered with forests, but the soil of the rest is fertile, and pastures are extensive: manufactures are hardly known here. The town is 50 m. E. of Konigsberg; and contains 5,300 inhabitants.

Interlachen, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, in the canton of Bern, 28 m. S. S. W. of Lucern, and 32 S. E. of Bern.

Inverary, a borough of Scotland, of the county-town of Argyleshire, situate on the N. W. side of Loch Fyne, and the influx of the Aray. It has some manufactures and a trade in wool, timber, and oak bark; but its chief support is from the herring fishery. Near the town is Inverary Castle, the seat of the duke of Argyll; and in the neighbourhood is a considerable iron-work. The planting around Inverary is very extensive and admirably variegated. 45 m. N. W. of Glasgow, and 75 W. N. W. of Edinburgh.

Inverberrie. See Bervie.

Invergordon, a village of Scotland, in Ross-shire, at the mouth of the frith of Cromarty, 8 m. S. S. E. of Tain. It has a good harbour, and a regular ferry over the frith to the town of Cromarty.

Inverkeithing, a borough and seaport of Scotland, in Fife-shire, with a considerable trade in coal and salt. Before the entrance of the harbour is a bay, which affords safe anchorage for ships of any burden in all winds. The harbour itself is commodious, and has two quays. It is situate on the N. side of the frith of Forth, 18 m. N. W. of Edinburgh.

Inverleithen, a village of Scotland, on the river Tweed, at the influx of the Leithen, 5 m. E. of Peebles. Here is an extensive woollen manufacture; and near it is a sulphurous spring.

Inverness, a borough of Scotland, capital of a county of the same name, situate on both sides of the river Ness, near its entrance into the frith of Murray. It has a commodious harbour, and a good salmon fishery. The trade is very considerable, and the town is rapidly improving. The principal manufactures are those of hemp and flax; and there are also woollen and other manufactures, tanneries, brick works, &c., which furnish employment to many of the inhabitants. On an eminence are the ruins of the old castle, demolished by the rebels in 1746; and over the Ness is a stone bridge of seven arches. The court-house, nearly in the centre of the town, is a modern building, with a fine tower, terminated by an elegant spire, which sustained considerable injury from the earthquake in 1816. Near this town, on Colledon Heath, the duke of Cumberland gained a decisive victory over the rebels in 1746. To the W. of the town is the hill of Craig Phatric, on the summit of which are the extensive remains of a vitrified fort, so called from the marks of fusion which the cement and stones exhibit. Inverness is 50 m. N. E. of Fort William, and 156 N. of Edinburgh.

Inverness-shire, the most extensive county of Scotland; bounded on the N. by Ross-shire; E. by the counties of Nairne, Murray, and Aberdeen; S. by those of Perth, and Argyll; and W. by the Atlantic Ocean. It also includes several of the Hebrides. Independent of the islands, it is 80 m. long and 50 broad. It comprehends the district of Badenoch, Lochaber, and Glenalyn, which are subdivided into 32 parishes. The principal towns are Inverness, Fort William (or Inverlochry), and Fort Augustus. The N. part is mountainous and barren, and supposed to be the most elevated ground in Scotland. This county has several considerable lakes, and is divided, in a manner, into two equal parts, by those of Ness, Oich, Lochy, and Lochiel, united by the Caledonian Canal, which forms a communication between the two seas. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are, in general, fertile; the high grounds feed many sheep and black cattle, numerous herds of goats are found in every district. The mountains and forests are inhabited by immense numbers of red and roe deer; the alpine and common hare, and other game, are also abundant. Limestone, iron-ore, and some traces of different minerals have been found in this county, with beautiful rock crystals of various tints; but no mines have hitherto been worked with much success. The principal rivers are the Spey, the Beauly, the Ness, and the Lochy.

Inverness, a township of Buckingham Co. L. C.

Inverugie, a village of Scotland, on the E. coast of Aberdeenshire at the mouth of the Ugie, 1 m. N. of Peterhead. It has an extensive bleach field, and a considerable brewery. Near it are the ruins of Inverugie Castle.

Inverury, an ancient borough of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, seated at the conflux of the Don and the Ury, 15 m. W. N. W. of Aberdeen.

Iona. See Icolmhill.

Ionia, p.v. Onondaga Co. N. Y.

Ionian Islands, a recently constituted republic of Europe, comprising, besides a number of islets, the 7 principal islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, or Thiaki, Cerigo, and Paxo; of which Corfu, lying opposite to Albania is the most northerly. The territorial extent of this small state is estimated at about 1,500 sq. m. The climate is in general mild, but the transitions from heat to cold are sudden: hot and scorching winds are sometimes destructive to vegetation; and at certain seasons there are violent rains and thunder. They are all subject to slight earthquakes, which are sometimes confined to a single island. The soil in the plains and valleys is fer tile in vines, corn, olives, currants, cotton, honey wax, &c. Pasturage is in general scanty; goats and sheep are reared in considerable number; but horses and cattle are brought from the continent. The wild animals are foxes, hares, and rabbits. Prior to the French revolution these islands were subject to Venice, but were ceded to France by the treaty of Campo Formio (1797.) After repeatedly changing masters, the republic was placed under the protection of Great Britain by the arrangements of the congress of Vienna; and a constitution for this small state was drawn up and ratified by the British government in July, 1817.

Ips, a town of Austria, near the conflux of the Ips with the Danube. 22 m. W. of St. Polten.

Ipsala, a town of European Turkey, in Rumania, and a Greek archbishop's see. Near it are mines of alum: and red wine is an article of commerce. It is seated on the Marissa, 43 m. S. of Adrianople.

Ipsara, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 15 m. N. W. of the island of Scio. To the W. is another small island, called Anti-Ipsara.

Ipsheim, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth, 17 m. N. N. W. of Anspich.

Ipswich, a borough and principal town of Suffolk, Eng. It was once surrounded by a wall, traces of which are yet to be seen. It is irregularly built, and has declined from its former consequence, but now contains 12 parish churches, several meeting-houses for dissenters, a library, several hospitals, a free-school, a commodious market-place, a guildhall, a custom-house, and a county jail. Much corn and malt are sent hence to London, and great quantities of timber were formerly sent to the king's dockyard at Chatham. It has a considerable coasting trade, a small share of foreign commerce, and sends ships to Greenland. Vessels of large burden are obliged to stop at some distance below the town. It is the birthplace of cardinal Wolsey; and is seated on the Orwell, 26 m. S. E. of Bury St. Edmund, and 69 N. E. of London.

Ipswich, p.t. Essex Co. Massachusetts, situated on a river of the same name, about a mile from the sea. 23 m. N. E. of Boston. Pop. 2,951. The manufacture of lace is carried on in this town to a considerable extent.

Ira, p.t. Rutland Co. Vt. Pop. 442. Also a p.t. Cayuga Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,198.

Irasburg, p.t. Orleans Co. Vt. Pop. 869.

Irabatty. See Irrawaddy.

Irac, a province of Persia, comprehending the greater part of the ancient Media. It is bounded S. by Fars and Khuzistan, E. by Khorassan and the Great Salt Desert, W. by Kurdistan, and N. by Azerbijan, Ghilan, and Mazanderan, and divided into five districts, Ispah, Tehraun, Nacn, Mullager, and Kermanshaw.

Irac-Arabi (the ancient Chaldeæ), a province of Turkey in Asia, bounded W. by the desert of Arabia, N. by Kurdistan and Diarbeck, E. by Khuzistan, and S. by the gulf of Persia and Arabia. Bagdad is the capital.

Irbit, or Irbitkaia, a town of Russia, in the government of Perm, on the river Irbit, and the frontiers of Siberia. In the vicinity is a large iron-work, which yields nearly 2,000 tons of iron a year. 142 m. N. E. of Ekaterinenburg.

Ireby, a town in Cumberland, Eng. seated in a valley, at the source of the Ellen, 10 m. N. E. of Cocker-mouth, 303 N. N. W. of London.

Iredell, a county of North Carolina. Pop. 15,262. Statesville is the chief town.

Ireland, the second in magnitude of the British Isles, is situated to the W. of Great Britain, in the Atlantic Ocean. It is bounded on the N. W. and S. by the Atlantic, and on the E. by the North Channel, the Irish Sea, and St. George's Channel, which separate it from England. Its greatest length is about 300 m. and its maximum breadth about 110 m. The superficial contents are estimated at about 20,000,000 of English acres. Ireland is divided into four provinces; namely, Ulster, to the N., Leinster to the E., Munster to the S., and Connaught to the W.; and these are subdivided into 32 counties. Ulster contains the counties of Down, Armagh, Monaghan, Caber-Antrim, Londonderry, Tyrone, Fermanagh, and Donegal; Leinster has those of Dublin, Louth, Wicklow, Wexford, Longford, East Meath, West Meath, King's county, Queen's county, Kilkenny, Kildare, and Carlow; Munster includes Clare, Cork, Kerry, Limerick, Tipperary, and Waterford; and Connaught has Leitrim, Roscommon, Mayo, Sligo, and Galway. The climate of Ireland is mild and temperate, but more humid than in England. It is on the whole, of a mountainous character, but well watered with lakes and rivers; and the soil, in most parts is very good and fertile: even in those places where the bogs and morasses have been drained, there is good meadow ground. It produces corn and hemp, in great plenty. The cultivation of flax is so abundant as to afford nearly the whole supply of the great linen manufactures of the country; there are so many cattle that beef and butter are exported to foreign parts; and not only the English, but other ships, frequently come to be victualled here. The other commodities are hides, wool, tallow, wood, salt, honey, and wax. The commerce and manufactures have for many years been greatly on the increase: the staple branch of industry is the manufacture of fine linen cloth, which is brought to great perfection. This country is well situated for foreign trade on account of its many secure and commodious bays and harbours. Its principal lakes are Lough Lean, Lough Ern, Lough Neagh, and Lough Corrib; and its chief rivers are the Shannon, Liffey, Boyne, Suire, Nore, Barrow, Blackwater, and Lee. The mineral productions of Ireland, which were little known till of late, are now fast rising into importance. The mining companies recently formed are nearly all of them eminently successful: copper, lead, iron, antimony, and Molybdenum, are now obtained: and some of the mines are very productive. In the royalty of Glendalough, in the county of Wicklow, are two veins of rich lead ore, at one of which the lead is raised at an expense of £1. 5s. per ton, and within 12 fathoms two parallel veins, equally rich, were discovered in 1827. There are likewise productive collieries and quarries of marble, slate, and freestone; and numerous mineral springs, chiefly -halybeate. Formerly this kingdom had a parliament, which was subordinate to that of Great Britain; but, in 1800, it was deemed expedient for the welfare of Ireland that it should be united to great Britain. The two parliaments passed acts for that purpose, and the two kingdoms, at the commencement of 1801, were styled the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: and 32 peers (four of them bishops) and 100 commoners of Ireland are elected to represent that country in the Imperial Parliament, assembled in England. The lord lieutenant of Ireland, as well as the council, are appointed from time to time, by the king. The country people in Ireland, are remarkably hospitable and very warm in all their affections. The peasantry in general, are however sunk in poverty and ignorance. Their diet consists chiefly of coarse bread, potatoes and buttermilk; the favourite liquor is whiskey (usquebaugh), a distillation from corn; and the rural cottage is a wretched hovel of mud. Education has been much neglected, and still continues to be discountenanced by the Catholic clergy. Great efforts have been made for some years past to remove this, chiefly by two societies established in Britain, who have under their patronage a great number of schools, in a highly prosperous state. The established religion is the same as in England, but the great majority of the people are Catholics. The latter were long excluded from all civil and military distinction. This system of intolerance, however, no longer exists; and there is reason to hope that Ireland will speedily occupy its proper rank among European nations, and that the British government will liberally encourage its growing literature, commerce, agriculture, and manufactures.

Ireland, New, a long narrow island of the Eastern seas, N. of New Britain, extending from N. W. to S. E. about 190 m. and in general very narrow. The natives are Papuas, who go entirely naked, smearing their faces, and powdering their heads with white clay; their huts have only an opening to crawl in on their hands and knees. Their canoes, however are neatly formed of a single tree, sometimes 90 feet long, and furnished with outriggers. See Britain, New.

Ireland, p.v. Hampden Co. Mass.

Irishtown. See Kilkenny.

Irjab, a town of Afghanistan, in Cabul, seated near a western branch of the Indus, 111 m. S. S. W. of Cabul.

Irken, or Irkien. See Yarkan.

Irkutsk, the largest and least populous government of the Russian empire, comprising all the E. part of Siberia, from the Northern Ocean to the frontiers of Chinese Tartary, and from the boundaries of the government of Tobolsk to the Eastern Ocean. This large territory was gradually conquered and appropriated by the Russians, in their desultory excursion from Tobolsk. It is divided into four provinces of I kutsk, Nertchinsk Yakutsk, and Okhotsk.

Irkutsk, a town of Siberia, capital of the government of the same name, and the see of a bishop. It is a place of considerable commercial importance, from the caravans passing through it which trade to China, and from its being the seat of supreme jurisdiction over eastern Siberia. There are several churches and other edifices of stone, and the wooden houses are large and convenient. The inhabitants are estimated at 12,000. It stands on the river Angara, near the lake Baikal, 900 m. E. S. E. of Tobolsk.

Iroquois. See Lawrence, St.

Irawaddy, or Irabatty, a considerable river of Asia, which rises in Thibet, flows S. through the kingdom of Birmah and Pegu, and enters the bay of Bengal by several mouths. On its banks are produced great quantities of the finest teak timber, so much esteemed in ship-building. The principal market for this valuable timber is Rangoon, at the most eastern mouth of the river.

Irtysch, a river of Siberia, which issues from the lake Saisan, in Chinese Tartary, runs N. W. between the two countries above 300 m., then flows by Omsk, Tobolsk, and Samarof, below which it joins the Ob.

Irrille, p.v. Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Irvine, a river of Scotland, in Ayrshire, which passes by Newmills and Kilmarnock to the town of Irvine, below which it enters the frith of Clyde.

Irvine, a borough of Scotland, in Ayrshire. The chief trade is the exporting of coals to Ireland. Here is a dock-yard, a large tan-work, and manufactures of carpets, muslins, silks, lawns &c. It is seated near the mouth of the river Irvine, 10 m. N. of Ayr, and 24 S. W. of Glasgow.

Irwell, a river in Lancashire Eng., which rises above Bolton, flows thence to Manchester, and joins the Mersey, below Flixton.

Irwin, a county of Georgia bounding upon Florida. Pop. 1,180.

Is sur Tille, a town of France, in the department of Cote d'Or, seated on the Tille, 12 m. N. of Dijon.

Isabella, a town on the N. coast of Hispaniola, founded by Christopher Columbus in 1493. Long. 71. 2. W., lat. 19. 55. N.

Isbellsrille, p.v. Todd Co. Ken.

Ischia, an island of Naples, 15 m. in circuit, lying 3 m. off the coast of Terra di Lavoro. It is mountainous; but abounds in minerals, sulphur fruits, and excellent wines. It was taken by a British and Sicilian force in 1807. Fresh water is scarce, and the rain is collected in cisterns, but the air is healthy, and there are several hot baths, on which accounts it is much resorted to by invalids.

Ischia, an episcopal city of Naples, capital of the above island, with a strong fort. It stands upon a rock, which is joined to the island by a bridge, and is like a pyramid of houses piled one upon another. At the end of the bridge, next the city, are iron gates, which open into a subterranean passage, through which the city is entered. Long. 14. 2. E., lat. 40. 41. N.

Isenburg, Upper, a principality of Germany, on the borders of Hanau, subject partly to Hesse-Cassel, partly to Hesse-Darmstadt. It is general ly fertile, and contains 217 sq. m., and 47,500 inhabitants.

Isenburg, New, a small town in the foregoing principality, 3 m. S. of Frankfort on the Maine.

Iseo, a town of Italy, in Bresciano, on the S. E. side of a lake of the same name, 10 m. N. W. of Brescia.

Iser, a river of Bavaria, which rises on the confines of Tyrol, and, passing by Munich and Landshut, joins the Danube, between Straubing and Passau.

Isar, or Isar (Circle of), one of the modern divisions of Bavaria, bounded partly by the circles of the Regen and the Upper Danube, partly by the Austrian states. It comprises most of the southern part of the old duchy of Bavaria, and is divided into 26 districts; its chief town, Munich, being the capital of the kingdom. The S. is mountainous, and consequently cold: the N. forms a large plain, with few elevations, possessing great fertility. The principal rivers are the Inn, the Isar, and the Lech.

Isere, a department of France, including part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is so named from a river, which rises in Savoy, crosses this department by Grenoble, Moirans, and St. Marcellin, and joins the Rhone above Valence. Grenoble is the capital.

Iserlohn, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, with manufactures of iron, tin, velvets, silks, and stuffs. It is seated on the Buaren, 41 m. E. by N. of Dusseldorf.

Isernia, a town of Naples, in the Molise, at the foot of the Apennines. In 1805 it suffered much by an earthquake, 12 m. W. of Molise.

Isigny, a town of France, in the department of Calvados, 15 m. W. by N. of Bayeux.

Isinglass, r. N. H. flows into the Cocheeo

Isis. See Thames.

Isla, or Ila, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S. W. of Jura, from which it is separated by a narrow channel, called the Sound of Isla. It is 21 m. long, and 15 broad. On the E. side the surface is hilly, and covered with heath, but the greater part of the island is flat, and, when uncultivated, covered with a fine green sward. In the centre of the island is Loch Finlagan, about 3 m. in circuit, with an islet of the same name in the middle where the great lord of the isles resided, but the palaces and offices are now in ruins. Isla has mines of iron, lead, copper, emery, quicksilver, and black-lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand, for manure. Much flax is raised here, a great number of cattle fed, and a large quantity of whiskey distilled. The principal village is Bowmore, which has a convenient harbour and quay.

Islanabad, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, capital of the country of Chittagong; situate on the Currumpooly, near its entrance into the bay of Bengal. Long. 91. 55. E., lat. 22. 22. N.

Island Creek, a township of Jefferson Co. Ohio.

Islands, Bay of, a bay of New Zealand, at the N. extremity of the most northern of the two islands that go under that name. In 1772 M. Dufresne Marion, with two French sloops, put into this bay, and with 28 of his crew, was murdered by the natives.

Iste Adam, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, seated on the Oise, 20 m. N. by W. of Paris.

Iste aux Noir, an island in Sorel river. Lower Canada, about 10 m. from Lake Champlain.

Iste Bouchard, a town of France, in the department of Indre-et-Loire, surrounded by the Vienne, 21 m. S. S. W. of Tours.

Iste Dieu, a small island of France, 14 m. from the coast of Poitou. It was taken by the English in 1795, but soon after evacuated.

Iste de France. See France Isle of.

Iste Jourdain, a town of France, in the department of Gers, seated on an island in the river Save, 8 m. N. of Lombez.

Ischorough, a township of Waldo Co. Me. Pop. 674.

Isle of Wight, a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 10,417. Smithfield is the chief town. See also Wight.

Isles of Shoals, a cluster of small islands near the coast of N. Hampshire, between Newburyport and Portsmouth, belonging to New Hampshire and Maine. The New Hampshire portion constitutes the township of Gosport. They are barren heaps of sand and rocks, with hardly a green sod upon them, yet were once populous and wealthy. The inhabitants live solely by fishing, and the Isle of Shoals Dun Fish are well known as the best cured cod in the world. They have now about 100 inhabitants, and a lighthouse has been recently built here. A cave is still shewn upon one of them in which one of the female inhabitants secreted herself when the islands were invaded by the Indians. The celebrated Captain Smith discovered these islands, and they were formerly called Smith's Isles. The New England Sea Serpent, that mysterious monster, whose full length portrait has been shadowed forth in the narration of many a wondering spectator, but whose absolute non-entity is still maintained by the perversity of scepticism—was accustomed to make these shores his favourite resort. Recently his visits, like the portentous humps upon his back, have been few and far between.

Isteworth, a village in Middlesex, Eng. seated on the Thames, 9 m. W. of London. There are many elegant villas; and near it is Sion-house, the magnificent seat of the duke of Northumberland.

Islington, a large village in Middlesex, Eng. N. of London, to which it is now contiguous. The New River is received at the S. W. end of it into a large reservoir, whence its water is conveyed in pipes, to all parts of the metropolis. Near this is a spring of chalybeate water, called New Tunbridge Wells. To the E. of the town is a manufacture of white lead.

Istip, p.t. Suffolk Co. N. Y. on Long Island. Pop. 1,653.

Ismail, a strong town of European Turkey, in Bessarabia. The Russians took it by storm in 1790; and it is said that the long siege, and the capture did not cost them fewer than 20,000 men. The brave garrison merited the highest honours but they were massacred by the Russians: and the city was abandoned to the fury of the brutal soldiery. Ismail is seated on the N. side of the Danube, 140 m. S. by W. of Bender.

Ismid, a town of Asia Minor, on the side of a hill overlooking the gulf of Nicomedia. Long. 29 34. E., lat. 40. 39. N.

Isnik, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, and a Greek archbishop's see. It is the ancient Nice, famous for the general council held here in 325. Nothing remains of its ancient splendour but an aqueduct. The Jews inhabit the greater part of it; and silk forms the principal article of trade. It is seated in a country fertile in corn and wine, 60 m. S. E. of Constantinople.

Isny, a town of Wurtemberg, with an abbey, called St. George, whose abbot was a state of the empire. It is seated on the Isny, 18 m. N. E. of Lindau.

Isordskick, or Krocza, a town of Servia, 14 m. S. E. of Belgrade.

Ispahan, a city of Persia, long the capital of the Persian monarchy, is situated in the province of Irak, and was formerly celebrated as the finest city in the East. It stands in the middle of a plain, surrounded on all sides by mountains at 8 m. distance, which rise gradually in the form of an amphitheatre. There is no river except a small one called Sanderut, which supplies almost all the houses with water, and over which are several fine bridges. There are 160 mosques, 1,800 large caravanseras, and above 260 public baths. The streets are not paved, but are generally clean, on account of the dryness of the air; for it seldom rains or snows here. The inhabitants are computed at not more than 200,000, having been greatly depopulated by the intestine broils and civil wars with which this kingdom has been almost torn to pieces. This city is the emporium of the inland commerce of Persia, being the medium of communication with India, Cabul, and Turkey. It is 265 m. N. E. of Bassorah, and 300 S. of the Caspian Sea.

Israel's River, N. H. a beautiful stream formed by the cataracts which descend from the White Mountains. It falls into the Connecticut at Lancaster.

Issel. See Yssel.

Isengeaux, a town of France, in the department of Upper Loire, 17 m. N. E. of Puy.

Issiquibo, or Essequibo, a settlement extending along the banks of a river of the same name, in Dutch Guiana, and contiguous to that of Demerara, from which it is separated by the river Borassierri. It was taken from the Dutch during the late wars, and was finally ceded to Britain in 1814. It is extremely fertile, and is well cultivated. The Issequibo River is 20 m. wide at its mouth, and more than 300 in length.

Issoudun, a town of France, in the department of Indre, with a brisk trade in wood, cattle, cloth, hats, and stockings. It is seated on the Theole, 17 m. S. W. of Bourges, and 135 S. of Paris.

Istapa, a town of Mexico, in the province of Coliacan, 40 m. E. by S. of Coliacan.

Istria, a peninsula of Italy, between the bay of Trieste and the Quarnero Isles, bounded by Friuli on the W. and Carniola on the N., being 200 m. in circumference. The air is unwholesome, especially near the coast; but the soil is fertile. Oil and wine are abundant, and there are some productive quarries of fine marble. The chief riches of the country, however, consists in its vast and valuable forests. One part of it belonged formerly to the Venetians; but the whole was ceded to the emperor by the treaty of Presburg, in 1805. In 1809 it fell into the hands of Napoleon; but was re-conquered by the Austrians in 1814, and now forms the southern division of Austrian Illyria. The inhabitants (about 140,000) are chiefly occupied in agriculture, rearing bees, fishing, and the manufacture of silk, leather, tallow, and salt.

Italy, one of the finest and most celebrated countries of Europe, lying between 7. and 10. E. long., and between 37. and 46. N. lat. On the N. N. W., and N. E., it is bounded by France, Switzerland, the country of the Grisons, and Germany; on the E. by the Adriatic Sea; and on the S. and W. by the Mediterranean; its figure bearing some resemblance to a boot. Its length from Aosta at the foot of the Alps, in Savoy, to the utmost verge of Calabria, is about 600 m. but its breadth is very unequal, being in some places nearly 400 m. in others not above 25 or 30. It was formerly the seat of the Roman empire, and, afterwards, of that more astonishing usurpation, the dominion of the pope. In the middle ages the kingdom of Lombardy and that of Naples held the two extremes, and the Ecclesiastical and Tuscan states occupied the centre. In more modern times the northern part became divided into a great number of states, differing considerable in their extent and importance. By the treaty of Campo Formio, in 1797, the Venetian territories to the E. and N. of the river Adige were ceded to Austria; and the remainder of the Venetian states, with the duchies of Modena, Milan, and Mantua, the principality of Massa, and the three legations of Ferrara, Bologna, and Romagna, in the pope's dominions, were erected into a government by the French, and called the Cisalpine Republic. This republic was overturned in 1799, but restored after the battle of Marengo, in 1800. In 1802 it received a new constitution, under the name of the Italian Republic, and Bonaparte, then first consul of France, was elected president. In 1805 the Italian Republic was erected into a kingdom, and the emperor of France assumed the title of king of Italy. In December following, the Austrian part of the Venetian states was added to its territories, by the treaty of Presburg. The kingdom was divided into departments, and the city of Milan was the capital. But the subsequent changes which took place in Europe again deranged the political situation of this country. The kingdom of Italy was overturned; and the country is now divided into the following states:—The Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, the kingdom of Sardinia, the States of the Church, or pope's dominions, the Two Sicilies, the grand duchy of Tuscany, the states of Modena, the states of Parma, the duchy of Luca, and the republic of San Marino.

Italy, as to climate, has been divided into four separate regions. The first of these embraces the basin of the Po, extending about 260 m. in length, and 150 in its greatest breadth; being bounded by the Alps and Apennines on the N. W. and S., and open to the Adriatic on the E. Here the atmosphere is uniformly serene and bright; and, being tempered by refreshing breezes from the adjacent heights, the climate is altogether one of the most salubrious and delightful in the whole world. The second region includes the Tuscan and Roman territories, being screened on the N. by the Apennines, and more exposed to the heats of summer than to the rigors of the winter. Frost and snow are here experienced; but the temperature is sufficient to mature the orange, the fig, and similar fruits. The third district contains Campania Felix, and its dependencies, where the vegetable treasures of nature are also found in the greatest perfection, the air uniformly mild and serene, and a peculiar glow of beauty pervades the landscape. The fourth division extends from the Apennines to the Adriatic, and embraces the southern districts of the peninsula. Here we see the olive palm, and other productions of a south ern climate flourish; but, when the sirocco blows, the heats are overcoming to a stranger from almost any other part of Europe. The climate of Italy also experiences much diversity from elevation and local circumstances. The general aspect of the country is highly beautiful and picturesque. The Alps and Apennines diversify this peninsula with almost every possible combination of hill and valley, rivers, lakes, and romantic scenery. Northern Italy is broken into bold and rugged acclivities by the former, from the southern face of which descend the streams that form the Po and various other classical rivers. Towards the southern extremity of Italy, the Apennines diverge into two branches, one of which advances eastward to Capo de Leuca, and the other southward to the straits of Messina. Several detached mountains, among which is the celebrated Vesuvius, here overhang the gulf of Naples, and discharge their liquid fires into its waters. The Apennines are, in many parts, clothed with trees to their summits; in other places they are more precipitous, and attain the altitude of ice and snow. The principal rivers are the Po, Tiber, Adige, Brenta, Piave, and Tagliamento, and there are several fine lakes, as the Maggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, Perugia, Bracciano, and Celano. The soil, in general, is very fertile. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe; excellent silk in abundance; corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, figs, peaches, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chestnuts, &c. The olive is one of the most valuable productions of Italy. The Tuscans were the first that exported olive oil in any quantity, on which account it is still called, Florence oil. There is something peculiarly mild and graceful in the appearance of the olive tree, even apart from its associations. The leaves are somewhat like those of the willow, only they are more soft and delicate. The flowers are as delicate as the leaves. They come in little spikes from buds between the leaf stalks and spikes. The matured-wood of the olive is hard and compact though rather brittle, and has the pith obliterated like box. Its colour is reddish, and it takes a fine gloss, on which accounts the ancients carved it into statues of their gods. The moderns make it into snuff boxes and other trinkets. This country also yields good pastures, abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, buffaloes, wild boars, mules, and horses. The forests are well stored with game; and the mountains have not only mines of iron, lead, alum, sulphur, marble of all sorts, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c., but also gold and silver, with a great variety of aromatic herbs, trees, shrubs, and evergreens. Wine, oil, perfumes, fruits, and silks, are the principal articles of exportation; and great sums of money are expended by travellers in the purchase of pictures, curiosities, relics, antiquities, &c. No country has produced better, politicians, historians, poets, musicians, painters, and sculptors; that is, since the revival of the arts and sciences, exclusive of those of ancient times. The Italians are generally well proportioned; but of their complexion they cannot boast. With respect to dress they follow the fashions of the countries on which they border, or to which they are subject. They are very affable, courteous, ingenious, sober, and ready-witted; but extremely jealous, vindictive, lascivious, ceremonious, and superstitious. Masquerades, gaming, horse-races, and conversazione or assemblies, are the chief diversions of the Italians, excepting religious exhibitions, in which they are pompous beyond all other nations. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, but all other sects are now tolerated: the number of archbishops in the whole country is 33; and that of the suffragans indefinite, as may be truly added of the inferior ecclesiastics. Their language, a corruption of the Latin, is remarkable for its smoothness, and is said to be spoken in its greatest purity at Florence. Further particulars of this country will be found under the names of its particular divisions, as Naples, &c.

Ives, St., a borough in Cornwall, Eng. seated on a bay of the same name, celebrated for its extensive pilchard fishery. It is governed by a mayor, and has a market on Wednesday. The church is a handsome building close to the sea. Here are also meeting-houses for Independents and Methodists, and a good grammar school, founded by Charles I. In the vicinity of the town is Tregany Castle; and one mile from this mansion on the summit of a lofty hill, is a pyramid erected by the late J. Knoll, esq., who died in 1811, and directed by will that at the end of every 5 years an old woman, and 10 girls under 14 years of age, dressed in white and accompanied by music, should walk in procession from the market-house to this pyramid, where they should dance, and sing the 100th Psalm. For this he bequeathed certain freeholds, and vested them in the minister, to whom and the port collector he bequeathed £10 for a dinner. 8 m. N. E. of Penzance, and 277 W. by S. of London.

Jacs, St., a town in Huntingdonshire, Eng. with a market on Monday; seated on the river Ouse, 6 m. S. E. of Huntingdon, and 59 N. by W. of London.

Jaiça, an island of the Mediterranean, 56 m. S. W. of Majorca. It is about 60 m. in circumference, and mountainous; but fertile in corn and fruits. A great quantity of salt is made here, highly esteemed for its whiteness. The capital, of the same name, which stands on the S. side of the island, is well fortified, and has a convenient harbour. Long. 1. 25. E., lat. 38. 52. N.

Jaen, a province of the eastern part of Andalusia, surrounded by the provinces of La Mancha, Murcia, Granada, and Cardova. Its territorial extent is 4,760 sq. m.; and its pop. about 207,000. This province, though badly cultivated, produces wine, oil, silk, and corn, especially along the Guadalquivir, which is the largest river in the province. Jaen was formerly a kingdom; and the king of Spain, still takes the title of king of Jaen, although it is now included in the government of Andalusia.

Jaen, a fortified city of Spain, in Andalusia, capital of the above province. It is a bishop's see, and the residence of the magistracy of the province. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Guadalbulon, 36 m. N. of Granada.

Jafa, a fertile country of Arabia, N. W. of Aden and Hadramaut; it was formerly under the dominion of the imam; but in the end of the 17th century the inhabitants made themselves independent, and are now governed by three petty chiefs, who have also conquered a part of the province of Hadramaut.

Jaffa, anciently called Joppa, a town of Asia, in Palestine, situated near the coast of the Mediterranean, with a small citadel. It was formerly a celebrated city, and is frequently mentioned in the Scriptures. It has long been inhabited by Turks and Arabs, with a mixture of Geeks, Maronites, and Armenians. The houses are small and surrounded with the ruins of the ancient walls and towers. The Franks, Greeks, and Armenians have small convents for the reception of pilgrims of different nations. The principal commerce is in grain, particularly rice from Egypt. Jaffa was laid waste in the crusades, and afterwards destroyed by an earthquake. In profane history it is said to be the place whence Perseus delivered Andromeda. It was taken by the French, under Bonaparte, in February 1799, but they held possession 40 days only. It is 12 m. N. W. of Gaza, and 33 W. of Jerusalem.

Jaffna, a town of Ceylon, capital of Jaffnapatam, whence are exported great quantities of tobacco, and some elephants, which are accounted the most docile of any in the world. The Dutch took it from the Portuguese in 1658; and it was taken by the English in 1795. It is seated on a river navigable for large boats, 100 m. N. of Candy. Long. 80. 10. E., lat. 9. 45. N.

Jaffnapatam, a district in the N. part of Ceylon fertile in fruit and vegetables, and said to be the most populous and healthy in the island. Several small islands are politically connected with this district; and between it and the Candian provinces are numerous woods, inhabited by a savage race, called Vaddahs, supposed to be the aborigines of the country.

They are celebrated as hunters and warriors; and the cotton cloth which they manufacture is superior, both in quality and colour, to that of the Mandingos.

Jalonitza, a town of European Turkey, in Wallachia, on a river of the same name, 95 m. S. W. of Ismail.

Jalour, a town of Hindoostan, in the country of Agimere, situate on a mountain difficult of access, 85 m. W. N. W. of Chetore.

Janagorod, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, with a strong fort, seated on the Jama, 12 m. N. E. of Narva.

Jamaica, the most considerable and valuable of the British West India islands, discovered by Columbus, in 1494. It lies 30 leagues W. of St. Domingo, nearly the same distance S. of Cuba, and is of an oval figure, 150 miles long and 40 broad, containing 4,080,000 acres. An elevated ridge, called the Blue Mountains, runs lengthwise from E. to W., whence numerous rivers take their rise on both sides; and though none of them are navigable for barges, yet the sugars are carried upon many of them in canoes from the remote plantations to the seaside: some of them run under ground for a considerable space, particularly the Cobre and Pedra. The year is distinguished into two seasons, the wet and dry; but the rains are not so frequent as formerly, which is supposed to be owing to the cutting down of the woods. About nine in the morning it is so intolerably hot that it would be difficult to live, if the easterly breeze did not rise to cool the air. Sometimes the nights are pretty cool, and there are great dews, which are deemed unwholesome, especially to new comers. The months of July, August, and September, are called the hurricane months, because then they are the most frequent; and there is lightning almost every night. The best houses are generally built low, on account of the hurricanes and earthquakes; and the negroes' huts, made of reeds, will hold only two or three persons. The valleys are embellished with plantations, so well laid out, and with such a variety of fruit-trees, as to make the country look like a paradise. Horned cattle, hogs, and sheep are plentiful; but the servants generally feed upon Irish salt-beef, and the negroes have herrings and salt-fish. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, molasses, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimento, cocoa, coffee, several kinds of wood, and medicinal drugs. It has some tobacco, but not good, and used only by the negroes; also maize, Guinea corn, and peas of various kinds, with variety of roots. Fruits are in great plenty, such as oranges, lemons, shaddocks, citrons, pomegranates, pine-apples, prickly-pears, melons, pompions, guavas, and many others. The plantain which Jamaica in common with the other West India islands produces in abundance, is one of the most agreeable and nutritious vegetables in the world. It grows in a herbaceous form about 4 feet in height, and produces clusters of fruit filled with a luscious sweet pulp. The banana is very similar to the plantain but not so sweet. Jamaica can boast of a botanical garden, containing the rarest collection of curious trees and plants, perhaps in the world. The whole island is divided into three counties, Middlesex, Surry, and Cornwall, and these into 20 parishes, or districts, 6 towns, and 27 villages.

The legislature is composed of the governor, a council of 12 nominated by the crown, and a house of assembly consisting of 43 members elected by the freeholders. The first settlement on this island was made, in 1509, by the Spaniards, who were cruel to the natives; but it was taken by the English in 1656, and a colony soon after formed by disbanded soldiers from the parliamentary army, who were governed by military laws till the restoration. The tranquillity of this colony has been occasionally disturbed by the incursions of the Maroons, or original natives, who, however, were completely quelled in 1796; and since that period the colony has rapidly increased in importance. There is an ecclesiastical establishment in this island, consisting of 19 beneficed clergymen, but the state of religion has long been deplorable. Within the last few years, however, considerable efforts have been made by missionaries and others; and though the principal men of the island have manifested much opposition, yet these efforts have already been crowned with very considerable success. The government of Jamaica is one of the richest places, next to that of Ireland, in the disposal of the crown: the standing salary is 2,500*l.*, and the assembly commonly vote as much more to the governor, which, with other perquisites, make it little less than 10,000*l.* a year. Spanish Town is the seat of government, but Kingston is the capital.

Jamalabad, a town of Hindoostan, in Camara, with a fort on the summit of an immense rock, which is accessible only by one narrow way. The town stands on the banks of a river, 30 m. E. N. E. of Mangalore.

Janama, a town of Arabia, capital of a district of the same name, lying W. of the province of Bahrein. It is seated on the river Astan, 140 m. S. W. of Laehsa.

Jambi, the capital of a district of the same name on the N. E. coast of the island of Sumatra, with a trade in gold dust, pepper, and canes. The town is large, and situate inland, on a river navigable for boats, 160 m. N. by E. of Bencoolen.

Jamba, a town of Arabia Deserta, with a good harbour, on the Red Sea, 72 m. S. S. W. of Medina.

James, a river of Virginia, which rises on the W. side of the Blue Ridge of the Alleghany Mountains, and, flowing E. through the state, enters Chesapeak Bay, near Hampton. It is 270 m. in length and is navigable for vessels of 125 tons nearly to Richmond.

James Bay. See Hudson's Bay.

James Island, an island of Africa, 30 m. up the river Gambia, and 3 m. from its nearest shore. Here the English have a fort and factory. Long. 16. 0. W., lat. 13. 15. N.

James Island, an island of South Carolina, on the S. side of Charleston harbour, opposite Charleston.

Jamestown, p.t. Chataque Co. N. Y. Also an ancient town in James City Co. Va. on James River, and the first English settlement in the State. Nothing remains of it but a few ruins. Also a town in Newport Co. R. I. Pop. 414. Villages in Prince Edward Co. Va., Guilford Co. N. C., Green Co. Ohio. and St. Louis Co. Missouri.

Jamestown, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Leitrim, seated on the Shannon, 5 m. S. by E. of Carrick, and 73 N. W. of Dublin.

Jamets, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, 12 m. S. of Stenay.

Jamesville, p.v. Onondago Co. N. Y. Also a village in Sumter District S. C.

Jamtland, a province of Sweden bordering on Norway, nearly of a circular form, and 70 m. in length, and 60 in breadth. The western part is mountainous. The eastern is a fine champaign country, watered with several lakes and rivers, which abound with fish. The country produces excellent oats and abounds in good turnips. The pastures are extensive and of excellent quality, but are much neglected. It contains alum quarries, sandstone, slate, the lapis ollarius, fine rock crystal, and lead ore. The inhabitants carry on considerable trade with the Norwegians.

Janciro. See Rio Janciro.

Janna, a province of European Turkey, bounded on the N. by Macedonia, E. by the Archipelago, S. by Livadia, and W. by Albania. It is the Thessaly of the ancients and Larissa is the capital.

Janna, a town of European Turkey, in the province of the same name, 62 m. W. of Larissa.

Juncille, a town of France, department of Eure-et-Loire, 20 m. S. E. of Chartres.

Japan, an extensive empire in the most eastern part of Asia, extending from long. 131. to 142. E. and from lat. 30. to 41. N. It consists of three large islands (the superficial extent of which is estimated at 90,000 sq. m.), and several smaller islands. The whole empire is divided into seven principal districts, which are subdivided into 70 provinces; and the pop. is in proportion to extent, deemed equal to that of China. It is the richest country in the world for gold; there are also rich silver mines, and fine copper is the main source of the wealth of many provinces. It produces a great deal of rice, which is the principal article of subsistence; millet, wheat, and barley, are also cultivated to a small extent. Turnips, carrots, melons, cucumbers, &c., all grow spontaneously. Cedars are common, and so large that they are proper for the masts of ships and columns for temples. The mulberry tree, the laurel, the tree shrub, and camphire tree are also common; but the most remarkable is the varnish tree (rhus vernix), the juice of which is used to varnish, or (as we call it) japan their furniture. The rocks and most barren places are cultivated and produce a variety of fruits, plants, and roots. The woods and forests, and long ridges of mountains, with which the country is intersected, produce good pasturage, and are stocked with deer, oxen, buffaloes, and a few horses; but there are no sheep nor goats. Here are large quantities of fine porcelain, silk, and skins, as also red pearls, which are not in less esteem than the white. The Japanese are of a yellowish complexion all over; their heads are in general large, their necks short and their hair which is naturally black and thick, is rendered shining by the use of oils; their eyes are small, of dark brown colour, and sunk deep in the head, and the eyelids form in the great angle of the eye a deep furrow, which discriminates them from other nations; their eyebrows are also placed somewhat higher; and their noses though not flat, are thick and short. They are naturally ingenious, and have a high character for honesty and veracity. Their common drinks are all hot;

they uncover their feet out of respect, are fond of black teeth, and get on horseback on the left side. Their houses are of wood, coloured white, and never exceed two stories in height. The interior is divided into apartments at pleasure, by moveable partitions sliding in grooves. They have neither tables, beds, nor chairs, but sit and lie on carpets and mats. The dress consists of trowsers, and a loose robe of silk or cotton, fastened by a girdle the number being increased according to the coldness of the weather: stockings are not used; and the shoes are commonly of rice straw. The mathematical and physical sciences are yet in their infancy, but are highly esteemed among them; and they have several schools at different places, in which are taught arithmetic, rhetoric, poetry, history, and astronomy. Some of their arts and manufactures even surpass those of Europe. They formerly carried on a considerable trade with the neighbouring countries; but now all communications are forbidden, except with the Chinese and Dutch; and with them only at the port of Nangasaki. The merchandise brought by the Dutch; are spices, sugar, linen and woollen cloth, elephants' teeth, and haberdashery wares; for which they receive gold, silver, copper, rice, tea, fine porcelain, cabinets, and other jappaned and lackered wares. Japan was formerly divided into a great many small kingdoms, which still retain their ancient names, but they were at length swallowed up in one, to which all the rest are become either subject or tributary. The tributary princes, amounting to between 50 and 60, are vested with the regal dignity, and are absolute in their respective territories; but they are entirely subject to the emperor, who can depose, or even condemn them to death, if he thinks proper. The laws are extremely severe and cruel: and the people are doubly slaves, first to their own princes and then to the emperor, who has power of life and death over them all. Anciently the emperor was likewise sovereign pontiff, under the title of Dairo, and in fact worshipped by all his subjects; but in the civil wars which occurred on the minority of one of them, in 1150, one of the competitors for the crown assumed the ecclesiastical government, retaining the same title; while the other, who ruled in civil affairs, was called Cubo. From that time the dairo has only been at the head of religious matters, while the cubo or secular emperor bears an absolute dominion over all civil and military affairs. The former still lives in great state and grandeur at Meaco; and the latter pays him a kind of homage, as if he acted only as his deputy or viceroy; but, in reality the cubo is now the real monarch of Japan, and the dairo only as his high priest. The Japanese are as fabulous as the Chinese in the antiquity of their empire; but the certain period begins with the hereditary succession of the ecclesiastical emperors, from the year 600 before the christian epoch. The religion of the country is paganism; but there are two different sects. There was once a great number of christians in different parts of the empire; but, in 1638 they underwent great persecutions and all who professed Christianity were either put to death or forced to revert back to paganism. The capital of the empire is Jeddo.

Japara, a sea-port on the N. coast of the island of Java, with a good harbour. It was the capital of a considerable kingdom, till the Dutch made themselves masters of it; and now they have a colony here, and a considerable trade. 253 m. E by S. of Batavia. Long. 110. 45. E., lat. 6. 20. S

Jaquemel, a town of St. Domingo, on a bay of its name, on the S. coast, 32 m. S. S. W. of Port au Prince.

Jaques, a navigable river of Louisiana, which falls into the Missouri.

Jaques Cartier, a river of Canada, so called from the navigator who first explored the St. Lawrence, into which it falls in long. 71. 41. W., lat. 46. 38. N.

Jargeau, a town of France, in the department of Loiret. It was taken by the English in 1438, and retaken by Joan of Arc the next year. It is seated near the Loire, 10 m. E. S. E. of Orleans.

Jarisherg, a town of Norway, capital of a district abounding in mines, in the diocese of Aggerhuys, 5 m. N. of Tousberg.

Jarnac, a town of France, in the department of Charente. Near this place the duke of Anjou, afterwards Henry III., obtained a victory over the Huguenots, in 1569. It is seated on the Charente, 20 m. W. of Angouleme.

Jaromitz, a town of Bohemia, seated on the Elbe, 9 m. N. of Koniggratz.

Jaron, a town of Persia, in Farsistan, celebrated for abundance of palm-trees, and their excellent fruits. 89 m. S. by E. of Shiras. Long. 53. 10. E., lat. 25. 15. N.

Jaroslaw, a town of Poland, in Red Russia, with a strong citadel. A battle was gained here, by the Swedes, in 1656, after which they took the town. It is included in the kingdom of Galicia, and seated on the Saine, 55 m. W. of Lemberg. Long. 22. 43. E., lat. 50. 4. N.

Jaroslarl, or Jaroslaw, a government of Russia, formerly a province of the government of Moscow. Its territorial extent is estimated at about 14,000 sq. m. and its inhabitants at 800,000. It is divided into 10 circles, exclusive of the level called the Steppes of Jaroslaw. The principal rivers are the Wolga, the Schekna, and Mologa. The chief trade is in cattle and wood. The capital, of the same name, is a large commercial place, and a bishop's see, with numerous manufactures. It is seated on the Wolga, 145 m. N. N. E. of Moscow.

Jasnitz, a town of Hither Pomerania, seated on the Oder, 10 m. N. of Stettin.

Jasque, a town of Persia, in the province of Meeran, which gives name to a cape in the gulf of Ormus. Long. 57. 4. E., lat. 55. 40. N.

Jassy, a town of European Turkey, capital of Moldavia, and an archbishop's see, with a trade in flax, corn, hides, wool, wax, honey, tallow, and canvass, large quantities of which are made in the town and sent to Constantinople. In 1753 it was destroyed by fire; it was subsequently rebuilt and well fortified; but in 1788 the fortifications were demolished, excepting a small fort. The inhabitants are estimated at 12,000. It has been several times taken in the wars between the Turks and the Russians or Austrians. It is seated on the Pruth, 170 m. N. N. E. of Bucharest, and 370 N. of Constantinople.

Jauer, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a citadel, and a large square, surrounded by piazzas. It has manufactures of woolen and cotton, and a trade in flax and yarn. It is seated in a fine country on the rivulet Jauer, 35 m. W. by S. of Breslau. Long. 16. 23. E., lat. 51. 2. N.

Jaulnaiz, a town of France, in the department of Vienne, 6 m. N. of Poitiers.

Jaura, a river of Brazil, in Matto-Grosso, which rises in the plains of Parexis, in long. 53.

30. W., lat. 14. 42. S., and, after a long S. and S. E. course falls into the Paraguay in lat. 16. 24. S. At its mouth is erected a beautiful pyramid of marble, bearing inscriptions commemorative of the treaty between Spain and Portugal, which defined the boundaries of their respective territories. On its banks are extensive salt-pits, from which the province of Matto-Grosso derives large quantities of salt.

Java, an island of the E. Indies, lying to the S. of Borneo, and separated at its W. end from Sumatra, by the strait of Sunda. It is sometimes called Great Java, to distinguish it from Bali, by some named Little Java; and is 640 m. in length, and of various breadth, extending from 105. to 116 E. long., and 6. to 9. S. lat. The land is low, and in some places marshy, near the shore, which renders the air unhealthy; but it rises in a gradual slope towards the interior of the country, admitting in its ascent every variety of situation and verdure. Rice is the staple production of the island, and is exported in considerable quantity. Sugar, pepper, cotton, and coffee, are produced in abundance. Indigo, of a very superior quality, is also cultivated; and wheat, barley, oats, and Bengal grain, thrive well, and might be produced in great abundance, if due attention were bestowed on their culture. The N. coast has a great many commodious creeks, bays, harbours, and towns, with many little islands near the shore. The inhabitants are chiefly Javanese; next to these are the Malays; and in the sea-ports a considerable number of Chinese are settled. The Javanese inhabit all the interior parts of the island, and are in general the cultivators of the soil. They are described as a barbarous, proud and fierce people, of a brown complexion, short, coal-black hair, large cheeks, small eyes, and large eyebrows. The men are very robust and strong limbed; the women are small, but of pleasing countenance, and in some districts they are really beautiful. The men wear a piece of calico, which is the principal manufacture of the island, wrapt two or three times round their middle; and the women wear them from their armpits down to their knees; but all other parts are bare. The men have two or three wives, and several concubines, according to their circumstances. The Javanese appear, from remains of temples and inscriptions, to be of Hindoo descent, and their language is quite distinct from that of the Malays: but the professed religion of both is Mahomedism. The Malays principally inhabit along the coast. They are not so well featured as the Javanese; but the men are often very muscular and well made. They are generally indolent, but at the same time restless, vindictive, and treacherous. The Chinese are distinguished by their habits of industry, and generally by their wealth. Many of them carry on a considerable trade with their native country, and the several islands of the eastern archipelago. They intermarry with the Javanese and Malays, and purchase female slaves for wives and concubines. This island has very high mountains, particularly the Pepper Mountain on the S. side; it has, likewise, impassable forests and wildernesses; but to the N., between Batavia and Bantam, is a very populous country, full of rice fields, and plenty of salt and pepper, besides most sorts of fruits proper to the climate. Here are also plenty of hogs, bees, and sheep, with other tame animals; and likewise fowl, wild and tame, in great abundance. In the woods are arge tigers, rhinoceroses, and other wild beasts; and in the rivers are crocodiles. The Babiroussa is a sort of hog, yet instead of bristles he is covered with a soft short hair like wool. Herds of them are found together and are easily discovered in consequence of their strong odour. Their enormous tusks are of a beautiful ivory, smoother and finer than that of the elephant. The serene season is from May till November; and then the rains begin, which lay the low grounds under water, kill the insects, and continue till March, when they commence sowing, and in July the sugar and rice begin to ripen; but September and October are the best months for all sorts of fruits. Java has a river which rises in the mountains, and, dividing itself into many branches, waters the circumjacent country: these afterwards reunite, and pass through Batavia, dividing it into two parts. For more than a century Java was under the dominion of the Dutch. In 1811 it was captured by the British, under Sir Samuel Auchmuty, and many important improvements were adopted in its internal administration. Government also did much to promote agricultural improvements, and the country prospered and enjoyed tranquillity. Since it has been restored to the Dutch. They appear, however, to have reverted to their former wretched system, as they have been engaged in quelling insurrections, which there is little doubt were provoked by their arbitrary and vexatious exactions. Batavia is the capital.

Jaxt, one of the four circles or departments of Wurtemberg, deriving its name from the river Jaxt, having Baden on the W. and Bavaria on the E. It comprises a superficial area of above 14,000 square m., with a pop. of 260,000: the name was formerly given to a province not half the extent.

Jaxt, a river of Germany, in Wurtemberg which rises in the county of Oettingen, and, after flowing through the principality of Elwangen, falls into the Neckar opposite to Wimpfen, in Hesse-Darmstadt.

Jaxberg, a small town of Wurtemberg, on the river Jaxt, 10 m. S. E. of Mergentheim.

Jay, p.t. Oxford Co. Me. 20 m. N. E. Paris. Pop. 1,276. Also a township in Orleans Co. Vt. Pop. 196. Also a town in Essex Co. N. Y. on Saratoga river. Pop. 1,279.

Jean, St., a town of France, in the department of Moselle, seated on the Sarre, 12 m. W. of Deux Ponts.

Jean d' Angely, St., a town of France, department of Lower Charente, famous for its brandy. It was taken from the Huguenots, in 1621, by Louis XIII., who demolished the fortifications. It is seated on the Bontonne, 17 m. N. E. of Saintes, and 37 S. E. of Rochelle.

Jean de Losne, St., a town of France, department of Cote d' Or, celebrated for the bravery of its inhabitants, in opposing the imperial count Gallas, at the head of a numerous army, in 1635. It is seated on the Saone, 15 m. S. S. E. of Dijon

Jean de Luz, St., a town of France, department of Lower Pyrenees, the last next Spain with a harbour. It owes its opulence to the cod and whale fishery, and is seated on a small river, near the Bay of Biscay, 14 m. S. W. of Bayonne Long. 1. 40. W., lat. 43. 25. N.

Jean de Maurienne, St., a town of Savoy, capital of the province of Maurienne, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the river Arc, 25 m. E. N. E. of Grenoble. Long. 6. 20. E., lat. 45. 17. N.

Jean de Pic de Port, St., a town of France, department of Lower Pyrenees, defended by a citadel, upon an eminence, at the entrance of those passages, or defiles, in the Pyrenees, which, in this country, are called Ports. It is seated on the river Nive, 20 m. S. S. E. of Bayonne, and 30 N. E. of Pampeluna.

Jed, a river of Scotland, in Roxburghshire which rises on the borders of England, and joins the Teviot, a little below Jedburg. On its banks are several large caverns, which were the hiding places of ancient border-warriors.

Jedburgh a borough of Scotland, capital of Roxburghshire. Here is the ruin of a fine abbey, part of which has been made the parish church. A variety of woollen manufactures are carried on here, and the vicinity is noted for its orchards. It is situated on the Jed, near its conflux with the Teviot, 42 m. S. E. of Edinburgh.

Jedo, or Jeddo, the capital of the empire of Japan, situate on the S. E. side of Nippon, the largest of the Japanese Islands. The city has neither walls nor ramparts, is 9 m. in length, and 6 in breadth, and contains 1,000,000 inhabitants. The houses are built of earth, and boarded on the out side, to prevent the rains from destroying the walls. In every street is an iron gate, which is shut up in the night and a kind of custom-house, or magazine, for merchandize. The imperial palace is surrounded by walls and ditches, with drawbridges, forming of itself a considerable town, in the middle of the city. Where the emperor resides are three towers, nine stories high, each covered with plates of gold; and the hall of audience is supported by pillars of massy gold. Near the palace are several others, where the relations of the emperor live. The empress has a palace of her own, and there are twenty small ones for the concubines. Besides which, all the princes of the empire, who are obliged to make it their residence during half the year, have each a palace in the city, with a handsome garden. The houses of the common class are nothing but ground floor, the rooms parted by folding screens, so that they can be made larger or smaller at pleasure. Jedo is seated in a plain at the head of a fine bay, and a river, which passes through it supplies several canals. Long. 139. 30. E., lat. 36. 10. N.

Jermah, a town of the kingdom of Fezzan, distinguished by the numerous herds of sheep and goats that feed around it, and by many majestic ruins, that exhibit to the inhabitants of its clay-built cottages vestiges of greatness to which they are perfectly indifferent. 60 m. S. E. of Mourzouk.

Jeromestown, p.v. Wayne Co. Ohio. 92 m. N. E. Columbus.

Jersey, p.t. Steuben Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,391. Also a township in Licking Co. Ohio.

Jersey City, a village at Paulus's Hook, Bergen Co. N. J. on the Hudson, opposite New York.

Jerseytown, p.v. Columbia Co. Pa.

Jersey, New. See New Jersey.

Jersey, an island in the English Channel, 18 m from the coast of Normandy in France, and 84 S of Portland in Dorsetshire. It is subject to the English, but is still governed by the ancient Norman laws. It is 30 m in circumference and difficult of access, on account of rocks, sands, and the forts erected for its defence. It produces excellent butter and honey, and the S. part of the island is nearly covered with apple trees for cider. The commerce of Jersey extends to almost every European nation and also to America. It exports to England great quantities of cider; also fruits, potatoes and cattle; and in return imports corn, flour, seeds, coals, cloth, linen, glass, &c. A number of ships are engaged in the Newfoundland fishery. In 1812, 59 vessels, altogether of 6000 tons burden, and navigated by 550 seamen, belonged to the island.

Jerusalem, an ancient and famous town of Asia, formerly capital of Judea. It was taken by Nebuchadnezzar in the 11th year of Zedekiah, when the Jews were led captive to Babylon. It was at terwards taken by the Romans, and destroyed, together with the temple, 70 years after the birth of Christ, after sustaining one of the most remarkable sieges in history. The emperor Adrian built a new city near its ruins. It was taken by the Persians in 614, and by the Saracens in 636. In 1099 it was retaken by the Crusaders, who founded a new kingdom, which lasted 88 years, under 9 kings. Saladin, king of Egypt and Syria, obtained possession of it in 1187. The Turks who drove away the Saracens in 1217, have retained it ever since, and call it El Kods, that is, the Holy City. It is now inhabited by Turks, Arabs, Jews and Christians. It stands on a high rock with steep ascents on every side except to the N. It is almost surrounded with valleys encompassed with mountains, so that it seems to stand in the middle of an amphitheatre. The principal object of veneration is the church of the holy sepulchre, a very handsome building, 3,000 feet long and nearly 200 broad. It is supposed to comprehend within these limits the scene of all the great events of the crucifixion, entombment, and resurrection of Christ. The chapel is cut out of the rock, and lamps are kept constantly burning in it. The whole is covered with white marble, both within and without; and on the outside there are 10 fine columns of the same. It is covered with a platform, the middle of which forms a small dome six feet in height, covered with lead, and supported by 12 columns of porphyry, placed by pairs on the platform, and forming 6 arches, which have 3 lamps under each. Before the gate of the sepulchre is a silver lamp, so large that 2 men cannot fathom it. On Good Friday, all the parts of our Saviour's passion are solemnized in this church Pilgrims flock hither from various parts, and the inhabitants accommodate them with lodging and provisions, which is their chief business, and a bashaw, with a guard of janissaries, always resides here to protect them from the insults of the Arabs. The manufactures of Jerusalem are almost confined to one branch, that of beads, crosses, shells, and other objects supposed to derive their sanctity from their local origin. These articles receive a species of benediction in the church of the sepulchre; and they are bought even by those who are most sensible of their insignificance, as they form acceptable presents to all the inhabitants of Greek and Catholic countries. Jerusalem is politically included in the patriarchate of Damascus; but the surrounding territory forms a kind of independent district. 112 m. S. W. of Damascus, 45 from the Mediterranean. Long. 35. 20. E., lat. 31. 47. N.

Jerusalem, p. v. Ontario Co. N. Y. Also a village in Queens Co. N. Y. on Long Island. Also a village of Southampton Co. Va.

Jesi, a town of Italy, in the states of the church, seated on the river Esino, 10 m. W. S. W. of Ancona.

Jessamine, a county of Kentucky, on Kentucky river. Pop. 9,961. Nicholasville is the capital.

Jesselmere, a town of Hindoostan, in a district of the same name, in the province of Agimere, governed by an independent chief. 70 m. W. by N. of Bickaneer.

Jesso, a large island, lying between those of Nippon and Saghalien. It is 150 m. in length, and from 80 to 220 in breadth: the narrow part is in the S., towards Nippon. It is full of woods; and the natives, who live by fishing and hunting, are strong, robust, savage, and slovenly, when compared to the Japanese. Here are some Japanese colonies, and the island is generally deemed subject to Japan; but it may be rather considered as a foreign conquest than as a part of the civilized empire. Matsmai is the capital. The S. point is in long. 142. 30. W., lat. 40. 50. N.

Jessore, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, capital of a district of the same name. It is seated on the river Boirub, and on the high road from Calcutta to Dacca. It was at this spot that the pestilential cholera broke out in 1817, which from that time till 1832 ravaged a great part of Europe and nearly the whole of Asia.

Jever, a small district of Germany, situated between East Friesland and the duchy of Oldenburg. Though surrounded by Westphalia, it was never included in any circle of the empire. It was ceded to Oldenburg in 1814.

Jever, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Oldenburg, 34 m. N. by W. of Oldenburg.

Jidda, a sea-port of Arabia Felix, on the Red Sea, in a barren, sandy district, destitute of fresh water. A very considerable trade is carried on here, this city being a mart between Egypt and India. The ships from Suez seldom proceed further than this port, and those, from India are not suffered to advance to Suez. The English are permitted to trade here; but, in consequence of the numerous exactions to which they are subjected, the trade has greatly declined. By the treaty with the Porte the duty is 5 per cent., but under various pretences it is raised to 12. 34 m. W. S. W. of Mecca, of which it is the port. Long. 39. 15. E., lat. 21. 29. N.

Jimbola, a town of Negroland, capital of an island so called, which is formed by two branches of the Niger that separate at leaving the lake Dibbie, and unite again about 15 m. from Tombuctoo. The town is a resting place for traders between Tombuctoo and the western parts of the country. It stands on the W. branch of the Niger, 80 m. S. W. of Tombuctoo. Long. 0. 16. E., lat. 16. 4. N.

Jionpour, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a circle of the same name, in Allahabad. It is seated on the Goomty; and not far from the conflux of that river with the Ganges is the fort of Jionpour, on a high bank commanding the bridge over the Goomty. This place was at one time the seat of an empire; and sultan Shirki built the great masjid, or mausoleum, which is still remaining. The stone bridge over the Goomty consists of sixteen pointed arches; and on the top of it are many little shops on both sides. It was built in 1567, and has hitherto withstood the force of the stream, which, in the time of the rains, frequently flows over the bridge; and in 1774 a brigade of the British army passed over it in boats. Jionpour is 48 m. N. W. of Benares. Long. 82. 55. E., lat. 25. 45. N.

Joachim, a village in Jefferson Co. Missouri.

Joachimsthal, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saatz, noted for its mines and a manufacture of lace. 15 m. N. by E. of Elbogen.

Joachimsthal, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker mark, 36 m. N. N. E. of Berlin.

Joanna. See Hinzuan.

Joannina, or Janina, or Janina, a city of European Turkey, and the capital of Albania, stands upon the banks of a lake, the ancient Acherusia, the waters of which are discharged into a subterranean abyss. The town is 2 m. in length and half a m. in breadth and contains a pop. of 40,000 engaged in the exportation of oil, wool, corn, tobacco, and the importation of manufactured goods. This place was the capital of the celebrated Ali Pacha, and was visited by Lord Byron in his early travels in the East.

Jobstown, p. v. Burlington Co. N. Y.

Jockgrim, a town of Bavaria, province of the Rhine, situate on an eminence, near the Rhine, 9 m. S. E. of Landau.

Johan-georgen-stadt, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Erzgebirge, celebrated for its mines, and for a considerable manufacture of lace. 15 m. S. S. E. of Zwickau.

Johannesburg, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, celebrated for the vineyards in its environs, which were bestowed by the emperor on prince Metternich in 1816. It has a citadel, and is seated on the river Pych, near the lake Spirding, 95 miles S. E. of Konigsberg, and 18 W. of Mentz. Long. 22. 39. E., lat. 53. 16. N.

John, a township of Franklin Co. Missouri.

Johsburg, p. t. Warren Co. N. Y. Pop. 985.

Juan de Porto Rico, St., the capital of the island of Porto Rico, with a good harbour, defended by several forts. It is a bishop's see; and is well built, and better inhabited than most of the Spanish towns. It was taken by sir Francis Drake, and afterwards by the earl of Cumberland; but, losing most of his men by sickness, he was obliged to abandon it. In 1615 the Dutch took and plundered this city, but could not retain it. It stands on a peninsula, on the N. coast of the island. Long. 66. 45. W., lat. 18. 29. N.

Juan de Ulua, St., a small island in the gulf of Mexico. See Vera Cruz.

Juan Fernandez, an island in the Pacific Ocean, 38 leagues eastward of the island of Masafuero, and 350 W. of the continent. It is supposed to have been inhabited by a Spaniard, whose name it retains; but it is more remarkable for having been the residence of Alexander Selkirk, a Scotchman, whose life and adventures furnished De Foe with the ground-work of that admirable novel, Robinson Crusoe. The island is about 40 m. in circumference, and at a distance appears like a naked rock; but there are intersecting valleys covered with wood, and a great number of goats on the side of every hill. In 1766 a settlement was made by the Spaniards on the N. and highest part of this island, at Cumberland Bay, which is defended by batteries. The town is situate in a fine valley, between two high hills, and every house has a garden, with arbors shaded with vines. Long. 78. 52. W., lat. 33. 40. S.

Jubo, a kingdom of Africa, on the coast of Ajan, with a capital of the same name, subject to the Portuguese. Long. 43. 20. E., lat. 0. 50. N.

Jucatan. See Yucatan.

Judenburg, a town of Upper Styria, capital of a circle of the same name, with a handsome castle. The public buildings, with the square, are magnificent. This town was taken by the French in 1797. It suffered dreadfully from fire in 1807 and 1818. It is seated on the Muer, 40 m. W. of Gratz. Long. 14. 24. E., lat. 47. 10. N.

Judith, Point, the Cape at the entrance of Narraganset Bay on the West. Here is a light house.

Judoinne, a town of the Netherlands, in S. Brabant, near which are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on the Geele, 13 m. S. S. E. of Louvain.

Jundispore, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Bahar. 20 m. from Patna.

Juggernaut, a place of Hindoo worship, on the coast of Orissa, district of Cuttack, with a pop. estimated at 30,000. It is one of the most celebrated places in India. All the land within 20 m. is considered holy; but the most sacred spot is enclosed with a stone wall 21 feet high, and forms nearly a square, being 656 feet long and 626 wide. Within this area are about 50 temples, dedicated to various idols; but the most conspicuous buildings consist of one lofty stone tower, 184 feet high and 28 1-2 feet square inside, and two adjoining stone buildings with pyramidal roofs. The tower is occupied by the idol Juggernaut, his brother Bulbudra, and his sister Subudra, and the other buildings are used for purposes connected with the worship. Adjoining is also a low building on pillars (with a fabulous animal in the centre) which is intended as an awning to shelter the entrance from the rays of the sun; and after this is another, where the food prepared by the pilgrims is daily brought previous to distribution. The temple of Juggernaut was erected by rajah Anung Bheem, in A. D. 1198; it was taken by the British, together with the town, in 1803. The roofs are ornamented in a singular style, with representations of monsters: the walls of the temples, which are not visible beyond the enclosure, are covered with statues of stone. Each side of the boundary wall has a large gateway in the centre; but the grand entrance is in the eastern face. The idol Juggernaut is made of wood, and is probably the coarsest image in the country, having a frightful black visage, with a distended mouth. The figure does not extend below the loins, and it has no hands, but two stumps in lieu of arms, on which the priests occasionally fasten hands of gold: a Christian is almost led to think that it was an attempt to see how low idolatry could debase the human mind. When two new moons occur in Assaur (part of June and July), which is said to happen about once in 17 years, a new idol is always made. After the wood is made into a proper form by common carpenters, it is entrusted to certain priests, who are protected from all intrusion. The process is a great mystery. One man is selected to take out of the old idol a small box, said to contain the spirit, which is conveyed inside the new; and the man who does this is always removed from the world before the end of the year. On certain festivals the images of Juggernaut, Bulbudra, and Subudra, are superbly dressed and placed in an immense moveable tower, which the pilgrims drag to a certain distance, and then return to the temple. During these processions many of the infatuated devotees fall under the wheels of the machine, and are crushed to death. There are two principal festivals (the Swinging and Car festivals) and eleven minor ones annually. The concourse of pilgrims to this shrine is immense; and the revenue derived from them by the British government is said to exceed £12,000 per annum. A road has been recently completed from Calcutta to Juggernaut, great part of the expense being paid by a rich Hindoo (rajah Sookmoy Roy) on condition that the road should be named after him. Juggernaut is seated a few m. N. E. of the Chilka Lake, 300 m. from Calcutta. Long. 85. 54. E., lat. 19. 49. N.

Julfar, a town of Arabia, in the province of Oman, situate on a bay of the gulf of Persia, 100 m. N. W. of Oman. Long. 58. 14. E., lat. 25. 55. N.

Julien, St., a town of France, in the department of Jura, 18 m. S. by W. of Lons le Saultner.

Julieu du Sault, St., a town of France, in the department of Yonne, seated between two mountains, covered with vines, near the river Yonne, 6 m. N. W. of Joigny.

Juliers, a very fertile duchy of Westphalia, now forming part of the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine, adjacent to the territories of Aix-la-Chapelle, Liège, and Cologne. It contains 1,600 square m. and 200,000 inhabitants. Flax is cultivated, and made into fine linen, which is sent to Holland, and afterwards sold as the fabric of that country; there are also manufactures of cloth, ribands, brass, iron, and wire. This duchy was ceded, in 1648, to the palatine of Neuburg in whose family it continued down to the peace of Lunéville, when it was given to France, but in 1815 it was transferred to Prussia.

Juliatown, p.v. Burlington Co. N. Y.

Juliers, a small town of the Prussian states, in the government of Aix-la-Chapelle, and formerly capital of the preceding duchy; seated on the Roer, 22 m. W. of Cologne. Long. 6. 25. E., lat. 50. 55. N.

Juliusburg, a town of Prussian Silesia, with a castle, 4 m. N. of Oels.

Jumella, a town of Spain, in the province of Murcia, 22 m. S. W. of Murcia.

Jumiege, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a late celebrated Benedictine abbey; seated on the Seine, 12 m. S. W. of Rouen.

Jumnao, or Jumbo, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a flourishing district of the same name, which is governed by an independent Hindoo chief: it is a place of considerable trade, being seated on the banks of a small river on the high road from Cashmere, to Dehli. 80 m. N. E. of Lahore.

Jumna, a river of Hindoostan, which rises in the mountains of Serinaghur, flows S. E. by Dehli and Agra, and joins the Ganges at Allahabad.

Jumagar, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, 170 m. S. W. of Amedabad. Long. 70. 33. E., lat. 21. 43. N.

Juniata, r. a branch of the Susquehanna from the west. It rises by several head streams in Bedford county, and joins the Susquehanna 10 m. above Harrisburg. Its banks are rocky and precipitous, and the scenery along its course is very picturesque.

Juniata, a township of Perry Co. Pa. on the above river, 20 m. from Harrisburg.

Junius, p.t. Seneca Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,581.

Junien, St., a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne, with manufactures of woollens, leather, hats, &c. It is seated on the river Vienne, 20 m. W. of Limoges.

Junkseilan, or Junkseylon, an island in the Indian Ocean, near the S. W. coast of Siam, about 60 m. long and from 10 to 20 broad. The soil is luxuriant, and it has a considerable trade in ivory and tin. The principal town, of the same name, is situate on the N. part of the island, and has a harbour capable of receiving vessels of a moderate size. Long. 93. 0. E., lat. 5. 10. N.

Jura, one of the western isles of Scotland, N. E. of the island of Islay, on the coast of Argyshire. It is 26 m. long, and 7 broad, and is composed of huge naked rocks, piled one on another in the utmost disorder. The mountainous ridges occupy the centre of the island, extending along its whole length, and terminating in four mountains, called the Paps of Jura, which are of a conical form and of stupendous height. The west side of the island is uninhabited. The whole of the E. side forms a pleasing scene, and the coast is indented with bays and harbours. The only products are oats, barley, potatoes, and flax. A few wild roes are still seen here.

Jura, a department of France, including part of the late province of Franche Comte. It contains mines of iron of a superior quality, mines of copper and lead, and many quarries of black marble, jasper, and alabaster. It takes its name from Mount Jura. Lons le Saulnier is the capital.

Jura, Mount, a chain of mountains which begins in the canton of Zurich, in Switzerland, extends along the Rhine into the canton of Solothure and the principality of Neuchâtel, branches out toward the Pays de Vaud, separates that country from France, and continues beyond the frontiers of the Genevois as far as the Rhone. In the Pays de Vaud this chain forms many elevated alleys; particularly one on the top of that part called Mount Joux, which is watered by two picturesque lakes, the largest called Joux, and the other Brenet. These mountains have different names in different parts of their course in Switzerland.

Jussey, a town of France, in the department of Upper Saone, situate on the Amanche, 17 m. N. W. of Vesoul.

Jussy, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, 5 m. S. of Auxerre.

Justin, St., a town of France, in the department of Landes, 27 m. W. of Condom.

Juterbock, a town of the Prussian province of Brandenburg, where in 1813 a battle was fought between the French and the allies. It is seated on the Rohrbach, 18 m. N. E. of Wittenberg.

Juthia. See Siam.

Jutland, a province of Denmark, bounded on all sides by the sea, except towards the S., where its boundary is the duchy of Sleswick. The name Jutland, was formerly applied to the whole peninsula forming the mainland of the Danish dominions, but it is now confined to the northern part of the peninsula, extending from 55. to 58. N. lat. It is about 180 m. in length, and from 70 to 90 in breadth; and is divided into four dioceses or districts, each of which has a bishop and governor. The prevailing religion is the Lutheran. The country is generally low, and, except the rocks on the E. coast, presents little picturesque scenery. In the E. are fine woods of oak, beech, fir, &c. The middle part consists of heaths and moors, with some arable land: it affords good pasture for oxen, sheep, and goats. The other parts are fertile, and yield large crops of grain (principally rye,) which together with horses and beavers, are annually exported to Sweden, Norway, and Holland. The air is cold, especially towards the North Sea, but the inhabitants are vigorous and robust. It is the only province of Denmark which contains useful minerals; and even here they are confined to iron, limestone, and marble.

Jyenagur, or Jypour, a fortified town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Agimere. It is a place of great wealth, being the staple for goods that are brought from the neighbouring provinces; and is reckoned one of the handsomest and most regular towns of Hindoostan. 120 m. W. by S. of Agra. Long. 75. 40. E., lat. 26. 56. N.

KADHEMA, a sea-port of Arabia, in the province of Bahrein. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the pearl fishery. It is seated on a bay of the gulf of Persia, 170 m. N. by W of Lachsa. Long. 47. 36. E., lat. 28. 40. N.

Kaffraria. See Caffraria.

Kahla, a town of Germany, in Altenburg, seated on the Saale, 8 m. S. of Jena.

Kahlenberg, a mountain of Austria, extending along the Danube to the W. of Vienna, and forming the commencement of the Kahlengebirge range, which is a branch of the Noric Alps.

Kahone, a town of Western Africa, capital of the kingdom of Bur-Salum. It is seated on a small river which falls into the Atlantic.

Kaia, a small village of Prussian Saxony, near Lutzen, celebrated as the scene of much fighting on 2nd of May, 1813, between the French and the allied Russian and Prussian army.

Kaim. See Kin.

Kairuan. See Cairoan.

Kaisariéh, or Kaisarijah, a town of Asia Minor, the ancient capital of Cappadocia, then called Cesarea. It is surrounded with walls, 5 m. in circumference, and defended by a castle. The inhabitants, estimated at 25,000, carry on an extensive trade, and it is the resort of merchants from all parts of Asia Minor and Syria. It is situated at the foot of a mountain, always capped with snow, 130 m. E. N. E. of Cogni.

Kaket, a town of the country of Georgia, in a province of its name, which comprehends a part of the ancient Iberia. It is situated near Mount Caucasus, 45 m. N. N. E. of Teiflis, and 120 N. W. of Derbend.

Kalau, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, with a great trade in wool. 11 m. S. E. of Luckau.

Kalhat, a town of Arabia, on a river of the same name, at its entrance into the gulf of Ormus, 80 m. S. E. of Maseat.

Kalisch, one of the eight palatinates of Russian Poland, bounded on the W. by Prussian Poland, and on the three other sides by the palatinates of Sendomir, Cracow, and Masovia.

Kalisch, a city of Poland, capital of the above palatinate, with manufactures of cloth, linen, and leather. It is surrounded by morasses and walls, has a collegiate and ten other churches, four religious houses, and a Catholic high school. 66 m. N. W. of Breslau.

Kalka Pira, a river of Chinese Tartary, which gives name to a tribe of Monguls, inhabiting the country N. of the Mongul Tartars, properly so called, which stretches as far as the kingdom of the Eluths, and is nearly 300 leagues in extent from E. to W.

Kallingburg, a sea-port of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand, seated on an inlet of the Great Belt, with the best harbour, next to Copenhagen, on the island. 55 m. W. by N. Copenhagen. Long. 11. 11. E., lat. 55. 47. N.

Kalmucs, a nation of Tartars, inhabiting that part of the Russian government of Caucasia which lies between the Volga and the Ural, toward the Caspian Sea. They all live in tents, and remove from place to place in quest of pasture for their numerous cattle, consisting of horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They neither sow nor reap, nor make hay for their cattle, so that they live without bread, or any sort of vegetable; and, in winter, their cattle fare like the wild beasts. Their food is flesh (especially that of horses), fish, wild fowls, and venison; and they have great plenty of milk, butter, and cheese; but mare's milk is the most esteemed, and from it they make a strong spirit, to which they are partial. They are divided into a number of hordes or clans, each under its own particular khan, and all acknowledge the authority of one principal khan, who is called Orchicurtikhan, or the king of kings, and derives his pedigree from the great Tamerlane. All of them, however, have submitted to the government of Russia, or live under its protection. They are pagans, and believe in transmigration of souls. In person, manners, and customs, they resemble the ancient Sythians, from whom they are descended. See Tartary.

Kalmunz, a town of Bavaria, seated at the conflux of the Nab with the Vilz, 12 m. N. N. W. of Ratisbon.

Kaluza, a government of the Russian empire, formerly a province in the government of Moscow. Its principal town, of the same name, is seated on the Occa, 107 m. S. S. W. of Moscow.

Kamakura, an island of Japan, 3 m. in circumference, lying on the S. coast of Nippon. It is surrounded with very high and steep rocks, and is used as a place of exile for state prisoners.

Kamalia, a town of Negroland, in the country of Mandingo. The inhabitants are partly pagans and partly Mahomedans, and have manufactures of cotton, leather, and iron.

Kambala, a ridge of mountains in Thibet, between the lake Palte, and the river Burrampooter.

Kamenitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bechin, 27 m. E. by N. of Bechin.

Kaminieck, a strong town of Russian Poland, capital of Podolia, and a bishop's see, with a castle. When the Russians seized part of the Polish territories, in 1793, this fortress held out a long time but at last surrendered to their arms. The castle is seated on a craggy rock. 85 m. W. of Braclaw.

Kamnitz, a town of Bohemia, with manufactures of stockings, glass, and linen; also several bleachfields. 21 m. N. N. E. of Leitmeriz.

Kamtschatka, a peninsula on the eastern coast of Asia, extending from 52. to 63. of N. lat. long. of its extremity to the S. being 156. 45. E. The isthmus joining it to the continent on the N. lies between the gulf of Olutorsh and Penshink; and its extremity to the S. is Cape Lopatka. Its greatest breadth is 236 computed m., being from the mouth of the river Tigril to that of the river Kamtschatka; and towards each extremity it gradually becomes narrower. It is bounded by the N. Pacific Ocean to the S. and E.; and by the sea of Okhotsk to the W. A chain of high mountains from N. to S. extends the whole length of the peninsula, and almost equally divides it; whence several rivers rise, and take their course into the Pacific Ocean, and the sea of Okhotsk. Stunted trees are thinly scattered over the whole face of the country, whose bottoms are mossy, with a mixture of low heath; the whole resembling Newfoundland in a most striking degree. The severity of the climate is in proportion to the sterility of the soil. Four months, commencing at midsummer, may be considered as forming their spring, summer, and autumn: the rest of the year is all dreary winter. They have great quantities of wholesome vegetables in a wild state such as chervil, garlic, onions, angelica, and wild celery, with some excellent turnips, and turnip radishes, upon a few spots of ground in the valleys; and this is the utmost extent of their garden cultivation. A variety of wild berries, which are gathered at proper seasons and preserved by mashing them into a thick jam, constitute a considerable part of the winter provisions, serving as a general sauce to their dried fish, the main article of food. The forests abound in wild animals, particularly the bear; and wild fowl are also plentiful. The people of Kamtschatka may be said to consist of three sorts, the Kamtschadales the Russians, and Cossacks, and a mixture produced by their intermarriages. The habitations of the natives consist of three different kinds, which they call jouts, balagans, and log-houses. They inhabit the first in the winter, and the second in the summer; in the third, introduced by the Russians, only the wealthy people reside. The external appearance of a jout resembles a round, squat hillock; a hole serving for a chimney, window, and door, is left in the centre, and the inhabitants go in and out by the assistance of a long pole, having notches deep enough to afford a little security for the toe. The upper garment of the Kamtschadales resemble a wagoner's frock; if for summer wear it is made of nankeen; if intended for winter it is made of skin, having one side tanned, and the hair preserved on the other, which is worn innermost; a close jacket of nankeen, or other cotton stuff, is the next under this; and, beneath that, a shirt made of thin Persian silk, of any colour. They wear long breeches, and boots, made of skins, with the hair innermost. They have also a fur cap, with two flaps, that are usually tied up close to the head, but allowed to fall round the shoulders in rough weather. A species of dog, resembling the mountain or shepherd dog of Europe, is used for the purposes of labor and draught. None of the inhabitants keep fewer than five of these dogs, which in winter are fed upon offals or decayed fish: in summer, when their services are not required, they are left to range over the country and provide for themselves; but on the approach of winter they return home in the most punctual manner. They are harnessed to a sledge, two abreast, with one well trained in front as a leader, and are used both for travelling and for conveying all sorts of commodities from place to place. The Russians made themselves masters of the whole of this peninsula in 1706; but the government they have established is exceedingly mild, the inhabitants being permitted to choose their own magistrates. Skins and furs form the only articles of trade, in return for which they import brandy (the introduction of which has been attended with the most destructive effects), nankeens, and other Chinese stuffs, together with various commodities of Russian and European manufacture.

Kamtschatkoi, Niznei, a town of Siberia, capital of Kamtschatka, with a citadel, arsenal, and barracks. It is seated on the N. side of the river Kamtschatka, 20 m. from its mouth. Long. 161° 70' E., lat. 56. 30. N.

Karek, or Garak, an island in the N. E. part of the gulf of Persia, 5 m. long and 2 broad; where ships bound for Bassora generally call for pilots. Long. 50. 26. E., lat. 29. 15. N.

Karleby, Gamla, a sea-port of Sweden, in E. Bothnia, with a trade in hemp, salt, and ship-building; seated on the gulf of Bothnia, near the influx of the river Karleby, 90 m. N. by E. of Christinestad. Long. 22. 20. E., lat. 63. 56. N.

Karleby, Ny, a town of Sweden, in E. Bothnia, on the river Lappojock, 6 m. from the sea, and 20 S. of Gamla Karleby.

Kasan, the ancient Bulgaria, a government of European Russia, lying on both sides the Volga, between 46. 20. and 49. 40. of E. long., and 54. and 57. of N. lat., and bounded by the governments of Viatka, Orenburg, Niznei-Novgorod, and Simbirsk. Its extent is 22,000 square m.; its pop. about 850,000, partly Russians and partly Tartars, though of very mixed origin. It is watered by the Volga, the Kama, the Sura, the Viatka, and the Kasanka, besides smaller streams and a great number of lakes. It was formerly an independent kingdom, belonging to the Kalmucs, to whom the dukes of Moscow, with other petty principalities of Russia, were tributary. But, in 1552, it was conquered by Ivan Bassilowitz II., and annexed to Russia.

Kasan, a city of Russia, capital of the foregoing government, and an archbishop's see. It has an antique Tartar fortress, built of stone, several churches, and 11 convents; and there are several suburbs, one of them inhabited by Tartars. At one end of the city is a manufacture of cloth for the army. It has also manufactures of woolen, cotton, lace and earthenware, with large soap works and tanneries; and carries on an extensive trade. At a short distance from Kasan is a new admiralty establishment, with a navigation school, magazines, and a dock-yard, where galliots are constructed, and sent down the Volga to the Caspian Sea. It is seated on the rivulet Kasanka, where it enters the Volga, 420 m. E. of Moscow. Long. 49. 20. E., lat. 55. 48. N.

King William, Queen Mary, Queen Anne, and George II. died here. The gardens now form a fashionable and extensive promenade having been gradually augmented to 31-2 m. in circumference.

Kensington, t. Rockingham Co. N. H. 45 m. fr. Boston. Pop. 717.

Kent, a county of England, 55 m. long and 28 broad; bounded on the N. by the Thames and the German Ocean, E. by the same Ocean, S. E. and S. by the English Channel and Sussex, and W. by Surrey. It contains 935,600 acres; is divided into 63 hundreds, and 414 parishes; has two cities, Canterbury and Rochester, and 24 market towns; and sends 18 members to parliament. In the soil and face of the country there is a great diversity. The banks of the Thames are low and marshy, but backed by a range of chalky eminences, sometimes rising to a moderate height. This kind of hard chalky soil, inclining to barrenness, extends to the N. E. extremity of the county, and thence round to Dover, exhibiting its nature in the lofty white cliffs which here bound the island, and produce that striking appearance at sea which gave it the name of Albion. The S. part of Kent, called the Weald, is a flat and woody tract of a clayey soil, and fertile. The midland and western districts are a mixture of hill and vale, arable and pasture, equal in pleasantness to any part of England. The minerals of this county, consists chiefly of chalk, flint, ragstone, and pyrites; and the only mineral water of any note is that of Tunbridge Wells. The manufactures are few, and mostly of the coarser kinds, but every branch of agriculture is extensively prosecuted with ability and success. Besides the usual objects of agriculture, the county produces large quantities of hops, fruit of various kinds (especially cherries and apples, of which there are large orchards in the London markets), and madder for dyeing. The country inland from Dover, consisting chiefly of open downs, is excellent for the feeding of sheep; and many bullocks are fattened to an extraordinary size in Romney Marsh. The principal rivers, besides the Thames are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother.

Kendall, a village in Perry township, Stark Co. Ohio, with a woolen manufactory.

Kennebec, a river of the State of Maine, flowing into the Atlantic, formed by two branches, one of which rises in Moosehead Lake, and the other in the highlands on the north of the State. It is 300 m. in length and is navigable for ships 12 and for boats 60 m.

Kennebec, a county of Maine on the above river. Pop. 52,491. Augusta is the capital.

Kennebunk, p.t. York Co. Me., at the mouth of a river of the same name, 25 m. S. W. Portland. It has some trade in lumber. Pop. 2,233. Kennebunk Port has an additional pop. of 2,763.

Kent, a county of Rhode Island in the centre of the State. Pop. 12,784. East Greenwich is the capital. Also a central county of Delaware Pop. 19,911. Dover is the capital. Also a county in the northern part of Maryland, on the eastern shore of the Chesapeake. Pop. 10,502. Chestertown is the capital. Also a county of Lower Canada lying on the St. Lawrence, opposite Montreal. Also a county of Upper Canada extending to the N. and W. without any defined limits

Kent, p.t. Litchfield Co. Conn. on the Housatonic, 44 m. W. Hartford. Pop. 2,001. Also a p.t. Putnam Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,928.

Kent Island, in the northern part of Chesapeake Bay. It contains about 30,000 acres and is comprised within the county of Queen Anne.

Kentucky, one of the United States, bounded N. by Illinois, Indiana and Ohio; E. by Virginia, S. by Tennessee, and W. by Missouri. It extends from 36 30. to 39. 10. N. lat. and from 81. 50. to 89. 26. W. long. Is 300 m. in length from E. to W. and 150 in mean breadth, and contains 42,000 sq. m. It is washed by the Ohio on the whole of its northern limit and traversed by the Licking, Kentucky and Green rivers. The Cumberland and Tennessee intersect the western extremity. The former rises in the eastern part of the state and passes into Tennessee after which it returns, and flows through Kentucky into the Ohio. The eastern boundary is formed by the Cumberland Mountains, and the eastern portion of the state is generally mountainous. The soil rests upon a bed of limestone from 3 to 10 feet below the surface. This substance is also mixed up in the soil and imparts to it a warm and exciting quality which with the help of moisture gives a remarkable freshness and vigour to the vegetation. The centre of the state contains a tract of 150 m. in length and 50 in breadth, which for beauty of landscape and richness of soil surpasses any region of the same extent in the western country. Along the Ohio between Salt and Green rivers is a large tract called the 'barrens' on account of its deficiency in wood, yet here the land is generally good, and covered with grass. In many parts of the state however, there are not wanting sterile and mountainous tracts unfit for cultivation. The general appearance of the county is remarkably picturesque, being diversified by hills and dales in the most charming manner. The woods have a delightful appearance and resemble groves promiscuously arranged by art for the effect of a pleasure ground. The trees are walnut, cherry, honey-locust, buckeye, pawpaw maple, cotton wood, mulberry, elm, ash, hawthorn, sycamore, &c. In the early part of spring the woods are covered with the purple flower of the red bud and the white blossoms of the dogwood. Grape vines of prodigious size climb the trees, and in early times the country was covered with a thick canebrake.

This state does not furnish many mineral productions, yet it is said to contain much iron and some lead and coal. Salt springs are common, but little salt is manufactured from them. There are some medicinal springs near Lexington, and Harrodsburg. The surface of the country in many parts exhibits remarkable cavities or depressions called sink-holes; these are something in the shape of inverted cones, and appear to be caused by perforations in the limestone rock beneath, which have occasioned the soil above to sink. The sound of running water has sometimes been heard at the bottom of these cones. But the most remarkable natural curiosity is the Mammoth Cave, near Green River, which has been traversed for 16 m. under the earth without reaching the end. The sides and roof are formed of a smooth limestone rock perfectly white. Some of its apartments are 8 acres in extent and 100 feet high. Others contain columns of brilliant spar and stalactites 60 or 70 feet in height. The earth in the cave is strongly impregnated with saltpetre, and here was found some years since an Indian mummy in perfect preservation.

The wheat raised in this state is of the finest kind. Maize is produced in great abundance. Hemp and tobacco, are, next to flour, the staple productions of the country. Some cotton is also cultivated. The manufactures are woolen and cotton cloth, cordage, bagging, maple sugar, saltpetre, paper, whiskey, leather, &c. The trade of the state is very flourishing. Agricultural and manufactured products are exported by steamboats and other river craft to New Orleans, and herds of cattle are driven across the mountains to the Atlantic States.

The legislature of Kentucky is styled the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The Senators are chosen for 4 years and the representatives for one. The Governor is chosen for 4 years; one fourth of the Senators are renewed annually. Elections are popular, and suffrage is universal. Frankfort is the seat of government, and Louisville is the largest town. The other large towns are Lexington and Maysville. There are colleges at Lexington, Danville, Augusta, Princeton, Bardstown, and Georgetown. The Baptists are the most numerous religious sect: they have 289 ministers; the Methodists 77; the Presbyterians 70; the Catholics 30 and the Episcopalians 5. The state is divided into 83 counties, and contains a population of 688,844, of whom above 165,350 are slaves.

This state was originally a part of Virginia, and was admitted into the Union as a state in 1792. The first settlement within its limits was made by the celebrated Daniel Boone in 1775.

He was a native of Maryland, and as early as 1769 made a visit to this country. In 1770 he was living alone in the woods, the only white man in Kentucky. The next year he with his brother explored the country as far as Cumberland river, and in 1773 Boone had collected a company of 45 persons who attempted to form a settlement but they were attacked by the Indians and lost their cattle. In 1775 he built a fort on the spot where Boonsborough now stands, and this was the first effectual settlement in the state. Boone was afterwards taken prisoner by the savages but escaped and arrived at Boonsborough after a journey of 160 m. through the woods which he performed in 4 days, eating but a single meal in that time. He was afterwards actively engaged in warfare with the Indians who continually annoyed the early settlers with hostilities. Being subsequently vexed with law suits respecting his title to the land in his possession, he retired to the banks of the Missouri; and led a solitary life among the forests. "We saw him" says Mr. Flint "on those banks with thin grey hair, a high forehead, a keen eye, a cheerful expression, a singularly bold conformation of countenance and breast, and a sharp and commanding voice, and with a creed for the future, embracing not many articles beyond his red rival hunters. He appeared to us the same Daniel Boone, if we may use the expression, jerked and dried to high preservation, that we had figured, as the wanderer in the woods, and the slayer of bears and Indians." He could no longer well describe the wild turkey on the trees, but his eye still kindled at the hunter's tale, and he remarked that the population on that part of the Missouri was becoming too dense, and the farms too near each other, for comfortable range, and that he never wished to reside in a place where he could not fell trees enough into his yard to keep up his winter fire. Dim as was his eye, with age, it would not have been difficult, we apprehend, to have obtained him as a volunteer on a hunting expedition over the Rocky Mountains. No man ever exemplified more strongly the ruling passion strong in death." He died in 1822 aged 85.

Kentucky River, rises among the mountains in the eastern part of Kentucky, and flows north westerly into the Ohio. It is a very rapid stream and for a great part of its course flows between high and perpendicular cliffs of limestone. It has a navigation of 150 m. and at its mouth is 450 feet in width.

Keppel Bay, a bay on the E. coast of New Holland, which communicates with Port Curtis.

Kerelong, an island in the Indian Ocean, about 80 miles in circumference. The face of the country is diversified with steep hills and extensive valleys, and is every where covered with trees and verdure. The inhabitants are Malays. Long. 126. 30. E., lat. 4. 28. N.

Kerguelen's Land, an island in the Southern Ocean, which, on account of its sterility, captain Cook, who visited it in 1779, would have denominated the Island of Desolation, but that he was unwilling to rob M. Kerguelen of the honour of its bearing his name. On the N. E. coast is a good and safe bay, named Christmas Harbour Long. 69. 30. E., lat. 49. 20. S.

Kerkuk, a town of Curdistan, the capital of a government, and residence of a pacha. It is surrounded by walls, and defended by a castle, 135 m. S. E. of Betlis.

Kerman, the ancient Caramania, a province of Persia, lying on the gulf of Persia. The northern part is barren, but towards the S. the land is fertile.

Kerman, or Sirgan, a city of Persia capital of the foregoing province, celebrated for its beautiful pottery, carpets, and stuffs. It is 120 m. N. by W. of Gombron. Long. 55. 15. E., lat. 29. 20. N.

Kernesville, p.v. Northampton Co. Pa.

Kerry, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, bounded on the E. by the counties of Limerick and Cork, W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by the Shannon, which separates it from Thomond, and S. by Desmond and the Ocean. Its greatest length is about 67 m. and its maximum breadth 62, comprising about 1,040,487 statute acres, or 1,639 square m. The southern part is plain, and fertile in corn; but the greater part is mountains, and chiefly adapted for grazing. Considerable quantities of beef, butter, hides, and tallow, are exported from its excellent harbours. Tralee is the capital.

Kerry, a parish of Wales, in Montgomeryshire, situate in a beautiful vale of the same name, 3 m. from Newton.

Kershaw, a District of South Carolina. Pop. 13,545. Camden is the capital.

Kertch, a sea-port and fortress on the E. coast of the Crimea. The fortress is of great importance, as one of those commanding the passage which forms the communication between the Black Sea and the sea of Asoph. It is 60 m. N. N. E. of Caffa. Long. 36. 24. E., lat. 45. 15. N.

Keschim, a sea-port of Arabia Felix, in Hadramaut, 80 m. E. of Shibam. Long. 50. 50. E., lat. 15. 25. N.

Kesh, or Sebs, a town of Usbec Tartary, in Bukharia, once the ordinary summer residence of Timur, who surrounded it with walls, and built a new palace in 1379. It is 30 m. S. by W. of Samarcand.

Kessel, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Antwerp, with a handsome castle, seated on the Maese, 7 m. N. of Ruremonde.

Kesseldorf, a village of Saxony, 7 m. W. of Dresden, celebrated for a victory gained by the king of Prussia over the Saxons, in 1745.

Keswick, a town in Cumberland, Eng.; seated in a vale of its name, near the rapid river Greta. This vale is much visited by the admirers of nature: here is the lake of Keswick, or Derwentwater; and to the N. of this soars the lofty mountain Skiddaw, one of the most distinguished in England. Keswick has manufactures of cotton, linen, and coarse woolen goods, and an establishment for making some of the finer textures has been recently opened. About a mile and a half to the S. of the town is a remarkable arrangement of rude granite stones, which form a circle, called the Druids' temple. It is 25 m. N. W. of Kendal, and 2 E. N. N. W. of London.

Kettering, a town in Northamptonshire, Eng. with manufactures of fannies, serges, lutestrings, &c. It is 12 m. N. E. of Northampton, and 74 N. W. of London.

Kenschberg, or Kiade, a town of Prussian Saxony, 6 m. S. E. of Mersburg.

Kew, a village in Surrey, Eng. 6 m. W. by S. of London. The royal palace of Kew, taken down in 1828, was a favorite retreat of George III., who enlarged the gardens, and united them with those of Richmond. The botanic garden, chiefly for exotics, is one of the finest in the world.

Kexholm. See Wiburg.

Kexholm, a town of Russia, in Finland, formerly the capital of the Swedish province of Carelia and now of a Russian government. It is seated on two islands in the River Woxon, which here flows into lake Ladoga. 90 miles N. of Petersburg. Long. 30. 25. E., lat. 61. 3. N.

Keynsham, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. with a trade in malt: seated on the Chew, at its conflux with the Avon, 5 m. S. E. of Bristol, and 114 W. of London.

Keysville, a village of Charlotte Co. Va. 70 m. S. W. Richmond.

Key-West, a small island in the Gulf of Mexico, near the southern extremity of the peninsula of East Florida. A settlement was made here by the United States government with the design of making it a naval station, but it has been abandoned, from the unhealthiness of the spot.

Kharkoff, or Charkov, a town of European Russia, capital of a government of the same name: seated on the small rivers Kharkoff and Lapan, 400 m. S. by W. of Moscow.

Khorassan. See Cho.

Khum. See Com.

Kia-king, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Tche-kiang. Canals are cut through most of the streets; and passengers are sheltered from the sun and rain by beautiful piazzas. The silk manufactures are very extensive, and the trade considerable. It is 500 m. S. E. of Peking. Long. 120. 14. E., lat. 30. 50. N.

Kiakta, a town of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Irkutsk. It has a considerable fur trade and is the centre of the Russian and Chinese commerce. It stands on a small river, near its conflux with the Selenga, 75 m. S. W. of Selenginsk Long. 106. 30. E., lat. 50. 20. N.

Kiangari, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, chief place of a sangiac, with a castle on a rock, 230 m. E. of Bursa. Long. 34. 47. E., lat. 39. 56. N.

Kiang-nan, a province of China, bounded on the W. by Ho nan, S. by Tche-kiang and Kian-si, E. by the gulf of Nan-king, and N. by Chantong. It is of vast extent, and contains 14 cities of the first rank, and 93 of the second and third, which are all places of considerable trade, the whole country being intersected by lakes, rivers, and canals. Its silks, cottons, japanned goods, and paper, are in high esteem. Nan-king is the capital.

Kiang-si, a province of China, bounded on the N. by Kiang-nan, W. by Houquang, S. by Quang-tong, and E. by Fokien and Tche-kiang. The N. part contains the great Po-yang lake, and some extensive morasses; the middle and S. parts are mountainous, but intermixed with fertile and well cultivated valleys. It contains 13 cities of the first rank, and 78 of the second and third. It is celebrated for its porcelain, which is the finest and most valuable of the empire. Nan-tchang is the capital.

Kian-ku, or Yang-tse-kiang, the largest river of Asia. It flows E. during the first part of its course along the borders of China, after which it enters the empire, and passing through the grand central provinces falls into the gulf of Irong-ming in the eastern sea.

Kiburg, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Zurich, with a castle, seated on the Theoff. 14 m. E. N. E. of Zurich.

Kickapoos, a tribe of Indians in Illinois and the neighborhood. They have about 600 warriors.

Kidderminster, a corporate town in Worcester-shire, Eng. It has long been celebrated for its carpet manufacture, which has been brought to great perfection. A fine specimen of carpet weaving, delineating the Descent from the Cross, is placed over the altar in St. George's chapel, recently erected. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes this place. It is seated on the river Stour, 14 m. S. E. of Bridgenorth, and 126 N. W. of London.

Kidge, or Kej, a fortified town of Persia, capital of the province of Mecran, seated on the Nehenk, 530 m. S. W. of Candahar. Long. 63. 20. E., lat. 26. 15. N.

Kidwelly, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire. It stands on a creek of the Bristol Channel, and has a canal to some collieries, whence coal is brought down and exported. Here are also an iron foundry and a tin mill. On the opposite bank of the creek, where the old town formerly stood, are the remains of a castle. It is 8 m. S. of Caermarthen, and 226 W. by N. of London.

Kiel, a strong town of Denmark, capital of the duchy of Holstein, with a castle, and a university. It stands on a peninsula, in a bay of the Baltic, and has a commodious harbour for ships of the largest size. It is one of the most commercial places in Holstein; and its trade is augmented by means of the Eyder canal to Rendsburg. Kiel is 37 m. N. W. of Lubeck, and 46 N. by E. of Hamburg. Long. 10. 16. E., lat. 54. 21. N.

Kien-ning, a city of China, of the first rank in the province of Fo-kien. At the time of the conquest of China by the Tartars it sustained two sieges, and was at last taken, and all the inhabitants put to the sword. It was afterwards re-established by the Tartars, and is now a place of considerable trade. It stands on the river Min-jo, 260 m. S. E. of Nan-king. Long. 117. 2. E., lat. 27. 5. N.

Kieou-kiang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si, situate on the Kian-ku, immediately above the influx of the Poyang-hou. It is the rendezvous of all the barks which pass to and from other places in this province, and the provinces of Kiang-nan and Hou-quang. It is 250 m. S. W. of Nan-king. Long. 116. 0. E., lat. 29. 54. N.

Kilbarchan, a village of Scotland, on the W. side of Loch Winnoch, 5 m. S. W. of Renfrew. It is inhabited chiefly by weavers, and has extensive bleach fields.

Kilbride, a town of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, noted for its cotton manufactures, and for being the birthplace of Dr. William Hunter and his brother John, celebrated anatomists. It is 6 m. S. by E. of Glasgow.

Kilcalmonell, a town of Scotland, in Argyleshire. 17 m. N. of Campbellton.

Kilda, St. one of the Hebrides, 28 m. to the W. of North Uist. It is 3 m. long and 2 broad, fenced about with one continued perpendicular face of rock, of prodigious height, except at the landing place on the S. E., where there is a narrow and steep passage to a village on the top of a rock. The surface of the island is hilly; but it feeds many sheep, and produces plenty of barley and potatoes. Many of the inhabitants live chiefly by fishing, and catching wild fowl. In the latter employment, they are incredibly adventurous. Being let down by a rope from the summit of the precipitous rocks, they clamber along their fronts in search of the eggs and nests of various birds. St. Kilda is the most remote of the Hebrides, and is about 140 m. from the nearest point of the mainland of Scotland. Long. 8. 23. W., lat. 57. 43. N.

Kildare, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 37 m. long, and from 12 to 20 broad; bounded on the E. by Dublin and Wicklow, W. by King's county, and Queen's county, N. by East Meath, and S. by Carlow. The principal rivers are the Liffey, Barrow, and Boyne. It is a very fertile and arable country. It sends 2 members to the imperial parliament.

Kildare, a borough of Ireland, capital of the foregoing county, and a bishop's see. It is chiefly supported by frequent horse-races on what is called the Curragh, a fine turfy plain, containing upwards of 5,000 acres, which feeds a great number of sheep. 27 m. S. W. of Dublin. Long. 6. 57. W., lat. 53. 9. N.

Kilfenora, a small town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, and a bishop's see united with Killaloe. 12 m. N. W. of Ennis.

Kilgarra, a town of Wales in Pembrokeshire, now inhabited principally by fishermen. Here are the remains of an ancient and celebrated castle, on a high rock. It is seated on the Tivy, 30 m. N. of Pembroke, and 231 W. N. W. of London.

Kilham, a parish in East Yorkshire, Eng. 31 m. E. N. E. of York.

Kilia, a fortified town of European Russia, in Bessarabia, with a good trade in wool, goat's hair, tallow, wine, corn, &c. It is situated on the most northern branch of the Danube, 86 m. S. W. of Bialogrod.

Kilkenny, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 40 m. long and 20 broad; bounded on the E. by Carlow and Wexford, W. by Tipperary, N. by Queen's county, and S. by Waterford. It sends 2 members to parliament. The surface is in general level and the soil fertile. It is particularly noted for its coal which makes no smoke in burning. The principal rivers are the Barrow, Suire, and Nore.

Kilkenny, a city of Ireland, capital of the above county, situate on the river Nore, over which are two bridges. Irishtown, on the E. side of the river, is joined to it, and both together form a large and pleasant place. It had formerly a bishop; and the cathedral, which stands in Irishtown, belongs to the bishop of Ossory. The chief manufactures are coarse woolens and fine blankets. 26 m. N. of Waterford. Long. 7. 32. W. lat. 52. 36. N.

Kilkenny, t. Coos Co. N. H. among the White Mountains. Pop. 27. Also a village in St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. and a township in Leinster Co. Lower Canada.

Killala, a sea-port of Ireland, in the county of Mayo and a bishop's see united with Achonry. It stands on a fine bay of the Atlantic, to which it gives name. 24 m. N. of Castlebar. Long. 9. 4. W., lat. 54. 8. N.

Killaloe, a town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, and a bishop's see united with Kilfenora. It is seated on the Shannon, over which is a bridge of 19 arches, 10 m. N. N. E. of Limerick.

Killarney, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, much frequented on account of the adjoining lake. 14 m. S. E. of Tralee.

Killarney, a beautiful lake of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, otherwise called Lough Lean, from its being surrounded by high mountains. It is divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lake. The northern, or lower lake, is 6 m. long and 3 broad. On the side of one of the mountains is O'Sullivan's Cascade which falls about 70 feet into the lake with a tremendous roar; and opposite this cascade is the island of Innisfallen. The promontory of Mucrus divides the upper from the Lower lake, and, on passing round its extremity into the upper lake, there is a celebrated rock, called the Eagle's Nest, which produces wonderful echoes. The upper lake is 4 m. long and 2 broad, and from the mountains descend a number of beautiful cascades. The islands in this lake are numerous, and afford an amazing variety of picturesque views. The centre lake is small in comparison with the other two, and cannot boast of equal variety; but the shores are indented with bays, surrounded by dark groves of trees. The E. boundary is formed by the base of Mungerton, down the steep side of which descends a cascade, visible for 150 yards: this fall of water is supplied by a circular lake, near the summit of the mountain, called the Devil's Punch-bowl, which is considered one of the greatest curiosities of Killarney.

Kilcalen, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, on the river Liffey, over which is a bridge. 9 m. E. S. E. of Kildare, and 25 S. W. of Dublin.

Killingly, p.t. Windham Co. Conn. 45 m. E. Hartford. Pop. 3,261.

Killington Peak. See Green Mountains.

Killingworth, p.t. Middlesex Co. Conn. on Long Island Sound, 26 m. E. New Haven. Pop. 2,483.

Killmallock, a town of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, formerly one of the best built inland towns in the kingdom, but much decayed. 16 m. S. of Limerick.

Killony, a town of Ireland, in the county of Sligo, 6 m. S. of Sligo.

Killough, or Port St. Ann, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Down, to the N. of St. John's Point, in the Irish Sea. A rock stands in the middle of the entrance of its harbour, covered at high flood. Here is a manufacture of salt. 6 m. S. S. E. of Downpatrick. Long. 5. 40. W., lat. 54 14. N.

Killybegs, a town of Ireland, in the county of Donegal, with a spacious harbor on the N. side of Donegal Bay. 12 m. N. W. of Ballyshannon.

Killygragh, a town of Ireland, in the county of Down, with a linen and thread manufacture. The celebrated Sir Hans Sloane was born in this town; It is seated on an arm of Strangford Lough, 35 m; N. E. of Newry.

Kilmacduagh, a village of Ireland, in the county of Galway, an old episcopal see, united to Clontarf. The ruins of the cathedral, a monastery, &c., denote its former consequence. 12 m. N. of Ennis.

Kilmacthomas, a town of Ireland, in the county of Waterford, 12 m. W. S. W. of Waterford

Kilmainham, a town of Ireland, in a valley, about half a m. W. of Dublin. It has a session-house, a gaol, a founding hospital, and an hospital for invalid soldiers. Here the knights for the county of Dublin are elected; and it was the seat of government before the castle at Dublin was appropriated to that purpose.

Kilmarnock, a populous and flourishing town of Scotland, in Ayrshire. It is the principal manufacturing town in the county, and carries on an extensive trade: its chief manufactures are carpets, serges, blankets, tartans, and other woolen goods, saddlery, leather, &c. Near it are the remains of Dean Castle, the seat of the earls of Kilmarnock, in the desolate condition to which it was reduced by fire in 1735. It is seated near the Irvine, 11 m. N. N. E. of Ayr, and 20 S. S. W. of Glasgow. Long. 4. 23. W., lat. 55. 40. N.

Kilmarnock, p.v. Lancaster Co. Va.

Kilmaurs, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, formerly celebrated for its cutlery. 2 m. N. W. of Kilmarnock.

Kincardineshire, or Mearns, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. W. and N. by Aberdeenshire, E. by the German Ocean, and S. and W. by Angusshire. Its length along the coast is 30 m. and its greatest breadth about 24. The N. W. part is mountainous, and chiefly adapted for pasture; but to the S. of the Grampians the surface is in general fertile. The small village of Kincardine 9 m. S. W. of Stonehaven, was formerly the capital but Stonehaven is now the county-town.

Kinderhook, p.t. Columbia Co. N. Y. on the Hudson 20 m. S. Albany. Pop. 2,706.

Kinton. See Kington.

King and Queen, a county in the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 11,644.

King George, a county in the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 3,397.

King Creek, a village in Barnwell District S. C. Kingfield, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. Pop. 554.

King George the Third Sound, a harbour on the S. W. coast of New Holland discovered by captain Vancouver in 1791. It is safe, and easy of access any where between its outer points of entrance, Bald-head and Mount Gardener, 11 m. distant from each other. Long. 118. 17 E., lat., 35. 5. S.

King George Sound, the name given by captain Cook, in 1778, to the bay which he discovered on the W. coast of North America, in long. 126. 43. W., and lat. 49. 33. N. but the natives call it Nootka; the name now generally adopted by the English. It is not situated on the continent, as Cook had reason to suppose, but on an island, to which captain Vancouver, in 1792, gave the name of Quadra and Vancouver Island. In 1786 a few British merchants in the East Indies formed a settlement in this place to supply the Chinese market with furs; but the Spaniards in 1789, captured two English vessels, and took possession of the settlement. The British ministry made their demand of reparation, and the affair was amicably terminated by a convention.

Kin-gan, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si, seated on the Kan-kiang, 800 m. S. of Peking. Long. 115. 10 E., lat. 27. 16. N.

Kindhorn, a borough of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on the frith of Forth, nearly opposite Leith. It joins with Burntisland, Kirkcaldy, and Dysart in returning two members to parliament. It has two harbours, one below the town, and the other half a mile W. at Pettycur, for the passage boats between this place and Leith. The manufacture of thread stockings, and the spinning of cotton and flax, were formerly carried on here to some extent, but owing to the depression of trade the former is given up and the latter is not prosecuted with any great activity. 9 m. N. by W. of Leith.

Knisteneaux, a tribe of Indians in North America who occupy a part of the British territory to the North of the lakes of Canada. The Knisteneaux, denominated Cristinaux by the ancient Canadians, and Killistonus by some modern writers—Crees by the English, wander over, or inhabit all the country to the south of the lake of the Mountains, as far as the lakes of Canada, and from Hudson's Bay to lake Winnipeg. The Knisteneaux are of a moderate stature, are well proportioned, and possess a remarkable degree of activity. Black and piercing eyes animate their agreeable and open countenance. They paint their face of different colours. They wear a simple and convenient dress, cut and ornamented with taste; but sometimes they hunt, even during the severest cold, almost entirely naked. It appears that of all the savages of North America, the Knisteneaux have the handsomest women. Their figure is well proportioned, and the regularity of their features would obtain them admiration, even in Europe. Their complexion is not so dark as that of other savage women, because their habits are much more cleanly. These Indians are naturally mild, honest and hospitable, when the pernicious use of spirituous liquors has not changed their natural disposition. They do not look upon chastity, however, as a virtue, nor do they imagine that conjugal fidelity is at all necessary to the happiness of the married state. Accordingly they offer their wives to strangers, and exchange them with each other, as Cato is said to have done. The fogs which cover their marshes, are believed to be the spirits of their deceased companions.

Konieh, or Koinch. See Cogni.

Koningratz, a fortified town of Bohemia, capital of a circle of the same name, and a bishop's see. It has a spacious, handsome market-place an elegant cathedral, and many other handsome buildings. In 1762 a body of Prussian troops entered the town, and laid the greatest part of it in ashes. It is seated on the Elbe, 44 m. E. of Prague. Long. 15. 40. E., lat. 50. 10. N.

Konigsberg, a government of the Prussian states, comprehending the N. and W. parts of the province of E. Prussia, and corresponding nearly to E. Prussia Proper. It comprises a superficial area of 8,960. sq. m. with 491,000 inhabitants.

Konigsberg, the capital of E. Prussia, with a university, a magnificent palace, and a public library. The town-house, the exchange, the royal mint, and the cathedral are fine structures. The tower of the castle is very high, whence there is a beautiful prospect. The wall which encloses the city and suburbs is 9 m. in circumference, but more than half this space consists of gardens and corn fields, the pop. of the whole not exceeding 55,000, who are principally of the Lutheran religion. Many of the houses are large and elegant; and the trade is very considerable. No ships drawing more than 8 feet water can pass the bar of the river, so that large vessels anchor at Pillau, a small town on the Baltic. Konigsberg, though fortified, is not capable of making any serious resistance. It was taken by the Russians in 1758; and in June, 1807, it fell into the hands of the French; but, since the overthrow of Bonaparte, it has been under the dominion of Prussia. It is seated on the Pregel, near its entrance into the Frisch Haff. 170 m. N. of Warsaw. Long. 20 45. E., lat. 54. 42. N.

Konigsberg, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, 46 m. N. N. E. of Mentz.

Konigsberg, a town and castle of the Bavarian states, in Franconia. 14 m. N. W. of Bamberg.

Konigsberg, a town and castle of Silesia, in the principality of Troppau, 15 m. S. E. of Troppau.

Koninsberg, a town of Hungary, seated on the river Gran, 70 m. E. by N. of Presburg.

Konigsberg, a well built town of Prussia 59 m. N. E. of Berlin.

Konigshof, a town and castle of Bohemia seated on the Elbe, 14 m. N. of Koniggratz.

Konigshofen, a town of Bavarian Franconia, on the river Saale, 30 m. N. W. of Bamberg.

Konigslutter, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick, with a celebrated abbey. It is seated on the rivulet Lutter, 16 m. E. of Brunswick.

Konigstein, a town of Saxony, on the frontiers of Bohemia. A garrison is constantly maintained in the fort, which stands on a mountain, and is deemed impregnable. The town has manufactures of woollen and linen, and is seated on the Elbe, 16 m. S. E. of Dresden. Long. 14. 14. E., lat. 50. 54. N.

Konigstein, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, with a castle on a rock, 11 m. N. W. of Frankfurt.

Konitz, a town of W. Prussia, 10 m. N. W. of Culm.

Konkodoo, a country of W. Africa, bordering on Jallonkadvo, Satadoo, and Dentila. It is full of steep mountains, which, however, are cultivated even to the summit. The streams which descend from these mountains impregnate the sand and earth with gold dust, which the natives separate by a mechanical process.

Koonjoor, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a county, in the province of Orissa. 86 m. N. N.

W. of Cattack, and 163 W. S. W. of Calcutta. Long. 85. 38. E., lat. 21. 52. N.

Kooshaub, a town of Hindoostan, in Lahore, seated on the Belut, 88 m. W. of Lahore. Long. 71. 20. E., lat. 30. 55. N.

Kopys, a fortified town of European Russia, in the government of Mohilef; seated on the Dnieper, 28 m. N. of Mohilet.

Kordofan, a country of central Africa, situated to the W. of the Bahr-el-Abiad, between the kingdom of Darfur and that of Sennaar. It is sometimes independent, and sometimes subject to the one or the other of these states. The inhabitants are said to be extremely licentious in their manners, and cherish a most inveterate enmity against those of Darfur. Ibeit is the capital.

Korfakan, a town of Arabia, in Oman, on a bay of the gulf of Ormus, 110 m. N. by W. of Rostak.

Koragan. See Jorjan.

Koriaes, a people of Siberia, who inhabit that part of the government of Okhotsk which lies around the gulf of Penguiskaia, and N. as far as the banks of the Anadir. They are divided into two sorts. Those called simply Koriaes have a fixed residence, and the resemblance between them and the Kamschadales is very striking. The others are wanderers, and are known by the appellation of Reindeer Koriaes; they roam in detached parties over these vast deserts, and are noted hunters and robbers. Their only property consists in their herds of reindeer, which they maintain by conducting them to those cantons that abound with moss; and, when these pastures are exhausted, they wander in search of others. The number of fixed Koriaes scarcely exceeds 900; and, though it is not easy to calculate that of the wandering Koriaes, it is imagined that they do not much exceed this amount. The features of the majority of the Koriaes are not Asiatic; and they might be considered as Europeans, but for their low stature, their ill shape, and the color of their skin. In general the women have sunken eyes, flat noses, and prominent cheeks, and in going about they carry their children in a kind of net or basket arched over, in which the infant is placed in a sitting posture, and sheltered from the weather. They acknowledge a Supreme Being, the creator of all things. He is supposed to inhabit the sun, whose burning orb they consider as the throne or palace of the Lord of Nature. They neither fear nor worship him: goodness, they say, is his essence; and it is impossible he should do any injury. The principle of evil they consider as a malignant spirit, who divides with the good Being the empire of nature. As the one is intent on the happiness of mankind, the other endeavours to render them unhappy. Diseases, tempests, famine, calamities of every kind, are his works, and the instruments of his vengeance. To pacify his wrath, they offer to him various animals, the first fruits of their hunting and fishing, and whatever they possess that is most valuable; but there is no temple set apart for his votaries, who conceive that they render him propitious by piously getting drunk in their jouts; for drunkenness is become with these people a religious practice, and the basis of all their solemnities.

Korinchi, a valley in the island of Sumatra, behind the range of mountains which forms the boundary of the provinces of Anak, Sungei, and Indrapour. It contains a fine lake, which abounds with fish, and its banks are covered with villages.

Koros Black, a river of Hungary, which rises in the palatinate of Bihar, and falls into the Theyss, near Czongrad, in the palatinate of Bk-esch.

Kosel, or Kosta, a fortified town of Prussia, in Silesia, on the river Oder, 17 m. N. of Ratibor.

Kosie, a considerable kingdom of Western Africa, situated on the E. side of the river Lagos, about 60 m. from its mouth. By this situation the people of Kosie command the trade of all the slaves which are brought down the river; and they prevent all communication between the traders of Lagos and those of the interior. The capital, of the same name, is said to be of great extent, and its buildings are described as resembling those of Coomassie, the capital of Ashantee.

Koslof. See Eupatoria.

Kostroma, a town of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, and a bishop's see. It is surrounded by a strong wall, and situate on a river of the same name, at its entrance into the Volga. 380 m. E. S. E. of Petersburg. Long. 41. 14. E., lat. 57. 40. N.

Kotta, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the province of Agimere, seated on the Chumbul. Long. 75. 49. E., lat. 25. 15. N.

Kottokolee, a city of Central Africa, capital of a country of the same name, of which the situation and extent are not accurately known.

Kotun, a city of Usbeck Tartary, in Cashgur, 110 m. S. E. of Ireken. Long. 81. 36. E., lat. 37. 50. N.

Koue-te, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Ho-nan. It is seated in a vast plain, between 2 large rivers, 312 m. E. of Pekin. Long. 115. 29. E., lat. 34. 30. N.

Kous, or Coss, a town of Egypt, on the E. bank of the Nile, once a place of great wealth and trade being the staple of commerce between the Nile and the Red Sea. 18 m. S. of Dendera, and 45. N. N. E. of Esne.

Krumlau. See Crumlau.

Kruszwica, a town of Russian Poland, in the palatinate of Brzesc, with a castle, noted for being the birthplace of Piast, who from the station of a private citizen, was elected king of Poland in the year 842. It is seated on a lake called Goplo, which supplies the Netz with a great part of its water. 28 m. W. of Brzesc Litov.

Kteifa, a small walled town of Syria, on the borders of the desert, supposed to be the ancient Adarisi, 22 m. E. N. E. of Damascus.

Kuora, a province of Abyssinia, situated near the banks of the Bahr-el-Abiad. It is very mountainous and unwholesome, but abounds in gold, which is brought from the neighbouring countries. The governor is one of the great officers of state, and has absolute power in his own province.

Kubbees, a city of Persia, in Seistan, in the midst of a great sandy desert, on the road from Kerman to Herat. 160 m. S. E. of Yezd.

Kubsha, a strong town of Asia, in Daghestan, situate on a hill, between high mountains. Its inhabitants call themselves Franki (Franks, a name common in the E. to all Europeans), and form a republic. They are excellent artists, and make very good fire-arms, sabres and several articles in gold and silver; for exportation. They have, likewise, for their own defence, small copper cannons, of three pounds calibre, cast by themselves. They coin Turkish and Persian silver money, and even rubles, which readily pass current, because they are of the full weight and value. Kubsha is considered as a neutral town, where the neighbouring princes can deposit their treasure with safety. In 1725 it acknowledged the sovereignty of Russia, but without paying any tribute. Long. 47. 49. E., lat. 42. 30. N.

Kubin, a town of Hungary, in the Bannat opposite Semendria, with 2,400 inhabitants, who carry on a brisk trade with Turkey.

Kubin, a town of Hungary, in the district of the Tsaikists. Long. 19. 18. E., lat. 49. 14. N.

Kufstein, a strong town of Austria, in the Tyrol, with a castle on a rock. It surrendered to the French and Bavarians in 1805. It is seated on the Inn, on the frontiers of Bavaria, 46 m. S. S. E. of Munich. Long. 12. 15. E., lat. 47. 30. N.

Kulla, a country of Centra. Africa, to the S. E. of Wangara, traversed by a river of the same name. It was represented to Browne as an important state, but he did not enter it.

Kulshelm, or Kulzheim, a town of Baden, in the principality of Leiningen, 40 m. E. S. E. of Heidelberg.

Kumania, Great and Little, two districts in the central part of Hungary, separated from each other by a considerable tract of country as well as by the river Theyss. Great Kumania comprises a superficial extent of 420 sq. m. with 13,000 inhabitants. Little Kumania is however the more extensive district, comprising an area of 1,000 sq. m., and a pop. of 41,000. The Calvinist is the prevailing religion in both districts.

Kandapura, a town of Hindoostan, in Canara, and the chief place in the northern part of the province. It is seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, which here expands into a lake, and forms a number of islands. It is the port for all goods coming from, or going to Nagara; but the bar will not admit vessels that draw more than 12 feet. It is 30 m. W. S. W. of Mangalore. Long. 74. 45. E., lat. 14. 24. N.

Kunersdorf, a village of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, 3 m. E. N. E. of Frankford on the Oder. Here, in 1759, was fought one of the most bloody battles on record between the Prussians and Russians, in which the king of Prussia, after a great slaughter of the enemy for upwards of six hours, was in the end obliged to quit the field with the loss of all his cannon and 20,000 men.

Kunka, a district of Hindoostan, in the province of Orissa, situate on the sea-coast, near the Point Palmyras. Being much intersected by rivers, the rajah successfully maintained his independence against the Mahrattas, but surrendered to the British in 1805.

Kunkagur, the capital of the above district, and the residence of the rajah, situate on the sea coast. Long. 87. 5. E., lat. 20. 50. N.

Kunting, a town of Bavarian Franconia, in the principality of Eichstadt, at the conflux of the Schwarzach with the Altmuhl, 12 m. N. E. of Eichstadt.

Kungee, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Dehli, and district of of Sirhind. It is surrounded by a mud wall and deep ditch, but was taken by the British in 1809, without resistance.

Kuno, a fortress of Japan, in the island of Nippon 60 m. W. S. W. of Jeddo.

Kunoelit, a town of Moravia, on the Olschowa 37 m. S. by E. of Olmutz.

Kuopin, a town of Sweden, in Finland, capital of Savolax, and that part of Carelia remaining to Sweden. It is situate on the W. side of an ex tensive lake 200 m. S. E. of Ulea. Long. 29. 10. E., lat. 63. 20. N.

Kupferberg, a mine-town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Jauer, on the river Bober, 17 m. N. W. of Jauer.

Kur, (the ancient Cyrus), a river of Persia, which rises in the Caucasian Mountains, passes by Tefflis, and flows S. E. to the Caspian Sea. At its mouth are several inlets, liable to be overflowed in the spring.

Kurda, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Guzerat, near the N. W. frontier, about 3 m. S. of Theraud.

Kurdistan, a country lying partly in Armenia and partly in Persia, along the eastern bank of the river Tigris, and comprehending great part of ancient Assyria. Its limits are not precisely ascertained; but it may be viewed as bounded on the N. by Armenia, on the E. by Persia, on the S. by Arabian and Persian Irak, and on the W. by Diarbekir, or, as it is sometimes called, Algazira. It is divided into two parts, viz., Lower Kurdistan, or the western division, which is included in the pachalic of Bagdad, and corresponds nearly to the whole of the ancient Assyria Proper; and Ardelan, which extends from the small river Sharook to the Turkish district of Zohaub. The surface is diversified by mountains and valleys; and the soil is in some places fertile and well cultivated; but it abounds with deserts, and, except in the neighbourhood of the towns, is barren and desolate. Wheat and barley are the grains most commonly raised. The inhabitants are not subject either to the Turks or Persians. Some live in towns and villages, and others rove from place to place, having tents like the wild Arabs, and being robbers like them. The tribes are ruled by a number of their own princes or chiefs. They are proud of their descent; and demand a premium for their daughters on giving them in marriage. Their character and circumstances seem to have undergone little change since the most remote times. Xenophon is supposed to refer to them under the name of Carduchai, a people who opposed the retreat of the 10,000 Greeks. Their religion is partly Christianity and partly Mahomedism. Altunkupri is the capital. The chief towns are Kerkook, Solymania, Beltis, Erbile, Amadia, Sennah, &c.

Kurch, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natio-la, 34 m. W. of Sinob.

Kuriles, a long chain of islands at the eastern extremity of Asia, extending from the southern point of Kamtschatka to the isles of Jesso or Matsmai, an island of Japan. They lie between 42. and 51. of N. lat., and the whole length of the range is said to be nearly 900 m. Exclusive of the very small ones, they are 22 in number. They are annexed to the government of Irkutsk, and pay a tribute of furs and sea calves, which is collected every three years; the Russian authority however can only be considered as extending over 19, the three most southerly belonging rather to Japan. The northernmost, called Shoonska, is three leagues from Cape Lopatka: the next, named Paramousic, is considerably larger than Shoonska. Those two islands were first visited by the Russians, in 1713, and the rest have been gradually discovered since that period. Some of these islands are fertile, wooded and abound in fish and game; while others are destitute of water and uninhabitable, but are occasionally visited by the islanders for the sake of hunting foxes and otters. The natives are ve ry hairy, wear long beard, and live entirely upon seals, fish, and the produce of the chase. They are hospitable and docile; but pusillanimous and unable to support misfortune with fortitude. Their houses and customs resemble those of the Kamtschatdales. They have some trade with the Chinese, Japanese, and Russians.

Kuron, a chain of mountains in Asiatic Turkey. See Tamus.

Kursk, a considerable town of European Russia, capital of a government of the same name. It has 16,000 inhabitants, a Protestant consistory, and 16 churches. The export trade is very considerable, amounting to about £150,000 sterling per annum. It is seated on the river Tuslara, 240 m. S. of Moscow. Long. 37. 8. E., lat. 51. 40. N.

Kusistan, or Chusistan, a province of Persia, bounded on the N. by Irac-Agemi, E. by Farsistan, S. by the gulf of Persia, and W. by Irac-Arabi. The N. part is mountainous, the S. flat and marshy. Tostar is the capital.

Kutah. See Chitaja.

Kuttenberg, a town of Bohemia, seated near a mountain, in which are silver mines. 5 m. N. W. of Czaslau.

Kuttore, a celebrated town and fortress of the N. of India, capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Cafristan. It is situated on the summit of a perpendicular rock, and was with great difficulty taken by Timur in the end of the 14th century. 100 m. N. E. of Cabul, and 250 N. W. of Lahore. Long. 70. 17. E., lat. 35. 27. N.

Kuty, a town of Austrian Poland, in Galicia, on the Czeremosz, with extensive manufactures of Russia leather. 61 m. S. S. E. of Halicz.

Kuynder, a town and fortress of the Netherlands, in Friesland, situated on a river of the same name, at its entrance into the Zuyder Zee, 23 m. S. of Lewarden. Long. 5. 32. E., lat. 52. 41. N.

Kuzneck, a town of Siberia, capital of a province of the same name, in the government of Kolivan. It has manufactures of iron, and stands on the Tom, at the influx of the Kondoma, 130 m. E. S. E. of Kolivan. Long. 85. 50. E., lat. 54. 16. N.

Kyburg, a bailiwick of Switzerland, including the whole of the N. E. part of the canton of Zurich. It is divided into 47 parishes, and is productive, particularly in fruit and wine.

Laber, a river of Bavaria, in Franconia, which rises near Neumark, and falls into the Danube at Sinzing, above Ratisbon.

Labes, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania, with manufactures of cloth; seated on the Reca, 35 m. N. E. of Stargard.

Labia, a town of European Turkey, in Servia, 70 m. S. W. of Nissa.

Labiau, a town of East Prussia, with a strong castle, seated at the mouth of the Deine, near the Curische Haft, 25 m. N. E. of Königsberg.

Labrador, a country of North America, on the E. side of Hudson Bay. The general aspect of the country is most dreary: the surface is mountainous and rugged, and covered with large stones, and the soil is poor. Coarse plants, adapted to the nourishment of deer and goats and other wild animals, are its chief productions. The climate, in only lat. 47. N., is excessively cold during winter. The ice begins to disappear in May, and about the middle of July commences hot weather, which at times is such as to scorch the face of the hunters. Mock suns and halos are not unfrequent; and the night is enlivened by the aurora borealis, which spreads over the whole sky. No country is better furnished with large, safe, and convenient harbours, or supplied with better water. The numerous islands along the E. coast abound with eider ducks and other waterfowl, and also with hares, foxes, and deer. The animals are not numerous; the most common are reindeer, bears, wolves, tigers, foxes, beavers, otters, lynxes, martens, ermines, wild cats. The Labrador jumping mouse is common to this country and to all the interior as far as Slave lake. Eagles, hawks, owls, geese, bustards, ducks, partridges, and all kinds of wild fowl are numerous. The fishes are whales, morses, seals, cod, and a white fish preferable to herrings; and in the rivers and fresh waters are pike, perch, carp, trout, &c. During the 3 months of summer there is a variety in the color of the several animals, but in winter everything, animate and inanimate, is white. The trees of Labrador are mere shrubs, with the exception of the black, white, and red spruce, silver fir, birch, and aspen. A few vegetables are produced, and various kinds of fruit. A beautiful spar, called Labrador stone, was discovered by the Moravian Missionaries, who have successfully exerted themselves in improving the condition of the natives. They have now 3 settlements on these inhospitable shores, the total pop. of which is about 600. The natives are called Esquimaux. They have no fixed abode, but rove from place to place, and sometimes come as far as Newfoundland. They are of a different race from the other native Americans; for the other tribes have no beards, but these have them so thick and large that it is difficult to discover any feature of their faces; they are likewise the only savages that eat their food in a raw state. They are of a middling stature, generally robust, lazy, and of a brown color. Their head is large, and their face round and flat; they have thick lips, a flat nose, long black hair, large shoulders, and uncommonly small feet. They are always well clothed; for there is nothing to be seen but part of their faces and their hands. They have a sort of shirt made of the guts of fish, with a coat of bear or bird skins, and a cap on their head. They have likewise breeches made of skins, with the hair inwards, and covered with furs without; also two pair of boots, one over another, of the same sort of skins. In summer, they have nothing to cover them in the night; and in the winter, they lodge in tents made of hides, or in caves. The dress of the women is nearly the same as that of the men. They are very superstitious, and have some sort of sacrifices. They acknowledge two invisible essences; the one has the origin of good; the other, to whom they pay the most homage, as the origin of every species of evil. Their chief employment is hunting and fishing. They are very covetous; and pay so little regard to private property as to take every advantage of bodily strength to rob their neighbours, not only of their goods but their wives. In other respects they are the mildest tribe, or nation, that is to be found on the borders of Hudson Bay. Murder, which is so common among all the tribes of southern Indians, is seldom heard of among them. A murderer is shunned and detested by all the tribe and is forsaken even by his relations and former friends. The women perform the most laborious offices; they pitch the tents, carry or haul burdens, make or mend clothes, and prepare the victuals. When any thing is prepared for eating, the wives and daughters are never served till all the males have taken what they think proper.

Laby, a considerable town of Western Africa, in the kingdom of Foota Jalloo. It is upwards of 2 m. in circumference and contains 5,000 inhabitants, who are employed in the manufacture of narrow cloths, and various articles in iron, silver, wood, leather, &c., and carry on a good trade with Tombuctoo, which is four months' journey beyond.

Laccadives, a group of small islands in the Indian Sea, lying W. of the coast of Malabar, discovered by Vasco de Gama, in 1449. They are 32 in number: and are inhabited by a race of Mahomedans called Moplays, whose chief traffic is in the produce of the cocoa palm, such as oil, cables, and cordage; and in dried fish. These are sent to the continent of India, whence they get rice, &c., in return; and also to Mascat, in large boats, which bring back dates and coffee. Calpeny, one of the largest, is 170 m. W. of Cochin. Long. 73. 32. E., lat. 10. 0. N.

Lacedogna. See Cedogna.

Lacapedes Islands, a group of islands on the N. W. coast of New Holland: the largest is about 9 m. long. A long chain of rocky reefs and great sand-banks proceed from their termination. Many whales, sea serpents, and fishes of different kinds, are seen in the surrounding sea. Long. 117. 8. E., lat. 16. 43. S.

Lacofery, mountains of Ireland, on the E. side of the country of Kerry, 12 m. E. of Tralee.

Lachen, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Schweitz, near which are some mineral springs, and petrifications: it is seated on the lake of Zurich.

Lachen, a large village of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, district of Spire, 3 m. S. E. of Neustadt.

Lachsa, or Lascha, a division of Arabia, occupying nearly the whole of the southwestern coast of the Persian Gulf, and extending to a considerable distance inland. Great part of the interior consists of sandy plains; but the coast is fertile, and well peopled. The chief productions are dates, rice, and cotton. The asses and camels are esteemed to be of an excellent breed, and some thousands of the latter are annually exported to Syria. The extensive piracies committed by the inhabitants of this country were so intolerable that in 1809 the British fitted out an expedition for the purpose of chastising them. They sailed to Ras-el-Khina, the principal port on this coast, which they took by assault, burned 70 vessels, and made considerable plunder. Lacsha was formerly subject to Turkey, but the inhabitants have now shaken off the yoke, and their sheik is one of the most powerful princes of Arabia.

Lachsa, a city of Arabia, capital of the above province, and the residence of the sheik. It is well built, and seated on the Astan, which flows into a considerable bay of the gulf of Persia, opposite the isle of Bahrein. Long. 48. 40. E., lat. 26. 20. N.

Lack, a town in Mifflin Co. Pa.

Lackawanna, or Lackawannock, a small stream in Pennsylvania flowing into the Susquehanna. In this neighborhood are large coal mines, for a description of which see Pennsylvania.

Lackawaken, a small stream of Pennsylvania flowing into the Delaware 174 m. above Philadelphia. Also the name of a township in Pike Co. Pa. on the above stream.

Laconia, p.v. Harrison Co. Indiana.

Ladenburg, a town of Germany, in Baden, seated on the Neckar, 8 m. N. W. of Heidelberg.

Ladoga, a lake of Russia, between the gulf of Finland and the lake Onega. It is 140 m. long and 80 broad. The shores of the lake are flat, but the navigation is very dangerous on account of quicksands. This induced Peter I. to cause a canal to be cut from the S. W. extremity of this lake to the river Neva, by which it has a communication with the gulf of Finland. It was begun in 1718, and finished in 1732; and is 67 m. long, and 70 feet broad.

Ladona, Neio, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, seated on the Volkhof, between the lake and canal of Ladoga. Old Ladoga, an inconsiderable place, is higher up the Volkhof. New Ladoga is 56 m. E. of Petersburg. Long. 31. 42. E., lat. 60. 0. N.

Ladrones, or Marian Islands, islands of the Pacific Ocean, lying between 145. and 148. E. lon., and between 13. and 22. N. lat. They were discovered by Magellan in 1521. He touched first at the island of Guam, where the natives stole some of his goods, which caused him to name these islands the Ladrones, or Islands of Thieves. Besides the other fruits natural to the soil and climate, here is the bread-fruit tree in abundance. The names of the principal islands are Saypan, Tinian, Guam, and Rota.

Ladrones, is also the name of a cluster of small islands in the gulf of Sa, at the southern extremity of China. They are the resort of pirates, who have long set the naval power of China at defiance. In 1805 they had acquired possession of the whole island of Hainan and the southern part of Formosa.

Lagny, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Marne, with a late famous Benedictine abbey; seated on the Marne, 15 m. E. of Paris.

Lagos, a seaport of Portugal, in Algarva, with a castle. Here the English fleet bound to the Mediterranean usually take in fresh water. Off the cape near this town, in 1759, admiral Boscawen defeated a French fleet. It is 130 m. S. S. E. of Lisbon.

Laguna. See Christophe de Laguna, St.

Lagunes of Venice, the marshes or lakes in Italy on which Venice is seated. They communicate with the sea, and are the security of the city. There are about 60 islands in these Lagunes, which together make a bishop's see. Eurano is the most considerable, next to those on which Venice stands.

Lahn, a river of Germany, which rises in Hesse-Cassel, and flowing by Marburg, Wetzlar, and Nassau, falls into the Rhine above Coblentz.

Lahn, a town of the Prussian states, in Silesia, near which is the castle of Lahnhaus. It is seated on the Bober, 10 m. N. N. W. of Hirschberg.

Laholm, a seaport of Sweden, in Holland, with a castle; seated on the Laga, near its entrance into the Categat, 12 m. S. S. E. of Halmstadt. Long. 12. 56. E., lat. 56. 31. N.

Lahore, a province of Hindoostan, bounded on the W. by Candahar, N. by Cashmere, E. by Sirinagur and Delhi, and S. by Moultan. It is often called Panjab, or the country of Five Rivers. It is extensive and fertile; affording, in addition to all the necessaries of life, wine, sugar, and cotton wool. In the tract between the Indus and the Chelum are salt mines, which afford pieces of rock salt, hard enough to be formed into vessels, &c. See Panjab.

Lahore, a city of Hindoostan, capital of the above province, and of the country of the Seiks. It was the residence of the Mahomedan conquerors of Hindoostan, before they had established themselves in the central parts of the country; and owes its chief improvements to Humaion, the father of Acar, who made it his residence during a part of his troublesome reign. The city and its suburbs form a circumference of 7 m. It is surrounded by walls of brick, and adorned with beautiful edifices and gardens. Here are manufactures of cotton cloths and stuffs of all kinds, and of very curious carpets. It is situate on the S. bank of the Rauvec, 210 m. S. of Cashmere.

Lahr, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden, which was only a village in 1780; but is now an active manufacturing town. The manufactures are of woolens, linens, cotton, tobacco, and leather. 18. m. S. S. E. of Strasburg.

Laino, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citra, near a river of the same name, 19 m. W. N. W. of Cassano.

Lai-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Chang-tong, with a convenient harbour on the Yellow Sea. It stands on a promontory, 255 m. S. E. of Pekin.

Laland, an island of Denmark, situated at the entrance into the Baltic, near the coast of Zealand. It is about 60 m. in length by 14 in breadth, and is reckoned the most fertile spot in the Danish dominions. It produces plenty of all sorts of grain, particularly wheat and peas. The climate, however, is considered unhealthy, on account of the damp. Laland forms a part of the bishopric of Funen. Naxkow is the capital.

Laland, an island near the N. coast of the island of Sumatra, in the strait of Malacca. Long. 99. 20. E., lat. 1. 45. N.

Lambach, a town of Austria, on the Traun, 24 m. S. S. W. of Laintz.

Lamballe, a town of France, in the department of Cotes du Nord, with a good trade in cattle, linen, and parchment. 11 m. E. S. E. of St. Briex.

Lambayeque, a town on the coast of Peru, with upwards of 10,000 inhabitants, the generality of whom are poor Spaniards, Mulattoes, and Indians. It is 95 m. N. N. W. of Truxillo. Long. 79. 35. W., lat. 6. 45. S.

Lambesc, a town of France, in the department of Mouths of the Rhone, 12 m. N. of Aix.

Lambeth, a village in Surrey, Eng. on the River Thames, opposite Westminster. Here the archbishop of Canterbury has an ancient palace. By the vast increase of buildings, Lambeth is now joined to the metropolis, in a direction to each of the three bridges. Here are numerous extensive manufactories, and various places of public amusement, particularly the celebrated Vauxhall Gardens.

Lambourn, a town in Berkshire, Eng. seated on a river of the same name, 15 m. S. W. of Abingdon, and 65 W. of London.

Lamego, a town of Portugal, in Beira, and a bishop's see, with a strong citadel, two cathedral churches, and four convents. Here the states assembled to confirm the election of Alfonzo Henriquez, the first king of Portugal, and enacted the fundamental laws, now forgotten. It is seated on the Balsamao, 50 m. E. of Oporto. Long. 7. 30. W., lat. 41. 12. N.

Lameruir, a mountainous ridge in Scotland, which divides the county of Berwick from that of Haddington for above 20 m., and terminates on the W. at Soutra Hill, which is elevated 1,000 feet above the sea level. These hills are bleak and barren, affording but scanty pasture for sheep.

Lamlash, a town of Scotland, on the S. E. coast of the isle of Arran, on a bay of its name, which forms an excellent harbour for vessels of any size. It is sheltered from the sea by a lofty islet, 2 m. long, called Holy Isle.

Lamail, or Lamaille, a river of Vermont, rising in Caledonia county and flowing into Lake Champlain opposite the southern extremity of South Hero.

Lampa, an extensive and mountainous district of Peru, in the intendency of Cuzco. The climate is cold, and it is chiefly valuable for its pastures. The chief town, of the same name, is 90 m. S. of Cuzco. Long. 81. 44. W., lat. 16. 55. S.

Lampangu, a lofty mountain of the Chilian Andes, celebrated for its rich mines. 240 m. from Valparaiso.

Lampedosa, an island in the Mediterranean, between the coast of Tunis and the island of Malta. It is about 21 m. in circuit, and is pleasant and fertile; but it is uninhabited. It has an excellent harbour, sheltered from all winds except the N. Long. 12. 24. E., lat. 35. 40. N.

Lamprey, a river of Rockingham Co. N. H. falling into Great Bay at Durham.

Lampsaco, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, celebrated for its wine; seated on the sea of Marmora, 6 m. from the Dardanelles.

Lamspringe, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Hildersheim, situate at the source of the rivulet Lame, 17 m. S. of Hildersheim.

Lanark, a borough of Scotland, and the county town of Lanarkshire. Since the introduction of the cotton manufacture, many new houses have been built. It is seated on an eminence, near the river Clyde, 22 m. S. E. of Glasgow, and 30 S. W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 43. W., lat. 55. 42. N.

Lanarkshire, a county of Scotland, bounded N. and N. W. by Renfrew, Dumbarton, and Stirling, N. E. by Linlithgow and Edinburgh, E. by Peebles, S. by Dumfries and S. W. by Ayrshire. It is 52 m. in its greatest length, and 33 in its greatest breadth, comprising a superficial extent of 870 sq. m., or 556,800 English acres. On the whole, it is mountainous and heathy, but pleasant and agreeably diversified, exhibiting landscapes intermingled with wood and water, hill and dale. It contains as much curious, romantic, and varied scenery, as any in Scotland; but the falls of the Clyde are particularly interesting to a stranger. The climate is rather moist, and the S. W. wind is the most prevalent. The county is divided into three districts, called the Upper Middle, and Lower wards, and contains 41 parishes. The river Clyde runs through the whole extent of the county, dividing it into two nearly equal parts. It abounds in lead, iron, and coal.

Lancashire, a maritime county of England, bounded S. by Cheshire, E. by Yorkshire, N. by Westmoreland, and W. by the Irish Sea. It is 74 m. from N. to S., and its greatest breadth is 44 m. It contains 1,155,840 acres; is divided into 6 hundreds, and 63 parishes; has 27 market towns, and sends 14 members to parliament. It is a county-palatine, under the title of the Dutchy of Lan caster: the only duchy of England (that of Cornwall excepted) which is not merely titular. This county comprises a variety of soil and face of country; but upon the whole, is one of the least favoured by nature. The hundred of Furness, which is separated from the rest by Morecambe bay, is a wild and rugged region, stored with quantities of iron ore and slate, and covered with a growth of underwood, which is cut in succession, and made into charcoal. The E. part, between the Ribble and the Mersey, comprising the ancient forests of Wyresdale and Bowland, is mountainous and generally barren; but the S. part of the tract between these two rivers is flat. Much of this is a fertile country, though occasionally deformed by black turf bogs, here called mosses, some of which are of large extent, and impassable in wet seasons. In the N. E. part of this division are some lofty hills, the most noted of which is Pendle Hill. The remaining part is varied with hill, dale, and moor. Among its products, is a species of coal, called cannel, highly valuable as fuel, and capable of being manufactured into candlesticks, cups, snuff-boxes, &c. As a commercial and manufacturing county, it is superior to any other in the kingdom. Its principal manufactures are linen, silk, woolen, and cotton goods, shalloons, bays, serges, tapes, hardware, plate-glass, &c. Of the commerce of this county, it may suffice to observe that Liverpool is the second port in the kingdom. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Loyne, Levern, Wyre, Hoeder, Roche, Duddon, Winster, and Ken; and it has two considerable lakes, Winandermere and Coniston-mere. It has numerous canals, and had the honour of exhibiting the first regular one in the kingdom, which was begun by the duke of Bridgewater in 1758.

Lancaster, a borough and the capital of Lancashire. It is seated on the Loyne, or Lune, which forms a port for vessels of moderate burden. The parish church of St. Mary is a fine structure, on the side of a hill, on the summit of which is a noble castle, serving both as the shire-house and the county goal. Here are also two chapels belonging to the establishment, and several dissenting meeting-houses. On the top of the castle is a square tower, called John of Gaunt's Chair, whence there is an extensive prospect. Among the modern improvements are an extensive quay, with large warehouses, and a commodious and elegant bridge over the river, in place of the old one, now in ruins. The canal from Kendal, winds round the E. part of the town, and is conveyed over the river by an aqueduct of 5 arches, each of 70 feet span. Besides numerous other charities, there is a county lunatic asylum, a handsome stone erection on Lancaster Moor, opened in 1816. It has a chapel attached, and the hospital is capable of accommodating 300 patients. 5 m. from this place is Dunald-mill-hole, a cave at the foot of a mountain, into which a large brook runs and passes 2 m. under ground before it appears again: some of its vaults are so high that they resemble the roof of a church, and in other parts so low that they can be passed only by creeping on the hands and feet. Lancaster depends for its support principally on its trade and manufactures and the county business. The merchants trade chiefly to America, the West Indies, and the Baltic. It is noted for the making of mahogany cabinet ware, and has manufactures of sail cloth, cordage, linens, &c. The cotton manufacture is also gaining ground, and ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent. It is 53 m. N. W. of Manchester, and 240 N. N. W. of London.

Lancaster, a handsome town of Pennsylvania, capital of a county of the same name. It is a pleasant and flourishing place, situate in a fertile and well cultivated country, and contains a court house, a jail, two banks, and nine places of worship. A college was founded here in 1757, but the buildings are now appropriated to schools. Here are manufactures of guns and other hardware; and about a mile distant is a large cotton manufactory. The town has considerable trade, which increases with the population of the surrounding country. It is seated near Conestoga Creek, which runs into the Susquehanna, 61 m. W by N. of Philadelphia. Long. 76. 32. W.. lat. 40. 2. N.

Lancaster, a county in the E. District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 76,558, the capital has the same name. Also a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 4,800. Also a District of South Carolina. Pop. 10,361.

It is divided into the three arrondissements of Mont de Marsan, Dax, and St. Sever, and has an area of 3,700 sq. m., with 250,000 inhabitants. The principal rivers are the Adour and the Douze, which traverse it from E. to W. To the S. of these rivers the soil is tolerably fertile, producing wine, fruit, and corn, but on the N. it is perfectly sterile. The forests are extensive; and the climate is generally warm. The exports are wood, turpentine, tar, wax, cattle, wool, and brandy.

Landisburg, p.v. Perry Co. Pa.

Landrecy, a strong town of France, in the department of Nord. It was besieged in vain by prince Eugene, in 1712. In 1794 it was taken by the allies; but shortly after evacuated. Langport, a town in Somersetshire, Eng., situated on a hill, by the river Parrett, which is navigable for barges to the Bristol Channel. 10 m. S. E. of Bridgewater, and 128 W. by S. of London.

Langres, a town of France, department of Upper Marne. Its cutlery wares are in high esteem. It is seated on a mountain, near the source of the Marne, 40 m. N. E. of Dijon. Long. 5. 19. E., lat. 47. 52. N.

Languard Fort, a strong fort of England, situated on a sandy point of land on the Suffolk side of the harbour of Harwich, but within the limits of Essex. At high water it is surrounded by the sea, and becomes an island nearly a m. from the shore. It was erected for the defence of the port of Harwich, and has a garrison, under the command of a governor.

Languedoc, a province of the S. of France, divided at the revolution into the departments of Upper Garonne, Aude, Herault, Gard, Lozere, and Ardeche. It extends on the E. to the Rhone, and W. to the border of Gascony, and comprises a superficial extent of 16,000 sq. m. The Upper or Western Languedoc had Toulouse for its capital; and the Lower or Eastern, Montpellier.

Lanier, a township of Preble Co. Ohio.

Lanjan, or Lanchang, a city, and the capital of the kingdom of Laos, at least of the southern part, to which it gives name. The king's palace is said to be of vast extent, and the houses of the grandees are also large, and highly ornamented. It is situated on the W. side of the river Mecon, 400 m. N. N. W. of Cambodia. Long. 101. 38. E., lat. 18. 30. N.

Lanmeur, a town of France, department of Finisterre, 6 m. N. E. of Morlaix.

Lannitis, a town of France, department of Finisterre 19 m. N. of Brest.

Lanrion, a town of France, department of Cotes du Nord, with a trade in wine, hemp, and butter. In the neighbourhood are mines of iron and silver. It is seated on the Guer, 39 m. W. N. W. of St. Brieux. Long. 3. 27. W., lat. 48. 44. N.

Lao, or Leao, a city of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chan-si. Long. 112. 57 E., lat. 37. 4. N.

Laon, a decayed town of France, capital of the department of Aisne, with a castle. The principal trade consists in corn and wine. It is celebrated for a battle fought under its walls, between the French and allies, in March, 1814. It is seated on a mountain, near the Ardou, 77 m. N. E. of Paris. Long. 3. 43. E., lat. 49. 34. N.

Laos, a kingdom of India beyond the Ganges, extending from 12 to 18. N. lat., and bounded by Laktho, Siam, Cambodia, Tonquin, and Cochinchina, to the last of which it is nominally subject. It is surrounded by mountains covered with forests; but the country is in general flat, and the soil fertile, being watered by numerous rivulets from the mountains and a number of canals from the Mecon, which flows from N. to S. through the whole region. It abounds in rice, fruit, honey, wax, and cotton; and the principal drugs are benzoin and lac. Gold and silver are found in certain places of the river; and it has mines of iron, lead, and tin. It is very thinly inhabited, the greater part of the population consisting of migrating tribes, who wage an almost constant internal warfare. The religion, language, and manners are much the same as in Siam. Lanjan is the capital.

Lapland, a northern region of Europe, now belonging to Russia and Sweden, bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean, E. by the White Sea, S. by Sweden, and W. by Norway and the Atlantic. It was formerly divided into three parts, Russian, Swedish, and Danish (or Norwegian) Lapland. The first, the most dreary region of the whole, consisted of three districts, Bellamoreskoi, Maremanskoi, and Terskoi; but these are now all included in the general appellation of the circle of Kola, which includes also the tract on the E. of the Torneo called Kemi-Lapmark, which was ceded by Sweden in 1809. Swedish Lapland, or Lapland Proper, is subdivided into six provinces, now comprised in the government of Umea. Norwegian Lapland, or Finmark, the most northerly of all, now belongs also to Sweden. The general aspect of Lapland is mountainous. The principal rivers are, the Tornea, which issues from a lake of the same name, and, after a course of 300 m., falls into the gulf of Bothnia; the Tana, and the Alten, both of which fall into the Frozen Ocean. The lakes are numerous, and many of them very extensive. The maritime districts are of uniform and rather mild temperature; but in the interior the winter is intensely cold: in the most northern parts the sun remains below the horizon from the 20th of November to the 10th of January; and the whole country is covered with snow and ice from the beginning of September to the middle of March. In summer the sun continues two months above the horizon; and in the valleys and plains the heat is excessive, favoring the production of numerous insects, particularly moschetoes, which greatly infest the inhabitants. Barley is the common grain, but rye and oats are also cultivated in some places, and a few culinary vegetables are raised. The trees are fir, birch, larch, and small beech, which form vast though not thick forests. Metals and minerals are found in abundance: gold has been found at Suappavara; copper, iron, lead, zinc, and plumbago, are found in various places; and in the S. of Swedish Lapland several mines are wrought. Among the other internal productions of this country are limestone, marble, gypsum, rock-crystal, jasper, amethysts, and garnets

The animals of this country are much the same as those of Norway; but the rein-deer may more properly be said to belong to Lapland. The singular usefulness of this animal in a great measure recompenses the Laplander for the privation of the other comforts of life. The rein-deer in summer live upon leaves and grass, and in winter upon moss, which they dig up from under the snow; yet upon such scanty fare they will perform a journey of inconceivable length. The animal is fixed to a kind of sledge, shaped like a small boat, in which the traveller, well secured from cold, is laced down; and taking the reins, which are fastened to the horns of the animal, in one hand, and a kind of bludgeon, to keep the carriage clear of ice and snow, in the other, he sets out, and continues his journey with incredible speed, the animals choosing the road and directing their course with very little trouble to the traveller. Their milk and cheese are nutritive and pleasant; their flesh is well tasted food, whether fresh or dried; their skin forms excellent clothing both for the bed and body; and their intestines and tendons supply their masters with thread and cordage.

The Laplanders are rather lower in stature than the more southern Europeans. The men are of a swarthy and dark complexion; their hair is black and short, their mouth wide, and their cheek hollow, with a longish pointed chin. The women are in general well made, complaisant, chaste, and extremely nervous. In their manner of life the Laplanders are divided into fishers and mountaineers. The former, in summer, fix their habitations in the neighbourhood of some lake, from which they draw their subsistence, and in winter live in the woods. The latter seek their support on the mountains, and possess herds of rein-deer more or less numerous. They are active and expert in the chase; and the introduction of fire-arms has almost abolished the use of the bow and arrow. Besides looking after the rein-deer, the fishery, and the chase, the men are employed in making canoes, sledges, harness, cups, bowls, &c.; and the women in making nets, drying the fish and meat, milking the deer, making cheese, and tanning hides. Like the Icelanders, they consider their country the finest in the universe. They live in tents composed of several poles or beams of wood, which meet at the top and support each other; the fire-place consists of a few stones, and is always in the middle of the hut, a hole being at the top for the smoke to pass. When travelling, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather, they throw a covering over the head, neck, and shoulders, leaving only a small opening, through which they see and breathe. In their dress they use no kind of linen. The men wear close breeches, reaching down to their shoes, which are made of untanned leather, pointed and turned up before. Their doublet is made to fit their shape; it is open at the breast, and over it they wear a close coat, with narrow sleeves, the skirts of which reach down to the knees and are fastened round them by a leathern girdle, ornamented with plates of tin and brass. To this girdle they tie their knives instruments for making fire, pipes, and other smoking apparatus. The dress of the women is the same as that of the men, with the exception of a few ornamental peculiarities. All the Swedish and Norwegian, as well as the greater number of the Russian Laplanders, bear the name of Christians; but their religion is full of superstition, and a compound of Christian and Pagan ceremonies. Their language has an affinity with the Finnish, but is greatly intermixed with others. They trade with the Swedes and Norwegians, whom they supply with the skins and furs of quadrupeds, such as ermines, sables, martens, squirrels, foxes of various colors, bears, lynxes, and wolves; and receive in return meal, cloth, spirituous liquors, tobacco, and various utensils.

Laprairie, a Seignory of Huntingdon Co. L. C. on the St. Lawrence opposite Montreal.

Lar, a town of Persia, capital of Laristan, with a castle on a rock, chiefly celebrated for the manufacture of muskets and cloth. It was once a magnificent city, but is now in ruins. Some handsome houses still remain, and the bazar is said to be the noblest structure of the kind in Persia. Long. 43. 40. E., lat. 27. 30. N.

Larashtra, or Laraisch, a strong town in the kingdom of Pez, with a castle and a good harbour. Here are magazines for the refitting of vessels, but no docks for building. It is seated near the mouth of the Lucos, 46 m. S. by W. of Tangier.

Laredo, a town of Spain, in Biscay, with a good harbour, 30 m. W. N. W. of Bilbao.

Largo, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on a bay of the same name, at the opening of the frith of Forth, which is a safe roadstead for ships of all descriptions. The town has a manufacture of linen and checks. 8 m. S. S. W. of St. Andrew.

Largs, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, with a small harbour on the frith of Clyde. It is memorable for the defeat of the Norwegians, in their last invasion of this county, in 1263. It is 15 m. N. W. of Irvine.

Larino, a town of Naples, in the Molise, 25 m. E. N. E. of Molise.

Larissa, a town of Greece, capital of Thessaly and an archbishop's see, with a palace, and some handsome mosques. It was famous as the residence of Achilles, and retains its former name. The inhabitants, estimated at 25,000, carry on a large trade. It is seated on the Peneus, 75 m. S. by W. of Salonica. Long. 22. 47. E., lat. 39. 48. N.

Laristan, a small province of Persia, extending along the northern shore of the Persian Gulf. The soil is so impregnated with acrid substances, and so destitute of water, that it is the most unproductive province of the kingdom. Those who inhabit the coast are addicted to piracy, and live under their own sheiks, paying the king only a trifling tribute. Lar is the capital.

Larne, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 8 m. N. of Carrickfergus.

Larnica, a town of Cyprus, the second in the island, and the emporium of its commerce, the bay on which it is situated forming one of the best roadsteads in the island. It has no good water but is supplied from a distance by an aqueduct. Long. 33. 45. E. lat. 34. 56. N.

Lurry Bundar, a town of Hindoostan, on the N. branch of the Indus, called the Pitta. 56 m. W. of Tatta. Long. 66. 42. E. lat. 24. 43. N.

Larta. See Arta.

Larigen, or Laurwigen, a sea-port of Norway, in the bishopric of Christiania. It is a place of considerable trade, and has productive iron works. It stands at the conflux of two rivers, near the sea, 74 m. S. S. W. of Christiania.

La Salle, a seignory of Huntingdon Co. L. C. 12 m. S. Montreal.

Lasenbourg, a town of Savoy, on the river Arc, at the foot of Mount Cenis, the passage of which is the principal support of the inhabitants. The sun is hidden from the inhabitants of this town, by the mountains, during two months in the year. It is 20 m. N. N. W. of Susa.

Lassa, or Lahassa, a city of Asia, capital of Great Thibet. It is not large, but the houses are spacious and built of stone. About 7 m. to the E. of the city, is the mountain of Putala, on the summit of which is the palace of the grand Lama, the high priest of Thibet, whose authority is as great over almost all the regions of Tartary and Thibet as that of the pope was formerly over Europe. Lassa is seated on a spacious plain, on a river that flows S. into the Sanpoo, 680 m. N. N. E. of Calcutta. Long. 91. 25. E., lat. 29. 30. N.

Lassahr, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania, on a lake of the same name, 38 m. S. S. E. of Stralsund.

Leacock, p.t. Lancaster Co. Pa. 56 m. W. Philadelphia.

Lead mines. This name is given to a tract of country on the Upper Mississippi which contains inexhaustible quantities of lead ore. The tract is more than 200 m. in extent. The chief mines are in the neighbourhood of Galena in the North Western part of Illinois. Here are the richest lead mines hitherto discovered on the globe. This portion of country lies principally north of Rock river and south of the Wisconsin. Dubuque s, and other rich mines, are west of the Mississippi. Native copper, in large quantities, exists in this region, especially at the mouth of Plum creek and on the Peekatonokee. Plum creek is a small creek, of Illinois about 40 miles above Rock river, which runs into the Mississippi. Peekatonokee is a branch of Rock river. For many years the Indians, and some of the French hunters and traders, had been accustomed to dig lead in these regions. They never penetrated much below the surface, but obtained considerable quantities of the ore, which they sold to the traders. In 1823, the late Col. James Johnson, of Great Crossings, Ky. obtained a lease of the United States Government, and made arrangements to prosecute the business of smelting, with considerable force, which he did the following season. This attracted the attention of enterprising men in Illinois, Missouri, and other States. Some went on in 1826, more followed in 1827, and in 1828 the country was almost literally filled with miners, smelters, merchants, speculators, &c. Such was the crowd of adventurers in 1829, in this hitherto almost unknown and desolate region, that the lead business was greatly overdone, and the market for awhile nearly destroyed. Fortunes were made almost upon a turn of the spade, and lost with equal facility. The business is now reviving, and probably will be prosecuted in future more in proportion to the demand for lead. The following table shows the amount of lead made annually at these diggings, from 1821, to Sept. 30, 1830. Pounds of lead made from 1821, to

The government formerly received ten per cent, in lead, for rent. It is now reduced to six per cent. These lands will soon be surveyed, and probably sold, which will add greatly to the stability and prosperity of the mining business.

Leadhills, a village of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, situate amid mountains, in which are rich mines of lead. Here is a public library, fitted up by the miners, who work only eight hours in a day, and employ much of their spare time in reading. It is supposed to be the highest inhabited place in Britain, being about 2,000 feet above the level of the sea. It is situate on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries, 18 m. S. of Lanark, and 44 S. of Glasgow.

Leadville, p.v. Randolph Co. Pa.

Leakesville, p.v. Rockingham Co. N. C. 105 m. N. W. Raleigh.

Leamington Priors, a town in Warwickshire, Eng. Here are some saline springs, with warm and cold baths, a pump-room, and other accommodations for genteel company. It is seated on the river Leam, near its confluence with the Avon, 2 m. E. of Warwick and 89 N. W. of London.

Leao-tong. See Chen-yang.

Leasburg, p.v. Caswell Co. N. C. 84 m. N. W. Raleigh.

Leatherhead, a town in Surrey, Eng. Here is a bridge of 14 arches over the river Mole, which a little above is said to make its re-appearance above ground. 18 m. S. S. W. of London.

Leathes-water, or Withburn, a fine lake in Cumberland, Eng. lying S. E. of Keswick. It is narrow and irregular, about 4 m. in length, skirting the foot of Helvellyn, and receiving numerous torrents from that huge mountain. The singular beauty of this lake is its being almost intersected in the middle by two peninsulas, which are joined by a neat wooden bridge. Its outlet at the N. end joins the river Greeta, which runs into the Derwent below Keswick.

Leavenworth, p.v. Crawford Co. Indiana.

Lebu, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania, on a river of the same name, which, after forming a lake 15 m. in circumference, enters the Baltic Sea. 16 m. N. N. W. of Luenburg.

Pa. 25 m. N. E. Harrisburg. Also towns and villages in Russell Co. Va. Washington Co. Geo., Warren, Meigs, and Ashtabula Cos. Ohio. Washington Co. Ken., Wilson Co. Tenn. and St. Clair Co. Illinois.

Lebanon, a county of the E. District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 20,546. Lebanon is the capital.

Lebida, a sea-port of Africa, in the territory of Tripoli, with a good harbour and an old castle. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 30 m. S. E. of Tripoli.

Lebriza, or Lebrija, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle, seated in a territory abounding in olive-trees that produce the best oil in Spain, 20 m. S. by W. of Seville.

Lebus, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, seated on the Oder, 5 m. N. of Frankfort.

Lecassello, a town in the state of Genoa, 22 m. N. E. of Genoa.

Leece, a city of Naples, in Otranto, and a bishop's see. It is the residence of the governor of the province, which by some is called Leece instead of Otranto. 17 m. N. W. of Otranto, and 195 E. S. E. of Naples. Long. 18. 20. E., lat. 40. 36. N.

Lecco, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Milanese, with several flourishing manufactures. It is seated on the E. branch of the lake Como, 15 m. E. N. E. of Como. Long. 9. 23. E., lat. 45. 3. N.

Lech, a river of the Bavarian states, which rises in Tyrol, divides Suabia from Bavaria, and enters the Danube below Donawert.

Lechlade, or Letchlade, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. A canal from the Severn joins the Thames near this town, and the traffic here, on both, is considerable in cheese, corn, and coal. It is seated at the confluence of the Lech with the Thames, 28 m. E. by S. of Gloucester, and 76 W. by N. of London.

Lechnitz, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the province of Oppeln. Near it is the convent of St. Annenburg, much resorted to by pilgrims. It is seated near the Oder, 17 m. S. S. E. of Oppeln.

Leck, a river of Netherlands, which branches off from the Rhine at Deurstede, and enters the Maese, 10 m. E. of Rotterdam.

Lectoure, a strong town of France, department of Gers, with manufactures of leather, and some trade in corn and wine. It is situate on a mountain, near the river Gers, 16 m. N. of Auch. Long. 0. 37. E., lat. 43. 56. N.

Leabury, a town in Herefordshire Eng. with a considerable manufacture of ropes and sacking. The navigable canal from Gloucester to Hereford passes by this town, which is situate near the S. extremity of the Malvern Hills. 16 m. E. of Hereford, and 129 W. N. W. of London.

Ledesma, a small but strong town of Spain, in Leon, seated on the 'Tormes, 20 m. S. W. of Salamanca.

Lee, a river of Ireland, which rises on the confines of Kerry, flows E. to Cork, and falls into Cork Harbour.

Lee, a county of the W. District of Virginia. Pop. 6,461. Jonesville is the capital. Also a township of Strafford Co. N. H. Pop. 1,009. p.t. Berkshire Co. Mass. 140 m. W. Boston. Pop. 1,825. p.t. Oneida Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,514. township in Athens Co. Ohio.

Leeds, a flourishing town in West Yorkshire, Eng. It stands on the river Aire, over which is a stately stone bridge. It is the principal of the clothing towns in Yorkshire, and the mart for the colored and white broad cloths, of which vast quantities are sold in its two cloth halls, within the space of an hour, without the least confusion. Leeds has flourishing manufactures of carpets; also some mills for the cutting of tobacco, and several potteries. In the neighbourhood are numerous collieries, and great quantities of coal are sent to York and Hull. 3 m. N. N. W. of the town, on the river Aire, stands the remains of that venerable pile, Kirkstall Abbey, embowered in groves of oak. A canal passes hence to Liverpool, by which and the river this town has a communication with the Irish Sea and the German Ocean. 24 m. S. W. of York, and 189 N. W. of London. Long. 1. 34. W., lat. 53. 48. N.

Leeds, a parish in Kent, Eng. which had formerly a castle and a priory: some ruins of the latter still remain. 5 m. S. W. of Maidstone and 40 from London.

Leeds, p.t. Kennebec Co. Me. Pop. 1,685. Also a village in Gloucester Co. N. J. on the coast.

Leedsto n, p.v. Westmoreland Co. Va. 105 m. W. Washington.

Leefogo, the most fertile of the Haapee islands, in the South Pacific. It is not above 7 m. in length, and only 2 or 3 in breadth, but is superior in many respects to Annamooka. The inhabitants are treacherous, and have frequently attempted to seize European vessels. Long. 155. 49. E., lat. 19. 49. S.

Leek, a town in Staffordshire, Eng. It has a brisk trade, and manufactures of bandanna and other handkerchiefs, ribands, twist, and buttons. It is seated on the Churnet, 21 m. N. of Stafford and 154 N. N. W. of London.

Leer, or Lehr, a town of Hanover, in East Friesland, on the river Leda, which soon after joins the Ems. 14 m. S. E. of Emden.

Leerdam, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland, seated on the Linghe, 11 m. S. of Utrecht.

Leerort, a fortress of Hanover, in East Friesland, seated at the conflux of the Leda with the Ems, 10 m. E. by S. of Emden.

Leers, or Liers, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, near which the allies were defeated by the French in 1746. 4 m. N. of Liege.

Leersburg, p.t. Loudon Co. Va. 46 m. N. W. Alexandria, also towns in Harrison Co. Ken., Washington Co. Ten., Tuscarawas, Champaign and Highland Cos. Ohio.

Leeville, p.v. Schoharie Co. N. Y., p.v. Campbell Co. Va., p.v. Lexington Dis. S. C., p.v. Lawrence Co. Indiana.

Leetakoo, or Lattakoo, a town of Southern Africa. The old town of this name was until lately the most remote place known in the Botswana country. The inhabitants, when visited by Mr. Campbell and others in 1813, appeared to have made considerable progress in the arts and civilization. Soon after they removed to a more suitable situation, several miles distant, in a southern direction, and founded New Leetakoo. On his return, in 1820, he found this new town occupied by about 8,000 persons, collected from various tribes. The women perform most of the agricultural labor; while the men milk the cows, make the clothes, and go to war. New Leetakoo is 800 m. N. E. of Cape Town.

Leetown, p.v. Jefferson Co. Va.

Leeuwce, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in South Brabant. It is seated in a morass on the river Geete, 12 m. E. of Louvain.

Leeward Islands, such of the Carribee Islands in the West Indies, as commence at Porto Rico, and extend to Dominica.

Leffoga. See Leefogo.

Leghorn, a strong city of Italy in the grand duchy of Tuscany, and a bishop's see. It has a good harbour, and is the greatest commercial depot of Italy. The Jews, who are numerous and rich, have a handsome synagogue and schools; the Greeks and Armenians have churches of their own; and no religion is disturbed. The inhabitants are computed at 66,000. The town is supplied with excellent water brought from the mountains of Colognole by means of a long and expensive aqueduct, constructed by government. The streets are wide and straight, and almost all the houses of the same height. There are so many canals, that some have given it the title of New Venice. At a little distance is a light-house, on a small island. The trade consists of foreign goods, as cotton, sugar, cocoa, spices, sulphur, and alum; and in home productions, as essences, oils, wine, straw hats, cloth, juniper berries, oranges, lambs' and goats' skins, and coral. In 1741 this city suffered greatly by an earthquake. The neighbouring marshes have been rendered fit for culture by means of canals, which have also been useful in dissipating the noxious effluvia: but the air is still far from healthy. 140 m. N. W. of Rome, and 46 W. of Florence. Long. 16. 17. E., lat. 43. 33. N.

Legnano, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Veronese, with a fortress regularly constructed. The town is populous, and carries on a considerable trade, particularly in grain, which is greatly facilitated by means of a canal from the Adige to the Po. It is seated on the Adige, 22 m. S. E. of Verona.

Leibnitz, a town of the Austrian empire, in Lower Styria, seated on the Sulm, 16 m. S. of Gnatz.

Lehigh, a river of Pennsylvania running into the Delaware from the N. W. In this neighbourhood are large coal mines, for an account of which see Pennsylvania.

Lehigh, a county of the E. District of Pennsylvania lying upon the river above mentioned. Pop. 22,266. Allentown is the capital.

Leighton, a village of Northampton Co Pa on the Lehigh, 36 m. N. W. Easton.

Leicester, a borough and the capital of Leices tershire, Eng. In the civil wars the walls were in a great measure demolished; the castle was also dismantled, the hall and kitchen being the only parts that are left entire. It has 6 churches, 18 meeting-houses for the different denominations of dissenters, several hospitals, a free school and three charity schools. In 1821 an act was passed for lighting the town with gas, which has since been carried into effect. The principal manufacture is that of stockings, of which several years ago the value amounted to £60,000 annually, and it has of late much increased. A canal passes hence by Loughborough to the river Trent. At a parliament held here, in the reign of Henry V., the first law was made for the burning of heretics. In the meadows near the town are the ruins of an abbey, in which Cardinal Wolsey died. It is seated on the Soar, 23 m. S. by E. of Derby, and 96 N. N. W. of London. Long. 1. 8. W., lat. 52. 38. N.

Leicestershire, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, E. by the counties of Lincoln and Rutland, S. by Northamptonshire, and W. by Warwickshire and Staffordshire. It is about 45 m. long and 30 broad, contains 51,456 statute acres, is divided into six hundreds and 196 parishes, has 12 market towns, and sends four members to parliament. The climate is temperate and the county is well watered. The chief rivers are the Avon, Soar, Swift, Wreke, Anker, and Welland; and it has three distinct lines of canal navigation. The soil, in general, affords great quantities of rich grazing land and is peculiarly fitted for the culture of beans. Toward the N. W., the Bardon-Hills rise to a great height; and in their neighbourhood is Sherwood Forest, a rough and open tract; further to the N. W. are valuable coal mines. The manufacture of stockings, the principal one in the county, is very considerable; but it may be considered rather an agricultural than a manufacturing county. It is famous for its breed of large black cart horses, numbers of which are continually sent to London, and for its fine neat cattle and sheep; the latter, owing to the great care paid to crossing the breed and other modes of improvement, have been brought to an astonishing degree of excellence. More than half the land is constantly in pasture, and most of the rest maintained in tillage is also rendered subservient to the rearing of cattle. The principal object of the graziers here is to fatten their cattle for the butcher, but the dairy is also in some places attended to; and great quantities of cheese are annually exported. The Stilton cheese is made in this county, near Melton Mowbray.

Leicester, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 46 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 1,782. Here is a manufactory of wool cards. Also a township of Livingston Co. N. Y. on the Genesee. Pop. 2,042. Also a township of Addison Co. Vt. on Otter Creek. 42 m. N. W. Windsor. Pop. 638.

Leigh, a town in Lancashire, Eng. with considerable manufactures, particularly of fine jeans, in imitation of those of India, fustians, and other cotton articles; and a great traffic by its canal navigation. 12 m. W. of Manchester, and 198 N. W. of London.

Leigh, a small sea-port in Essex, Eng. opposite the E. extremity of Canvey Island. It is noted for oysters, and has a good road for shipping. 18 m. S. S. E. of Chelmsford, and 39 E. of London.

Leigh, a parish of England, in Worcestershire 41-2 m. W. by S. of Worcester.

Leighlin, Old, a decayed town of Ireland, in the county of Carlow, 9 m. N. E. of Kilkenny.

Leighlin Bridge, a village of Ireland, in the county of Carlow, with the ruins of an ancient abbey, and also of a strong castle; seated on the river Barrow, 7 m. S. of Carlow.

Leighton Buzzard, a town in Bedfordshire, Eng. The trade consists in corn, cattle, lace, platted straw, &c. About half a m. distant are the remains of a Roman camp. It is seated on the Ouse, 18 m. S. of Bedford and 41 N. W. of London.

Lein, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, 4 m. N. E. of Welburg.

Leiningen, a small town of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, 30 m. S. of Mentz.

Leinster, a province of Ireland, 104 m. long and 56 broad; bounded on the E. and S. by St. George's Channel. W. by Connaught and Munster and N. by Ulster. It contains the counties of Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's county, Longford, Lough, East Meath, West Meath, Wexford, and Wicklow. Dublin is the capital. The principal rivers are the Boyne, the Barrow, the Liffey, the Noire, and the May.

Leipa, a town of Bohemia, with manufactures of porcelain, glass, fine cloth, and cotton. 47 m. S. E. of Dresden.

Leipheim, a town of Bavaria, on the S. bank of the Danube, 12 m. N. E. of Ulm.

Leipnie, a walled town of Moravia, near the river Beczwa, 14 m. E. S. E. of Olumtz.

Leipzig, Circle of, a province of the kingdom of Saxony, bounded E. by the circle of Meissen, S. by that of the Erzgebirge and the principality of Altenburg, and W. and N. by the Prussian part of Saxony. It comprises 14 bailiwicks, and is the seat of considerable manufactures.

Leipzig, a city of Saxony, in the circle of Meissen, with a famous university, and a strong citadel, called Pleyssenburg. It carries on a considerable trade; and has three great fairs every year, which last a fortnight each. The number of inhabitants exceeds 30,000; and the principal manufactures are silk, gold, and silver stuffs, linen and cotton printing, leather, and paper. There are six handsome colleges belonging to the university, besides the private colleges; and the exchange is a fine structure. Leipzig was taken by the Prussians in 1745 and 1756. The Austrians, in 1756, besieged it in vain; they took it two years after, but were soon obliged to give it up. Leipzig is celebrated for two of the greatest battles recorded in history having been fought in its vicinity, between the French and allied armies, on the 16th and 18th of October, 1813, which were followed by the capture of the town and the rear-guard of the French army, on the following morning, and also the king of Saxony and his family, who were made prisoners. It is seated in a plain, on the river Pleyssse, 64 m. W. N. W. of Dresden, 90 S. W. of Berlin, and 180 N. E. of Frankfort on the Maine. Long. 12. 21. E., lat. 51. 19. N.

Leiria, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, and a bishop's see, with an ancient castle on an eminence. 77 m. N. N. E. of Lisbon. Long. 8. 34. W., lat. 39. 48. N.

Leisnig, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, with manufactures of cloth, lace, stockings, &c. It is seated on the Mulda, 24 m. E. S. E. of Leipzig and 32 N. W. of Dresden.

Leith, a sea-port of Scotland, on the frith of Forth, 2 m. N. N. E. of Edinburgh, of which it is the port. It is situate at the mouth of the river

Leith, which forms the harbour, and divides the town into N. and S. Leith, which communicate by two draw-bridges. The harbour is secured by a noble stone pier, and it is accommodated with wet and dry docks and other conveniences for ship-building, which is carried on to a considerable extent. Here are also manufactures of ropes, canvas, carpets, glass, shoes, leather, soap, and candles, and several iron forges. There are three churches, an episcopal chapel, three meeting-houses, a magnificent banking-house, an hospital for disabled seaman, rebuilt in 1817, and numerous charities. A little to the E. of the town are the baths, which are constructed upon a grand scale, and in a style of great elegance. The harbour is defended by a martello tower and to the W. of the citadel is a battery for the protection of the shipping. The commerce of Leith is very considerable; and the vessels employed in the London trade are, in general, of a large size; but the largest ships are those employed in the Greenland whale fishery. To foreign parts are exported lead, glass ware, linen, woolen stuffs, and a variety of other goods. Long. 2. 56. W., lat. 55. 54. N.

Leitmeritz. See Leutmeritz.

Leitomischel. See Leutnischel.

Leitrim, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, bounded on the N. by Donegal Bay, N. E. by Fermanagh, E. by Cavan, S. E. by Longford, S. W. by Roscommon, and W. by Sligo. Its greatest length is about 54 English m., and its maximum breadth 20. It contains 21 parishes, and an area of 407,260 English acres. The northern parts are mountainous and uncultivated but they abound with inexhaustible veins of lead, iron, and copper ore, and have likewise some coal mines. The S. is level and fertile. The county is traversed by the river Shannon, abounds with small lakes and rivers, has some productive iron-works, and feeds great herds of cattle. It returns two members to the imperial parliament. Carrick is the capital.

Leitrim, a village of Ireland, from which the preceding county has its name, and formerly a place of some note. It is seated on the Shannon, 4 m. N. of Carrick, and 82 W. N. W. of Dublin.

Leinslip, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare. It has a noble castle with large gardens, on one side of which is a fine waterfall, called the Salmon Leap. Near it is the ruins of the church and castle of Confy. It is seated on the Liffey, 8 m. W. of Dublin.

Lemberg, or Leopold, a town of Austrian Poland, formerly the capital of Red Russia, and now of Galicia and Ladomeria. It is well fortified, and defended by two citadels, one of which is on an eminence without the city. The cathedral, churches, and public buildings are magnificent; and the inhabitants, computed at 44,000, of whom 14,000 are Jews, carry on a considerable trade. It is the see of a Roman Catholic archbishop, and has also an Armenian and Russian bishop. It is seated on the Pelton, 72 m. S. S. E. of Chelm, and 159 E. of Cracow. Long. 24. 26. E., lat. 49. 51. N.

Lévroux, a town of France, department of Indre, 11 m. N. of Chateauroux.

Levarden, a strong town of the Netherlands, capital of Friesland. It has several canals in the streets, which, being continued to the sea, and to the most considerable towns in the province, are a great assistance to its trade. Many of the buildings, as well public as private, are magnificent. It is seated on the Ee, 28 m. W. of Groningen. Long. 5. 48. E., lat. 53. 13. N.

Leventz, a town of Hungary, on a river of the same name, 25 m. N. E. of Gran.

Leves, a borough in Sussex, Eng. It had formerly 12 parish churches, now reduced to six, including those of the adjoining villages of Southover and Cliff. It is a very ancient place, and vestiges of its walls and castle, and of an extensive priory, still remain. Here are 7 meeting-houses for dissenters; also a handsome county-hall, a free grammar school, a good charity school, several charitable institutions, and a theatre. On a hill, about a mile from the town, is the race ground, which is accounted one of the best in England. Near this town was fought a battle in 1263, when Henry III. and his son (afterward Edward I.) were made prisoners by the earl of Leicester. Lewes is situated at the edge of the South Downs, 8 m. N. E. of Brighton, and 49 S. of London. Long. 0. 2. E., lat. 50. 55. N.

Lewis, one of the most considerable of the Western Islands of Scotland, parted by two arms of the sea into two divisions, the southern of which is called Harris, and the northern Lewis: the former is annexed to the county of Inverness, but Lewis belongs to Ross-shire. It is about 60 m. in length from N. to S., and from 10 to 15 in breadth. The country in general is wild, bleak, bare of wood, and little fitted for cultivation. Bear, oats, peas, rye, and potatoes, are the products of the soil. The hills are covered with heath, which affords shelter for various sorts of game. The lake and streams abound with salmon, large red trout, &c., and there are good fisheries on the W. coast, which is annually visited by millions of herrings. The inhabitants amount to 13,942, whose principal employment is the rearing of sheep and black cattle, and the fishery. There are several small villages, but Stornaway is the only town. The promontory at the N. extremity of the island is called the Butt of Lewis. Long. 6. 32. E., lat. 58. 33. N.

Lewis, a county of New York. Pop. 14,958. Martinsburg is the capital. A county of the W. District of Virginia. Pop. 6,241. Weston is the capital. A county of Kentucky on the Ohio. Pop. 5,206. Clarkesburg is the capital.

Lewisburg, p.t. Green Brier Co. Va. 250 m. W. Richmond, p.v. Union Co. Pa. on the Susquehanna, 7 m. above Northumberland. p.v. Mühlenburg Co. Ken. on Green River.

Lewisham, a village in Kent, Eng. which from its pleasant situation, and its proximity to the metropolis, has become the residence of several opulent citizens, who have many elegant houses here. 5 m. E. of London.

Lewiston, p.t. Lincoln Co. Me. at the falls of the Androscoggin, 30 m. W. Wiscasset. Pop. 1,549. Also a p.t. Niagara Co. N. Y. on Niagara river opposite Queenstown, at the head of ship navigation from Lake Ontario. Pop. 1,523. p.t. Montgomery Co. Missouri.

Lewistown, p.t. Sussex Co. Del. on Delaware Bay, 3 m. within Cape Henlopen. This town was bombarded by the British fleet during the late war, but without any effect. Salt is made here by solar evaporation. Also a p.v. Mifflin Co. Pa. on the Juniata, 55 m. N. W. Harrisburg.

Lewisville, p.v. Brunswick Co. Va. 70 m. S. Richmond. p.v. Chester Dis. S. C. 72 m. N. Columbia. p.v. Blount Co. Tenn. 176 m. E. Murfreesborough.

Lexington, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 11 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 1,541. This town will be ever memorable in American history, as the spot where the first blood was shed in the revolutionary conflict. This took place on the 19th April 1775. A monument has been erected on the green at Lexington in commemoration of the event.

Lexington, a town of Kentucky, chief of Fayette county, and formerly the capital of the state. It has six edifices for public worship, a university, and a court-house. The trade is considerable, and the manufactures numerous and flourishing. Pop. 6,104. Near this town are to be seen curious sepulchres, full of human skeletons, which are fabricated in a method totally different from that now practised by the Indians. In the neighbourhood are the remains of two ancient fortifications, with ditches and bastions; one containing about six acres of land, and the other nearly three. Pieces of earthen vessels, a manufacture with which the Indians were never acquainted, have also been ploughed up near Lexington. These, with the fortifications and the sepulchres, have been urged as an argument that this country was formerly inhabited by a people farther advanced in the arts of life than the present Indians. Lexington stands in a fine tract of country, on the head waters of Elkhorn River, 24 m. E. S. E. of Frankfort, the present capital. Long. 84. 55. W. lat. 33. 15. N. Transylvania University at this place was founded in 1793. It has 6 instructors and 93 students. Its libraries have 3,850 volumes. It has 2 vacations in spring and autumn. Commencement is in September.

Lexington, p.t. Greene Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,248. p.t. Henderson Co. Tenn., Rowan Co. N. C., Ogleshorpe Co. Geo., Erie Co. Pa., Richland and Stark Co., Ohio. Scott Cos. Indiana and Boone Co. Missouri.

Lexington, a town of Virginia, chief of Rockbridge county, situate near the N. branch of James River, 150 m. W. by N. of Richmond. Washington College at this place was founded in 1812. It has 23 students; the library is small. It has 2 vacations in autumn and winter. Commencement is in April.

Lexington, a District of South Carolina. Pop. 9,076.

Leyden, a city of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, seated on the ancient bed of the Rhine, which here almost expires in a number of small channels. It is famous for the long siege it sustained in 1574, against the Spaniards, during which 6,000 of the inhabitants died of famine and pestilence. In honour of this siege a university was founded in 1575, celebrated for its colleges, botanical garden, anatomical theatre, astronomical observatory, cabinet of natural history, and valuable library: in 1807 it was almost destroyed by the blowing up of a vessel loaded with gunpowder. The principal church is a superb structure, and the old castle, town-house, custom-house and house for orphans, deserve notice. Here are excellent manufactures of soap and indigo; and the vicinity produces the best Dutch butter and cheese. It stands on 50 islands, and has 145 bridges, the greatest part built of freestone. The inhabitants are estimated at 50,000. Leyden is 4 m. E. of the German Ocean, and 20 S. W. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 28. E., lat. 52. 8. N.

Leyden, a town of Franklin Co. Mass. 117 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 796. Also a p.t. Lewis Co. N. Y. 33 m. N. Utica. Pop. 1,502.

Leypa, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutmeritz, seated on the Pubietz, 23 m. E. N. E. of Leutmeritz.

Leyta, one of the Philippines, about 40 leagues in length, and 95 in circumference. Its soil on the E. side, is very fertile: but the high mountains that intersect it from E. to W. occasion so great an alteration in the climate, that, when the inhabitants of one part of the island reap, the others sow, and they have two plentiful harvests in the year, to which the rivers descending from the mountains not a little contribute. The island contains 9,000 inhabitants, who pay tribute in rice, wax, &c. Long. 124. 40. E., lat. 10. 50. N.

Liam-po. See Ming-po.

Libanus, or Lebanon, a lofty mountain of Syria, extending from the vicinity of Tripoli to the borders of Palestine, about 30 or 40 m. from the sea. Its height is very considerable, the summit is covered with snow a great part of the year. Few specimens now remain of those magnificent cedars for which it was once so celebrated. Near Damascus there are immense caverns, one of which can contain 4,000 men. To the E. is a parallel chain called Antilibanus.

Libatta, a town of Guinea, in the country of Gabon, seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, 120 m. N. W. of Sette. Long. 8. 54. E., lat. 0. 58 S.

Libau, a town of Courland, on the Baltic, with a harbour for small ships. The chief articles of commerce are hemp and linseed. It is seated on a peninsula, 50 m. N. of Memel, and 80 W. of Mittau. Long. 21. 25. E., lat. 56. 30. N.

Liberia, a district on the coast of Africa so named from its being colonized by liberated captives and free people of colour. Under the auspices of a colonization society, in America, the first settlers proceeded to Africa in 1822. Cape Mesurado, in lat. 6. 18. N., was purchased of the natives; the plan of a town, afterwards called Monrovia, was formed; and as fresh emigrants arrived they purchased additional tracts of country. The greater part of the early settlers from America were men of eminent piety, and their just, humane, and benevolent policy, has given them an uncommon influence over the native tribes. In 1827 this sable community had risen completely above the pressure of urgent necessities. Monrovia was rapidly improving in accommodations and increasing in magnitude, and several fresh towns were already springing up. The soil is extremely fertile: the natives of the country, without tools, without skill, and with little labour, raising more grain and vegetables than they can consume and often more than they can sell. Cattle, swine, fowls, ducks, goats, and sheep, thrive without feeding, and require no other care than to keep them from straying. Cotton, coffee, indigo, and sugar-cane, are all the spontaneous growth of the forests, and may be cultivated at pleasure, to any extent, by such as are disposed. The same may be said of rice, Indian corn, Guinea corn, millet, and too many species of fruits and vegetables to be enumerated. Add to all this that winter is here unknown, the hills and plains are covered with perpetual verdure, and nature is constantly pouring her treasures, all the year round, into the laps of the industrious. The trade and commerce extend to the coast, to the interior parts of the continent, and to foreign vessels, and is already valuable and fast increasing. The chief exports are rice, palm oil, ivory, tortoise shell, dyewoods, gold, hides, wax, and a small amount of coffee. The imports consist of the products and manufactures of the four quarters of the world. The harbour is seldom clear of European and American shipping; and the bustle and thronging of the streets show something already of the activity of the smaller seaports of the United States. Mechanics of nearly every trade are carrying on their various occupations, and not a child or youth in the colony but is provided with an appropriate school. The most recent accounts from Liberia are exceedingly encouraging as to the health, commerce, and prosperity of the colony. Fresh emigrants are constantly arriving, who are immediately supplied with employment, or if sick, removed to a spacious infirmary. The piety of the first settlers has continued to spread, and the standard of morals consequently remains high. The Sabbath is carefully regarded, and Sunday schools have been established for the benefit of the native children. The cheerful abodes of civilization and happiness—the flourishing settlements—the sound of Christian instruction, and scenes of Christian worship, which are heard and seen in this land of brooding pagan darkness—a thousand contented freemen, united in founding a new Christian empire, happy themselves, and the instrument of happiness to others—while they refresh the hearts cannot fail to encourage the brightest anticipations of Christian Philanthropists.

Liberty, a county in the E. part of Georgia, with 7,234 inhabitants; the chief town is Riceborough.

Liberty, a township of Sullivan Co. N. Y. on the Delaware. Pop. 1,277. Also towns and village in Adams and Tioga Cos. Pa., Bedford Co. Va., Trumbull, Delaware, Fairfield, Highland Clinton, Crawford, Butler, Jefferson and Montgomery Cos. Ohio, Union Co. Indiana, Casey Co. Ken., Marion and Smith Cos. Ten., and Amite Co. Mississippi.

Liege, a province of the Netherlands, bounded by the grand duchy of Luxemburg, the Belgic provinces of Namur, S. Brabant, and Limburg and the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine. It is fertile in corn and fruits and contains mines of iron, lead, and coal, besides quarries of marble.

Liege, a large, ancient, and strong city of the Netherlands, capital of the above province. Here the river Meuse is divided into three branches, which after passing through the city, under several bridges, unite again. Liege is 4 m. in circumference, and has 16 gates: it has also 10 large suburbs, in which and the city there were formerly a great number of churches and religious houses, part of which are suppressed. The magnificent cathedral contains many relics; and the other public structures are the castle, the council-house, the hotel de ville, and the arsenal. There are manufactures of arms, clock-work, nails, cloth, leather, glass, &c., and a brisk trade. In 1792 the French took the city; they were driven thence in 1793, but entered it again in 1794; and it was afterwards annexed to France. In 1814, however, Liege, with its district, was delivered up to the allied forces. It is 60 m. W. S. W. of Cologne. Long. 5. 35. E., lat. 50. 38. N.

Liëgnitz. See Lignitz.

Ligueil, a town of France, department of Indre-et-Loire. 21 m. S. of Tours.

Lihons, a town of France, department of Somme, 18 m. E. of Amiens.

Lilienthal, a town of Saxony, on the river Warp, 10 m. N. N. E. of Breimen.

Lille. See Liste.

Lillers, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, seated on the Navez, 17 m. N. W. of Arras.

Lillo, a fort of the Netherlands, in Brabant, on the N. side of the Scheldt, 9 m. N. N. W. of Antwerp.

Lilley Point, a village of King William Co. Va.

Lima, a province of Peru; bounded N. by Truxillo, E. by the Andes, S. by Arequipa, and W. by the Pacific Ocean.

Lima, the capital of Peru, and an archbishop's see with a university. This city was founded in 1534, by Pizarro, who gave it the name of Ciudad de los Reyes, or City of the Kings. This Spanish name it retains in all legal deeds, but is better known to foreigners by that of Lima. It is 4 m. long and 2 broad, and surrounded by brick walls, with ramparts and bastions. The streets are handsome and straight: the houses are generally only of one story high, in consequence of the earthquakes. They have flat roofs, and trees round them to keep off the sun. The river forms canals in the streets, which run to most of the houses, and serve to water the gardens, &c. The churches and convents are extremely rich; and many images of the saints are of gold, adorned with jewels. Here are the courts of the viceroy and the archbishop, the royal mint, and the court of the municipal body. All the provinces remit their product and manufactures to Lima, and are supplied hence with the necessary commodities. The inhabitants, estimated at 50,000, are rich, fond of dress and splendid retinues, and extremely superstitious. Lima is 90 m. from the Cordilleras, and 850 S. by E. of Quito. Callao is its port. Long. 76. 49. W., lat. 12. 1. S.

Lima, pt. Livingston Co. N. Y. 16 m. W. Ca nadaigna. Pop. 1,764.

Limale, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, seated on the Dyle, 13 m. S. E. of Brussels.

Limavady. See Newton Limavady.

Limburg, a province of the Netherlands, bounded by Prussia and the provinces of S. and N. Brabant, Liege, and Antwerp. It contains an area of 1,500 sq. m. with 290,000 inhabitants. It has good arable ground, and abounds in a fine breed of cattle and contains mines of iron and lead.

Limburg, a town of the Netherlands, capital of the province of that name, with a castle built of marble. Here is a manufacture of woollen cloths, and it is famous for excellent cheese. In the neighbourhood are quarries of different kinds of marble, and good mines of calamine coal. Limburg was taken by the French in 1793; but in 1814 they delivered it up to the allies. It is seated on a mountain near the river Weze, 20 m. E. of Liege. Long. 6. 3. E., lat. 50. 23. N.

Limburg, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, with a fine cathedral. The Austrians defeated the French on the heights near this place in 1766. It is seated on the Lahn, 26 m. N. W. of Frankfort.

Limne, a town in Dorsetshire. See Lyme Regis.

Limckilms, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on the coast of the Forth. It is famous for great lime-works, has a good tide harbour for small vessels, and is 4 m. S. W. of Dumfermline.

Limerick, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, bounded on the N. by the river Shannon, which separates it from the county of Clare, W. by Kerry, S. by Cork, and E. by Tipperary. It is 50 English m. long from E. to W., and 32 broad from N. to S., and contains an area of 970 square m. with 218,432 inhabitants, exclusive of the city of Limerick. It is divided into 10 baronies, and 125 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Deel, Maig, Comogue, Feale, Gal, and Blackwater, besides the noble river Shannon, which may rather be said to flow by the county. The surface of the county is tolerably level, but sheltered on the S. E. by a range of mountains called the Galteas; and the fertility of the soil is proverbial. To the N. of the Galteas lies the tract of land denominated for its fertility the Golden Vein, and on the banks of the Shannon lie the carlaghs, or swamps, on which a quantity of manure is annually deposited by the overflowing of the river.

Limerick, a city of Ireland capital of the above county, and generally considered the metropolis of the province of Munster. It was formerly well fortified, and reckoned the second city in the kingdom, but has long since yielded that rank to Cork. Limerick is a county of itself, and a bishop's see, and is divided into the Irish and English town, the latter being built on an island of the Shannon called King's Island. The inhabitants are estimated at upwards of 40,000, and it has a market on Wednesday and Saturday. The linen, woollen, and paper manufactures are carried on to a great extent; and the export of provisions is considerable. Besides the cathedral and other churches, it has a modern episcopal palace, many hospitals, and other handsome public structures. King William was obliged to raise the siege of this city in 1690; but in 1691, the garrison surrendered on a very honorable capitulation. It is 40 m. S. S. E. of Galway, and 94 W. S. W. of Dublin.

Limerick, p.t. York Co. Me. Pop. 1,426; p.v. Jefferson Co. N. Y. and a township of Montgomery Co. Pa. 25 m. W. Philadelphia.

Limstone, a county of Alabama, on Tennessee river. Pop. 14,843. Athens is the capital.

Limington, p.t. York Co. Me. on the Saco, 22 m. W. Portland. Pop. 2,320.

Limmat, a river of Switzerland, formed by the junction of the Mat and the Linth, the former issuing from the N. W. extremity of the lake Wallenstadt, and the latter flowing from the S. The Limmat flows N. W., passes through the lake of Zurich, and unites with the Aar below Baden

Limne, or Limpne, a village in Kent. Eng. near it are the remains of a fortress called Stutfall Castle. It was formerly a port, but is now 2 m. from the sea. The Roman road from Canterbury, called Stanes Street, ended here. 3 m. S. W. of Hithe, and 64 S. E. of London.

Limoges, an ancient town of France, department of Upper Vienne. It is a trading place, and the inhabitants are estimated at 20,000. It is seated on the Vienne, 110 m. E. of Bordeaux. Long. 1. 20. E., lat. 45. 50. N.

Limosin, or Limousin, a late province of France, divided into the Upper and Lower Limosin, the former of which is cold and hilly, but the latter is temperate and fertile. It contains mines of lead, copper, tin, and iron, and now forms the departments of Upper Vienne and Correze.

Limoux, a town of France, department of Aude, with manufactures of woollen, leather, and soap. It is seated on the Aude, 50 m. S. E. of Toulouse.

Lincoln, a city and the capital of Lincolnshire, Eng. It is situate on the river Witham, is divided into Upper and Lower Town, and has two suburbs. Formerly it contained 52 churches, now reduced to 15. It is a bishop's see, and the diocese, though much reduced, is still the largest in England. The cathedral stands on the brow of the hill, and is admired for its rich and light architecture. The great bell of the cathedral, called Tom of Lincoln, required 15 able men to ring it, but has been forbidden to be used, in consequence of the decay of the tower in which it hangs. Here are several meeting-houses for different denominations of dissenters, a catholic chapel, a national school erected in 1814, and several other schools and charitable institutions. Of the castle, built by William I., few vestiges remain, but the ruins of religious houses are so numerous that the very barns, stables, &c., are built with arched doors and windows. Newport Gate, on the N. side of the city still remains, and is one of the noblest remnants of Roman architecture left in Britain. Lincoln is a county of itself, governed by a mayor. The chief trade is in coal, brought by the Trent and Fossdike; and oats and wool, which are sent by the Witham. Here is a small manufacture of camlets. It is 32 m. N. E. of Nottingham, and 131 N. by W. of London. Long. 0. 25. W., lat. 15. 53. N.

Lincoln, a county of Maine, on the Kennebec and washed by the ocean. Pop. 57,181. Wiscasset is the capital; a county of N. Carolina on the Catawba. Pop. 22,625. Lincolnton is the capital; a county of Georgia, on the Savannah. Pop. 6,137. Lincolnton is the capital; a county of Kentucky on Green river. Pop. 11,012. Stanford is the capital; a county of W. Tennessee, on Elk river. Pop. 22,086. Fayetteville is the capital; a county of Missouri on the Mississippi. Pop. 4,060. Troy is the capital.

Lincoln, a township of Grafton Co. N. H. Pop. 50; a township of Addison Co. Vt. Pop. 639; a town in Middlesex Co. Mass. Pop. 709; and a town in Mercer Co. Ken.

Lincolnshire, a large maritime county of England, bounded on the N. by the Humber, which divides it from Yorkshire. It contains 2,888 sq. m., is divided into 30 hundreds, and 630 parishes; has one city, and 31 market towns; and sends 12 members to parliament. The coast is flat, and at low water may be seen the submarine relics of a forest, which is a great natural curiosity. The principal rivers are the Humber, Trent, Witham, Welland, and Anchohm. This country is divided into three districts, called Holland, Kesteven, and Lindsey. The air is various. The soil, in many places, is very rich, the inland part producing corn in great plenty, and the fens colseed, and very rich pastures; whence their breed of cattle is larger than that of any other county of England, except Somersetshire: their horses are also excellent, and very large; their sheep are not only of the largest breed, but are clothed with a long thick wool, peculiarly fitted for the worsted and coarse woolen manufactures, and many of the unimproved fens are devoted to the rearing of geese, the quills and feathers of which are sent in immense quantities to the London and other markets. In the N. W. part, the rivers Trent, Dune, and Idle, form an island, called Axholm, which is a rich tract, and produces much flax. To the N. E. is a large tract of heathy land, called the Wolds, in which great flocks of sheep are bred. The southern portion is for the most part enclosed and well inhabited. Lincolnshire has no considerable manufactures, and its trade is almost confined to the exchange of its produce for manufactured and grocery goods, and other consumable commodities.

Lincolnton, towns in Lincoln Co. N. C. and Lincoln Co. Geo.

Lindau, a town of Bavaria, with a castle and wall, deemed to be Roman works. The French took possession of this city in 1796; and it became subject to Bavaria in 1805. It is a trading place, seated on an island of the lake of Constance, joined to the mainland by a long bridge, 25 m. E. S. E. of Constance, and 75 S. W. of Augsburg. Long. 9. 41. E., lat. 47. 32. N.

Lindau, a town and castle of Germany, in the principality of Anhalt-Kothen, 5 m. N. of Zerbst.

Lindenness. See Naze.

Linden, p. v. Marengo Co. Alabama.

Lindenfels, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, 22 m. N. N. E. of Manheim.

Lindleystown, p. v. Steuben Co. N. Y.

Lindisfarne. See Holy Island.

Lingen, a county of Germany, in Westphalia, divided into Upper and Lower, and partly belonging to Prussia, and partly to Hanover.

Lingen, a town of Hanover, with an excellent Calvinist academy. A little to the N. of it is a passage over the Elbe, called the Lingen Ferry. It is seated on the Elbe. 40 m. N. N. W. of Munster.

Lin-keang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si. It is thinly inhabited; but it is of some note, on account of one of its villages being the general mart for all the drugs sold in the empire. It is seated on the Yu-ho, 410 m. N. by E. of Canton. Long 115. 0. E., lat. 27. 58. N.

Linköping, a government of Sweden, corresponding nearly to the old province of East Gothland. It lies along the Baltic, and contains 3,280 sq. m. with 160,000 inhabitants.

Linköping, a town of Sweden, capital of the foregoing government, and a bishop's see. It is defended by a castle, and stands on the river Stoeng, near the lake Roxen, 112 m. S. W. of Stockholm.

Linlithgow, a borough of Scotland, capital of Linlithgowshire, seated on a rising ground, overlooking a lake at its E. end. It has manufactures of leather, and in the neighbourhood are an extensive printfield, bleachfield, and two distilleries. Here the kings of Scotland had one of their noblest palaces, now in ruins; but the room is still shown in which queen Mary was born. Linlithgow is 17 m. W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 33. W., lat. 56. 0. N.

Linlithgowshire, or West Lothian, a county of Scotland, 20 m. long and 12 broad; bounded on the N. by the frith of Forth, S. E. by Edinburghshire, S. W. by Lanarkshire, and N. W. by Stirlingshire. It is divided into 13 parishes, and contains about 20,000 inhabitants. The surface is finely diversified with hill and dale: it is fertile in corn and pasture, and produces coal, iron, limestone, and lead. The chief rivers are the Avon, and Amond.

Linnhe, Loch, an arm of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, which separates the counties of Argyle and Inverness. It extends in a N. E. direction from the sound of Mull to Fort William, where it takes a northerly direction, and acquires the name of Loch Eil. Another branch, in a southeasterly direction, is called Loch Leven. This lake is bounded on each side by lofty mountains. The island of Lismore lies at its entrance, and in it are interspersed several smaller ones.

Linnich, a town of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the river Roer, 5 m. N. N. W. of Juliers.

Lin-tchin, a city of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chan-tong, seated on the great canal. Here is an octagonal tower, divided into eight stories, the walls of which are covered on the outside with porcelain. 187 m. S. of Pekin.

Linton, a town in Cambridgeshire, Eng. seated on the river Granton, 10 m. S. E. of Cambridge and 40 N. by E. of London.

Lintz, the capital of Upper Austria, and a bishop's see, has two castles, and considerable woolen manufactures. The French became masters of it in 1741 and again in 1800. It is seated on the right bank of the Danube, over which is a wooden bridge, 96 m. W. of Vienna. Long. 14. 16. E., lat. 48. 21. N.

Lintz, a town and citadel of the Prussian states, in the late electorate of Cologne, seated on the Rhine, 23 m. S. S. E. of Cologne.

Lions Gulf, in the Mediterranean, lying along the French coast between Spain and Italy. It was named thus from the furious storms to which it is subject, yet is commonly incorrectly written Lyons, as if called after the city of that name which is nearly 200 m. inland.

Lipari Islands, a cluster of islands in the Mediterranean, lying to the N. of Sicily, to which they politically belong. They are all of volcanic origin, were feigned to be the residence of Æolus and Vulcan, and formerly called Æolian Islands. They are 12 in number; and nearly as follows, in the order of their size: Lipari, Stromboli, Volcano, Salini, Felicuda, Alicuda, Panaria, Volcanello, Vacheluse, Lisca, Dattolo, and Tila Navi. They produce great quantities of alum, sulphur, nitre, cinnabar, and most kinds of fruits, particularly raisins, currants, and figs. Some of their wines are much esteemed, particularly the Malvasia.

Lipari, the largest and most fertile of the Lipari islands, about 15 m. in circumference. It has not suffered from subterraneous fires for ages past though it every where bears the marks of its former volcanic state. It abounds with the currant grape; cotton also grows here; and great quantities of pumice are exported. It has a town of the same name, which is a bishop's see, and stands on the S. E. side of the island, 26 m. N. N. E. of Patti, in Sicily. Long. 15. 30. E., lat. 38. 35. N.

Lipno, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Ploczko, 33 m. N. N. W. of Ploczko.

Lippouree, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Cracow, 22 m. W. of Cracow.

Lippe, a river of Westphalia, which flows W. by Paderborn, Lippstadt, Ham, and Dorsten, and joins the Rhine above Wesel.

Lippe-Detmold, a principality of Germany, in Westphalia, bounded by the Prussian states and Hanover, and containing an area of 430 square m. with 73,000 inhabitants. It is mountainous almost throughout, and contains large forests of oak and beech.

Lippspring, a town of Prussian Westphalia, near the source of the Lippe, 6 m. N. of Paderborn.

Lippstadt, a strong town of Westphalia, with a good trade in timber. It stands on the river Lippe, 18 m. W. of Paderborn. Long. 8. 28. E., lat. 51. 41. N.

Lique, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, 12 m. W. of St. Omer.

Liqueo, Liquoux, or Likco Islands. See Loo-koo.

Lira, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia, the Edera of the Carthaginians, and the Edeta of the Romans. It has manufactures of linen, soap, and earthenware; also brandy distilleries. 20 m. N. N. W. of Valencia.

Lis, a river of Asiatic Russia, which rises in a lake of the same name, and falls into the Yenisei. Long. 90. 14. E., lat. 62. 20. N.

Lis, a river which rises in France, in the department of Pas de Calais, flows by Aire, St. Venant, and Armentieres, into Flanders, where it passes by Menin, Courtray, and Deynse, and joins the Scheldt at Ghent.

Lisbon, the capital of Portugal, and the see of a patriarch and an archbishop, with a university. It is seated on the N. side of the Tagus, 10 m. from its mouth, and built in the form of an amphitheatre, on seven hills, not broad, but six m. in length. The city is walled round, and it has so increased by degrees, particularly towards the W., that the old walls now divide the two dioceses; the E. part under the archbishop, and the W. under the patriarch. The harbour, which is capable of containing 1,000 ships in the greatest safety, is defended by two forts; and before the entrance to the city is the fort of Belem. Near this is a grand aqueduct, between two hills, which conveys water to a great reservoir at one of the extremities of Lisbon. In the middle of the city, on one of the hills, is a citadel, which commands the whole place. The cathedral, on another eminence, is ancient and gloomy; but the riches of the Portuguese have rendered it magnificent. The royal palace, which fronts the river, is large and magnificent, and contains a library, collected at vast expense by John V. Lisbon was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1755, but has been handsomely rebuilt. It contains many beautiful edifices, 40 parish churches, 99 chapels, 75 convents of both sexes, and about 200,000 inhabitants. There are public walks, two theatres, and a circus for the bull-fights. The manufactures are in a backward state, but the trade is very considerable, and many foreign merchants, both catholic and protestant, reside here; this city being the grand magazine of all goods brought from Brazil, and the colonies belonging to Portugal. In December 1807 it was entered by the French, who retained possession till August 1808, when they evacuated it after the battle of Vimeira, in which they were defeated by the British. The inhabitants of Lisbon are described as superstitious, vindictive, and meanly acquiescing under power. In the early part of the revolution they made a noble stand for freedom, but have since submitted without resistance to the usurper Don Miguel. See Portugal. 178 m. W. by N. of Seville, and 255 S. by W. of Madrid. Long. 9. 5. W., lat. 38. 42. N.

Lisburn, p.v. Cumberland Co. Pa.

Lisburn, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, with manufactures of linen, cloth, muslin, and cambric. It is seated on the Laggan, 8 m. S. W. of Belfast.

Lisca, or Lisca Bianca, one of the Lipari islands, 3 m. S. W. of Stromboli. It is a small desert spot.

Lisleur, a town of France, department of Calvados. It has a good trade, particularly in linen cloth, and is seated on the Touque, 12 m. from the sea, and 40 S. W. of Rouen. Long. 0. 14. E., lat. 49. 9. N.

Lisle, a strong city of France, in the department of Nord, and one of the most commercial towns in France. The inhabitants are estimated at 60,000. Its citadel is supposed to be the strongest in Europe, next to that of Turin. The streets and squares are adorned with noble buildings, particularly the Great Square and the Little Square; and among the public structures are the exchange, a magazine of vast extent, and a general hospital. The manufactures are numerous, comprising camlets, serges, cotton, linen, silk, velvet, lace, &c. Lisle was taken by the allies in 1708; but was restored by the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, in consideration of the demolition of the fortifications of Dunkirk. In 1782 it sustained a severe bombardment from the Austrians. It is seated in a rich and marshy soil, on the Deule 18 m. E. of Tournay, and 145 N. N. E. of Paris. Long. 3. 4. E., lat. 50. 38. N.

Lisle, p.t. Broome Co. N. Y. Pop. 4,393.

Lismore, one of the Hebrides of Scotland, at the entrance of Loch Mull, on the coast of Argyleshire. It has a fertile island, 9 m. long and 2 broad, and was anciently the residence of the bishop of Argyle.

Lismore, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Waterford, and a bishop's see united to Waterford. The cathedral is spacious and handsome, but the town is now a small place. It stands on the Blackwater, 26 m. N. E. of Cork.

Lisonzo, a river of Austrian Italy, in Friuli, which enters the gulf of Trieste.

Lissa, an island in the gulf of Venice, on the coast of Austrian Dalmatia. Here is a fishery of pilchards and anchovies, and it produces excellent wine and abundance of oil and almonds. It is 56 m. W. of Ragusa. Long. 17. 0. E., lat. 42. 59. N.

Lissa, a town of Prussian Poland, near the borders of Silesia. In 1707 it was laid waste by the Russians; but it has been rebuilt, with great improvement, and carries on a great trade. It is 65 m. W. of Kaliseh. Long. 16. 35. E., lat. 52. 0. N.

Lissa, a village of Prussian Silesia, on the Weistritz, 6 m. N. W. of Breslau, celebrated for a victory gained by the Prussians over the Austrians in 1757.

Litchfield, a city of Staffordshire, Eng. It is a county of itself, and, united with Coventry, forms an episcopal see. It has 3 parish churches, besides the cathedral, which is a beautiful structure, and walled in like a castle. Litchfield is the birthplace of two celebrated contemporaries, Samuel Johnson and David Garrick. The city is governed by two bailiffs, &c., and sends 2 members to parliament. It is seated on both sides of a small river, which soon afterwards joins the Trent, 16 m. N. of Birmingham, and 119 N. W. of London. Long. 1. 44. W., lat. 52. 41. N.

Litchfield, a mountainous county of Connecticut, bounded N. by Massachusetts, E. by Hartford county, S. E. by New Haven county, S. W. by Fairfield county, and W. by New York. The soil is fertile, yielding large crops of wheat and Indian corn, and affording fine pasture. Pop. 42,855.

Litchfield, the capital of the above county, situated in an elevated plain. It is a good agricultural town, and contains numerous mills and manufacturing establishments. 8 m. N. N. W. of New Haven. Pop. 4,458.

Litchfield, a township of Hillsborough Co. N. H. Pop. 595; a township of Herkimer Co. N. Y. 10 m. S. Utica. Pop. 1,750; p.t. Lincoln Co. Me. Pop. 2,398, also villages in Bradford Co. Pa. and Grayson Co. Ken.

Lithuania, the former name of an extensive tract of country lying between Poland and Russia, now forming the three Russian governments of Wilna, Grodno, and Minsk. It was divided into Lithuania Proper and Samogitia; and in 1569 was united to Poland, under one elective king. It is a flat country, fertile in corn, and produces honey, wood, pitch, and vast quantities of wool; also excellent little horses which are never shod, their hoofs being very hard. There are vast forests in which are bears, wolves, elks, wild oxen, lynxes, beavers, wild cats, &c.; and eagles and vultures are very common.

Litz, a village of Pennsylvania, in Lancaster county, and a settlement of the Moravians, 66 m. W. by N. of Philadelphia.

Litschau, a town and castle of Austria, on the frontiers of Bohemia, 23 m. N. W. of Horn.

Littau, a town of Moravia on the river March, 9 m. N. N. E. of Olmutz.

Little Britain, a township of Lancaster Co. Pa.

Little Compton, p.t. Newport Co. R. I. on the eastern point of Narraganset Bay. Pop. 1,378.

Little Creek, a township of Sussex Co. Del.

Little Egg Harbour, a township of Burlington Co. N. Y. lying upon the sea; with a harbour and river of the same name, navigable for small craft.

Livermore, p.t. Oxford Co. Me. 18 m. N. E. Paris. Pop. 2,456.

Liverpool, a city in Lancashire, Eng. with markets on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday. Up to the close of the seventeenth century it was a very inconsiderable place, having only one church, which was a chapel of ease to Walton, a village 3 m. off. In 1669 an act was passed to make it a distinct parish, and erect a new church. Since this period it has been gradually advancing in importance; and, with respect to population and commerce, it is become the second port in the kingdom. It extends 3 m. along the E. bank of the river Mersey, and about a mile in average breadth; contains 23 churches and chapels for the establishment, a much greater number of meeting-houses for dissenters, five Roman catholic chapels, and a Jews synagogue. Among the public buildings, which comprise numerous specimens of architectural taste, the most important are the town-hall, exchange buildings, lyceum, Wellington rooms, corn exchange, infirmary, St. John's market, blue coat school, dispensary, asylum for the blind, theatre, atheneum, music hall, news room, custom-house, and a borough gaol on the Howardian plan. The streets are generally spacious, some of them elegant, and the greater part lighted with gas. At the head of the institutions for literary and scientific pursuits is the Royal Liverpool Institution, opened in 1817 at an expense of £30,000. To enumerate the asylums for the wretched and unfortunate, of every description and denomination, would be altogether incompatible with our limits. The increase and prosperity of Liverpool have been greatly promoted by the enterprise and skill of its inhabitants, by its local advantages, commanding the trade of Ireland and America, and by the wisdom of the corporation in abolishing all exclusive laws, and encouraging every species of industry and commercial talent. The principal manufactures, besides those connected with the shipping, which employ an immense number of persons, are fine porcelain, watches, glass, iron, salt, copperas, &c. The watch movement and tool business is almost confined to this part of the country; and the breweries, soap-works, brass and iron foundries, sugar-houses, &c., are on an extensive scale. Few towns possess accommodations for shipping at all comparable to Liverpool: it has, at present, six docks, the Dry Dock, Salthouse Dock, King's Dock, Queen's Dock, George's Dock, Prince's Dock, North Dock, and Brunswick Dock, which with their basins occupy nearly 100 acres of land. The estuary of the Mersey may be properly termed an arm of the sea, opening to this port a ready access to the Western Sea, and ships of any burden may come up fully laden to the town; while the system of canal navigation opens a communication inland with all parts of the kingdom. This port is now estimated to engross a fourth part of the foreign trade of Britain, a sixth of its general trade, and to furnish one-twelfth of the shipping: its customs amount to nearly £4,000,000, and its exports exceed even those of the metropolis. The town is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. 48 m. S. of Lancaster, and 206 N. W. of London. Long. 3. W., lat. 53 22. N.

Liverpool, a town of Nova Scotia, in Queen's county, with a harbour at the mouth of a river of its name, 58 m. N. W. of Halifax. Long. 64. 15 W., lat. 44. 10. N.

Liverpool, villages in Onondaga Co. N. Y., Perry and York Cos. Pa. and Medina Co. Ohio.

Livingston, a county of New York, on Genesee river. Pop. 27,700. Genesee is the capital; a county of Kentucky on the Tennessee and Ohio. Pop. 6,607. Salem is the capital.

Livingston, a township of Columbia Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, 40 m. S. Albany. Pop. 2,087; also a village in Essex Co. N. J.

Livingstonville, p.v. Schoharie Co. N. Y.

Livonia, a province of Russia, which, with that of Esthonia, has been reciprocally claimed and possessed by Russia, Sweden, and Poland, and, for more than two centuries, was a perpetual scene of the most bloody wars. It was finally wrested from the Swedes by Peter the Great, was confirmed to the Russians by the peace of Nystadt in 1721, and now forms the government of Riga, or Livonia. It is 250 m. long and 150 broad; bounded on the N. by the government of Esthonia, and S. by Courland. The land is fertile, but is only partially cultivated: the products are rye, barley, flax, and linseed. In the forests are wolves, bears, elks, reindeer, stags, and hares. The domestic animals are numerous; but the sheep bear very bad wool. The peasantry are in a state of great degradation.

Livonia, p.t. Livingston Co. N. Y., 20 m. S. W. Canandaigua. Pop. 2,665. Also a village in Washington Co. Indiana.

Lizard, a peninsula on the S. coast of Cornwall and the most southern point of land in England. On it are two light-houses, and the Lizard Point is in long. 5. 11. W., lat. 49. 58. N.

Lizier, St., a town of France, department of Arriege; seated on the Salat, 50 m. S. E. of Auch. Long. 1. 9. E., lat. 43. 0. N.

Llanarth, a town of Wales, in Cardiganshire, 15 m. E. by N. of Cardigan, and 223 W. by N. of London.

Llanbeder, a corporate town of Wales, in Cardiganshire, with a considerable traffic in horses, cattle, hogs, salted butter, and tanned and raw hides. It is seated on the Teife, over which is a bridge into Caermarthenshire, 27 m. E. of Cardigan, and 209 W. by N. of London.

Llandaff, an ancient city of Wales, in Glamorganshire, being an episcopal see, but it is a small place, and has no market. The body of its ancient cathedral was rebuilt in 1751, but without cross aisles. Near it are some ruins of the ancient castellated mansion of the bishop. It is seated on the Taafe, and has the benefit of a tolerably good harbour, which opens into the Severn. 2 m. N. W. of Cardiff, and 163 W. of London. Long. 3. 13. W., lat. 51. 29. N.

Llandilo-raver, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, with a considerable manufacture of hannel. Near it are the picturesque remains of Dinevwar Castle, formerly the residence of the native princes of Wales. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the river Towy, 13 m. E. of Caermarthen, and 202 W. of London.

Llandovery, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire. It is seated on the Towy, at its conflux with the Braun, 26 m. E. N. E. of Caermarthen, and 191 W. of London.

Llanilly, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, with a considerable trade in iron and coal, seated on a creek of the Bristol Channel, 16 m. S. S. E. of Caermarthen, and 217 W. of London.

Llanfair, a town of Wales. It is seated on the banks of the rivers Verniew, 14 m. W. of Newtown, and 180 W. by N. of London.

Llanfyllain, a town of Wales, in Montgomeryshire, seated in a flat, among hills, near the river Cain, 15 m. N. by W. of Montgomery, and 186 W. of London.

Llangaddoc, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, 18 m. E. by N. of Caermarthen, and 195 W. of London.

Llangollen, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire. Near it, on a steep mountain, are the remains of Castle Dinas, once a strong place; and about 2 m. distant is the beautiful ruin of Valle Crucis abbey. The town stands on the Dee, over which is a beautiful ancient bridge, 2 m. S. S. W. of Wrexham, and 182 N. W. of London.

Llanidloes, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire, with a considerable manufacture of fine flannels &c. It is seated at the confluence of the Severn and Clewedog, 13 m. S. W. of Newton, and 182 N. W. of London.

Llanrist, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire. Here are two churches, and the town is the centre of the business of the vale of Conway. It is seated on the Conway, over which is a bridge into Caernarvonshire, 20 m. W. S. W. of Denbigh, 220 N. W. of London.

Llantrissant, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire. It had a castle, which is nearly destroyed 12 m. N. W. of Cardiff, and 171 W. of London.

Llanhaearn, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire. It stands at the mouth of the Towy, where, on a low rock, are the ruins of an ancient castle; and on the other side the river are the remains of that of Lanstephan. Llanhaearn is 7 m. S. W. of Caermarthen, and 223 W. by N. of London.

Llerma, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, 63 m. N. of Seville.

Lloydsville, p.v. Otsego Co. N. Y. 90 m. W. Albany.

Llycegr, or Llycheyr, a corporate town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, on the left bank of a river of the same name. It was the Leucarum, of Antoninus. 312 m. W. of London.

Lo, St., a town of France, department of La Manche, with manufactures of serges, shalloons, ribands, and gold and silver lace; seated on the Vire, 125 m. W. by N. of Paris.

Loando, capital of the Portuguese settlement in Angola. It has a good harbour formed by the island of Loando, lying a little off the coast. The town is large and handsome, considering the country, containing 3,000 houses, built of stone, and covered with tiles, beside a vast number of huts made of straw and earth. 260 m. S. S. W. of St. Salvador. Long. 13. 15. E., lat. 8. 50. S.

Loando, an island in the Atlantic near the coast of Angola, about 20 m. long and only one broad, and divided from the continent by a narrow channel. Goats and sheep are numerous. It produces no grain, but yields the best water in all the neighbourhood.

Loango, a kingdom of Western Africa, to the N. of the river Zaire or Congo. It includes Loango proper, and the districts of Mayomba and Malembo, which are subject to the king of Loango; and is said to extend more than 400 m. along the coast, from the Zaire to Cape St. Catherine. The climate is said to be very fine, and never subject to hurricanes, nor even to violent winds. Rain rarely occurs, but the dews are sufficient for vegetation. The land is fertile, yielding with very little of agricultural skill or labour, three crops of millet in a year. The potato and yam are abundant; and there are a great number of trees whence palm-wine is drawn. The women cultivate the ground, sow, and get in the harvest. The inhabitants are well-made, mild, and tractable.

Loango, the capital of the above kingdom, with a harbour, at the mouth of the Quilla. The streets are wide, and lined with palm-trees, bananas, and bacava. The houses are oblong, and have only a ground floor; separated from each other, and fenced round with a hedge of palm-twigs, canes, or bulrushes. In the centre of the city is a large square, fronting the royal palace, which forms another square, a mile and a half in compass, surrounded by a palisado of stately palm-trees. The principal trade consists in elephants' teeth, palm-cloth, copper, tin, lead, iron, and slaves. It is 230 m. W. N. W. of St. Salvador. Long. 12.30. E., lat. 4.40. S.

Loano, or Locano, a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, near the sea, 6 m. S. S. W. of Finale.

Lobau, a town of W. Prussia, with a castle, where the bishop of Culm resides. 45 m. E. by N. of Culm.

Lobau, a town of Saxony, in Upper Lusatia, which has a trade in grey, striped and white linens. 13 m. S. E. of Bautzen.

Lobenstein, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Vogtland, seated on the Lemnitz, 22 m. N. N. E. of Culmbach. Long. 11.52. E., lat. 50.21. N.

Loba, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, seated on the Guadiana, 22 m. E. of Badajoz.

Lobstadt, a town of Saxony in the circle of Meissen, 10 m. S. S. E. of Leipzig.

Loburg, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg. 22 m. E. of Magdeburg.

Locana, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated in a fine valley, on the river Orso, 25 m. S. of Aosta.

Locarno, a town of Italy, capital of a bailiwick, belonging to the Swiss. It contains three convents, and a small Franciscan monastery, on a rock overhanging the valley, and commanding a view of the lake Maggiore. 56 m. N. by W. of Milan. Long. 8.31. E., lat. 46.10. N.

Lochabar, a district of Scotland, in Invernesshire, bounded on the E. by Badenoch, W. by Moydart, N. by Glengary, and S. by Lorn. The country is bleak, mountainous and rugged. The inhabitants pay little attention to any commerce, except the sale of their black cattle; and the only lands cultivated are a few acres around the huts of those who tend their flocks. Here the Pretender erected his standard in 1745.

Locher Moss, a morass of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, 12 m. long and 3 broad, extending down by Dumfries to Solway Frith, and divided into two parts by a river called Locher Water, which abounds with excellent pike. Oak, fir, birch, and hazel trees, also anchors, pieces of vessels, &c., have been dug up in different parts of this moss.

Loches, a town of France, department of Indre et-Loire, with a strong castle on a rock. In the collegiate church is the tomb of the celebrated Agnes Sorel, mistress of Charles VII., to whose patriotic exhortations that monarch owed almost all his glory. Loches is seated on the Indre, near a forest, 15 m. S. of Amboise, and 20 S. W. of Tours.

Lochnaben, a borough of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, with a manufacture of coarse linen; seated on the W. side of the Annon, 9 m. N. E. of Dumfries.

Lochrída, or Orrída, a town in the province of Albania, and a Greek archbishop's see. It is well fortified, and seated on a hill, near a lake of its name, 62 m. S. E. of Durazzo. Long. 20.40. E., lat. 41.40. N.

Lochna, a sea-port of Sweden, seated on a bay of the gulf of Bothnia, 30 m. S. of Tornea. Long. 24.16. E., lat. 64.20. N.

Lochnouch, a town of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, with a considerable manufacture of cotton. It is seated on Castle Semple Loch, 6 m. S. W. of Paisley.

Lochy, Loch, a lake of Scotland in Inverness-shire, 14 m. long, and from one to 2 broad. Out of it flows the River Lochy, which, about a mile below, receives the Spean, and their united stream enters Loch Eil at Fort William.

Lochenitz, a town of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg, on the river Rando, 16 m. N. E. of Prentzio.

Locke, p.t. Cayuga Co. N. Y. 23 m. S. E. Auburn. Pop. 3,310.

Lockerby, a town of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, with a trade in linen and woollen cloth; seated near the Annan, 12 m. E. by N. of Dumfries.

Lockport, p.t. Niagara Co. N. Y. on the Erie Canal. 296 m. W. Albany. Pop. 3,823. Here are the most remarkable works on the canal, consisting of 10 locks overcoming an ascent of 60 feet in the canal. Besides these there is an excavation through the mountain ridge for 3 m. cut in the rock. The town is a place of considerable trade. Pop. 3,823.

Lockwood, p.v. Sussex Co. N. J. 78 m. N. Trenton.

Loche, a town of Switzerland in an elevated valley of the same name, in the canton of Neuchâtel, famous for watchmakers, laceweavers, goldsmiths, cutlers, and enamellers. It is 9 m. N. W. of Neuchâtel.

Loddon, a town in Norfolk, Eng. 8 m. S. E. of Norwich, and 112 N. E. of London.

Lodève, a town of France, department of Hérault, with manufactures of silk, hats, &c. During the late war it supplied a great part of the cleaning for the army. It is seated on the Lergues, 30 m. W. by N. of Montpellier. Long. 3.20. E. lat. 43.43. N.

Lodi, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan, capital of a province of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a fortress. It has manufactures of porcelain, and the Parmesan cheese made here is esteemed the best of its kind. The French defeated the Austrians at this place in 1796; it is seated on the Adda, 18 m. S. E. of Milan. Long. 9.30. E., lat. 45.18. N.

Lodimont, p.v. Abbeville Dis. S. C. 134 m. W. Columbus.

Lodomeria. See Galicia.

Loffingen, a town of Germany, in Baden, with a medicinal bath. 3 m. W. S. W. of Huiffengen.

Lofsta, a town of Sweden, in the province of Uppland, with extensive iron works. These works were destroyed by the Russians, in 1719, but have since been again erected. It is 39 m. N. of Upsal.

Logan, a county of Ohio. Pop. 6,442. Belle Fontaine is the capital. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 13,002. Russellville is the capital. Also villages in Hocking Co. Ohio. Wayne Co. Missou and Centre Co. Pa.

Logierait, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, noted for its distillation of whiskey; seated on the Tummel, 22 m. N. N. W. of Perth.

Logrono, a town of Spain, in the province of Burgos, seated on the Ebro, in a country abounding with excellent fruits and good wines, 62 m. E. of Burgos, and 155 N. N. E. of Madrid. Long. 2. 29. E., lat. 42. 22. N.

Logrono, a town of Chile, capital of Melipilla Long. 71. 16. W., lat. 33. 38. N.

Lohagar, a celebrated fortress of Hindoostan, province of Dowlatabad, now belonging to the British, 20 m. N. W. of Poona.

Lohia, a town of Arabia, in Yemen, on the coast of the Red Sea. It has a great trade in coffee, brought from the neighbouring hills: in the vicinity is a mountain which affords a considerable quantity of mineral salt. It has no harbour, and the smallest vessels are obliged to anchor at a distance from the town. 180 m. N. N. W. of Mocha. Long. 42. 50. E., lat. 15. 42. N.

Loja. See Losa.

Loire-et-Cher, a department of France, bounded on the N. E. by the province of Loiret, N. W. by that of Sarthe, S. by that of Indre, S. E. by that of Cher, and S. W. by that of Indre-et-Loire. It takes its name from the rivers Loire and Cher; the former of which joins the Sarthe above Angers; and the latter runs into the Loire, 10 m. below Tours. Blois is the capital.

Loire, the principal river of France, which rises in the department of Ardeche, and falls into the Atlantic about 40 m. below Nantes, watering a vast plain of more than 600 m. and dividing France almost into two equal parts. By means of the central canal, it establishes a communication between the Atlantic and Mediterranean, and facilitates the commercial operations of the kingdom.

Loire, a department of France, adjoining those of Rhone and Isere. It has its name from the river Loire, which flows N. through its whole length. Montbrison is the capital.

Loire, Upper, a department of France, comprising the Velay and that part of the Cevennes dependent on the former province of Languedoc. It takes its name from the river Loire, which flows through it from the S. to the N. E. Le Puy is the capital.

Loire, Inferieure, a department of France, containing part of the ancient province of Bretagne. It has its name from the river Loire, which crosses it from E. to W. and then enters the ocean. Nantes is the capital.

Loiret, a department of France, comprising part of the former province of Orleansois. It has its name from a small river that runs into the Loire. Orleans is the capital.

Loitz, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania, with a castle seated on the Peene, 25 m. S. of Stralsund.

Loldong, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, on the N. E. border of the province of Dehli, and on the river Pattereah, 8 m. above its conflux with the Ganges, and 100 N. N. E. of Dehli. Long. 78. 38. E., lat. 29. 47. N.

Lokeren, a large town of the Netherlands, in E. Flanders, with various manufactures and a considerable trade. It is seated on the Darne, 12 m. N. E. of Ghent.

Lombardo-Venetian-Kingdom, or Austrian Italy, a kingdom of Italy, belonging to the house of Austria. It is bounded on the E. by Illyria, S. E. by the Adriatic, S. by the states of the church, Parma, and Modena, W. by Piedmont, and N. E. by Switzerland and Austria; and is divided into the governments of Milan and Venice. The country is well cultivated and is watered by the finest lakes and rivers of Italy. It was erected into a kingdom in 1815; and, though declared to be a monarchy inseparable from the Austrian empire, it has a constitution of its own and a prince of the imperial family at its head, who has the title of viceroy, and resides at Milan.

Lombardy, p.v. Amelia Co. Va. 50 m. S. W. Richmond; p.v. Columbia Co. Geo. 64 m. N. E. Milledgeville.

Lombéz, a small town of France, department of Gers. It is seated on the Save 27 m. S. W. of Toulouse.

Lombok, an island of the East Indies, between Bali and Sumbava, 50 m. long and 45 broad. It is very mountainous, but covered with wood and verdure. At the town of Balli on the E. side, in the straits of Allas, and in the many flourishing villages of the coast, European ships passing to the E. are well supplied. The inhabitants, originally emigrants from Hindoostan, retain most Hindoo customs.

Lombock, a strait formed by the island of Balli W. and that of Lombock E. The S. entrance is in long. 115. 43. E., and lat. 8. 45. S., where is a large island called Banditti Island, to the W. of which there is no passage. Owing to the extreme rapidity of the tides, navigation is here extremely dangerous.

Lomond, Loch, a lake of Scotland, in Dumbar-tonshire, 30 m. long and from 1 to 9 wide. It contains several islands, some of which are inhabited, and adorned with antique ruins, concealed among ancient yews; and others rise into high rocky cliffs, the habitation of the osprey. On the E. side is the mountain Benlomond, which rises to the height of 3,240 feet; and the river Leven issues from its S. extremity.

Lonato, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan, 12 m. E. S. E. of Brescia.

Lonearty, a village of Scotland, in Perthshire, signalized by the great victory obtained by the Scots over the Danes, in 970. It has extensive bleaching grounds, and is seated near the Tay, 5 m. N. of Perth.

London, the metropolis of Great Britain, one of the largest and most opulent cities in the world mentioned by Tacitus as a considerable commercial place in the reign of the Roman emperor Nero. In its most extensive view, as the metropolis, it may be said to consist of five great portions, viz.: the west end of the town, the city, the east end of the town, Westminster, and the borough. The west end of the town is popularly regarded as extending from Charing Cross to Hyde Park and from St. James's Park to Paddington. This is the best and most fashionable portion of the metropolis, and is chiefly occupied by the town residences of the nobility and gentry, and fashionable shops. The city includes the central part, and is the great emporium of commerce. The east end of the town is also devoted to commerce, ship-building, manufactures, &c. The southern bank of the Thames, from Deptford to Lambeth, bears a great resemblance to the east end of the town, being occupied by persons engaged in commercial and maritime concerns. London and Westminster are situated in Middlesex, on the N. side of the river Thames. Southwark is situated on the opposite bank, in Surrey. The extent of the whole, from Limehouse and Deptford to Milbank and Vauxhall, is about 7 m.; the breadth varies from 3 to 5.

The extension of this metropolis, since the middle of the last century, has proceeded with unprecedented rapidity, and covered the fields, gardens, and marshes in the vicinity of London with new squares and streets. The direction of the principal streets accompanies the course of the river Thames from east to west; and the cross streets run mostly in a transverse direction from north to south. There are two chief lines of streets from west to east: one of which commences at the north side of Hyde Park, and under the successive names of Oxford-street, St. Giles's, Holborn, Skinner-street, Newgate-street, Cheapside, Cornhill, and Leadenhall-street, is continued to White-chapel and Mile End, on the Essex road, the other begins at the south side of Hyde Park, and consists of Piccadilly, St. James's street, Pall Mall, Charing Cross, the Strand, Fleet-street, Ludgatehill, St. Paul's church-yard, Watling-street, Cannon-street, and Tower-street: whence crossing Tower-hill, it may be said to be further extended two miles along the river side, in Wapping. The streets near the river, and most of the cross ones in the city are very narrow; the broadest and handsomest are to the north of Oxford street and Holborn. They are well paved with granite stones, for the attempts at macadamizing have not succeeded in London, and on each side with flag-stones for the convenience of foot passengers. The subterranean works, constructed for the accommodation of the inhabitants, consisting of sewers, drains, water-pipes, and gas-pipes, are most extensive. The houses are mostly built of brick of a pale colour. The principal squares are Grosvenor, Portman, Berkeley, St. James, Hanover, Manchester, Cavendish, Bedford, Russel, Tavistock, Bloomsbury, Montague, Leicester, Bryanston, and Finsbury squares, and Lincoln's Inn Fields. Among the public buildings, St. Paul's cathedral is the most conspicuous. It is 2,292 feet in circumference, and 340 in height to the top of the cross, and is inferior to none in Europe except St. Peter's at Rome. It contains monuments of many illustrious individuals, who have done honour to their country by their talents or their virtues. Westminster Abbey is a grand specimen of Gothic architecture, said to have been founded by Sebert, king of the East Saxons, in 610. Here most of the English sovereigns have been crowned, and many of them interred. It contains also a great number of monuments erected to the memory of kings, statesmen, heroes, poets, and persons distinguished by genius, learning, and science. The chapel of Henry VII., adjoining, Leland calls The Wonder of the World. St. Stephen's, Walbrook, is a small church of exquisite beauty, the masterpiece of Sir Christopher Wren. Bow Church in Cheapside, St. Bride's in Fleet-street, St. Dunstan's in the East, and several others are worthy of notice; but the far greater number are of plain and ordinary architecture. The churches and chapels belonging to the establishment, in the bills of mortality, including those erected under the recent act of parliament, amount to 266. There are likewise a great number of meetings for Protestant dissenters of all persuasions, 30 foreign Protestant churches, 15 Roman Catholic chapels, and 6 synagogues for the Jews. Besides the royal palaces, there are many fine houses of the princes of the blood, and of the nobility and gentry. The Tower of London is very ancient, but the founder is uncertain. It is surrounded by a wall, and partly by a deep ditch. Here are the jewels and ornaments of the crown, as well as the other regalia; and the menagerie for foreign birds and beasts. The Mint, on Tower Hill, is a very elegant modern building of pure Grecian architecture. The bridges are a great ornament to the metropolis. The most ancient, London bridge, was begun in 1176, and finished in 1209. The length of it is 915 feet. The number of arches was 19, of unequal dimensions; through which, in consequence of their narrowness and clumsy construction, the current rushed with such force as to render the navigation extremely dangerous. This clumsy fabric is however about to be supplanted by the New London bridge, a noble structure of 5 arches, which is now rapidly approaching towards completion. Westminster bridge was commenced in 1730, and opened to the public in 1750. It is 1,223 feet in length, and has 13 large and two small semicircular arches. Blackfriars' bridge, built by Mylne, was completed in 1763. Its length is 965 feet; the breadth of the carriage-way 25, and of the foot-paths 7 feet each. It consists of 9 elliptical arches, the centre one of which is 100 feet wide; and both this and the arch on each side are wider than the celebrated Rialto at Venice. Waterloo bridge, commenced in 1811 and opened in 1816, in the anniversary of the battle which it is designed to commemorate, is one of the noblest structures of the kind in the world. It consists of 9 arches, each 120 feet span and 35 feet elevation. The other bridges are those of Southwark and Vauxhall. Among the other public buildings, which can merely be enumerated here, are Westminster Hall, containing the supreme courts of justice, and adjoining to which are the houses of Lords and Commons; the Sessions House; the Horse Guards, the Treasury, and the Admiralty, at Whitehall; the noble collection of public offices which form that magnificent structure called Somerset Place; the British Museum; the Royal Exchange; the Bank of England; the Excise Office; the East India House; the Mansion House, for the lord mayor, the Monument, in commemoration of the great fire in 1666; the New Post Office, in St. Martins-le-grand, opened in September, 1829; the Stock Exchange, the new Custom House; the new Corn Exchange, erected on the site of the old one in Marklane in 1829; the Herald's College; and the halls of the various city companies. The Adelphi-terrace is the admiration of foreigners, for the noble view which it affords of the river, the bridges and other public buildings, and of the fine hills beyond Lambeth and Southwark. The Inns of court for the study of the law, the colleges, learned societies, and public seminaries; the noble hospitals and the other charitable institutions; the public places of diversion, &c., are too numerous to be mentioned.

Such, on a cursory view of it, is the metropolis of Great Britain, to the extent and opulence of which many causes have contributed. The broad stream of the Thames flowing between London and Southwark, continually agitated by a brisk current or a rapid tide, bring constant supplies of fresh air, which no buildings can intercept. The country around, especially on the London side, is nearly open to some distance; whence, by the action of the sun and winds on a gravelly soil, it is kept tolerably dry in all seasons, and affords no lodgment for stagnant air or water. The cleanliness of London, as well as its supply of water, is generally aided by its situation on the banks of the Thames; and the New River, with many good springs within the city itself, further contribute to the abundance of that necessary element. All these are advantages, with respect to health, in which this metropolis is exceeded by few. Its situation, with regard to the circumstance of navigation, is equally well chosen; had it been placed lower on the Thames, it would have been annoyed by the marshes; had it been higher, it would not have been accessible, as at present, to ships of large burden. It now possesses every advantage that can be derived from a sea-port, and at the same time, by means of its noble river and its canal navigation, enjoys a most extensive communication with the internal parts of the country, which supply it with necessaries, and in return receive from it such commodities as they require. It contains several large wet docks, particularly those called the West India, the East India, the London, and St. Catherine's docks; also dry docks for repairing, and slips for building of ships, besides the king's yard at Deptford, for building men of war. London therefore unites in itself all the benefit arising from navigation and commerce, with those of a metropolis at which all the public business of a great nation is transacted; and is thus both the mercantile and political emporium of these kingdoms. It is the seat of many considerable manufactures; some almost peculiar to itself, as administering to the demands of studied splendor and refined luxury; others in which it participates with the manufacturing towns in general. The most important of its peculiar manufactures is the silk weaving established in Spitalfield by refugees from France. A variety of works in gold, silver, and jewelry, the engraving of prints the making of optical and mathematical instruments are principally executed here, and some of them in greater perfection than in any other country. The porter-brewery, a business of immense extent, is also chiefly carried on in London. To its port are likewise confined some branches of foreign commerce, as the vast East India trade, and those to Turkey and Hud son's Bay. Thus London has risen to its present rank of the first city in Europe with respect to wealth and population.

The number of inhabitants in 1811 was 1,099,104, in 1821, 1,225,360; since which period it has been every year rapidly increasing. The city is divided into 26 wards, each governed by an alderman; and from the alderman the lord mayor is annually chosen. There are likewise 236 common-councilmen, a recorder, a common-serjeant, two sheriffs (who are also sheriffs of Middlesex), a chamberlain, a town-clerk, a city remembrancer, a water-bailiff, and many inferior officers. Westminster is governed by a high steward, who is generally a nobleman, chosen by the dean and chapter, and he has an under steward who officiates for him. Next to him is the high bailiff, chosen also by the dean and chapter, whose power resembles that of a sheriff. The suburbs are under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the county, and there are also several police offices where magistrates sit every day for the examination of offenders and the determination of various complaints in a summary way. During the last three years the police of the metropolis and suburbs has been strengthened by a new establishment, under the superintendance of a military officer, who receives instructions from the Home Department in Whitehall. The cost of this establishment will be greater by about 30 per cent, than that of the watchmen, which it has superseded. This, however, is more than compensated by its superior efficiency, the former "guardians of the night" being generally decrepid from age and infirmities, while the new police is entirely composed of men in the prime of life, and of unblemished character. Southwark was long independent of London, but Edward III. granted it to the city. It was then called the village of Southwark, and afterwards named the bailiwick. In the reign of Edward VI. it was formed into a 26th ward, by the name of Bridge Ward Without. On the death of the alderman of this ward, he is succeeded by the next in seniority, to whatever ward he may belong, this ward being considered as a sinecure, and consequently the most proper for "the father of the city." The city has likewise a high bailiff and steward here. The city of London is a bishop's see, and is represented in parliament by four members, elected by the livery, two other members are elected by the householders of Westminster, and two by those of Southwark. To attempt an enumeration of the events by which this great capital has been distinguished, within the limits of a work like this, would of course be absurd; but we cannot omit to mention the plague, in 1665, which cut off 68,596 people, and the dreadful conflagration, in 1666, by which the cathedral and many other churches, with 13,200 houses, were destroyed. London is 225 m. N. N. W. of Paris, 395 S. of Edinburgh, and 338 E. S. E. of Dublin. Long. 0. 5. W., lat. 51. 31. N.

Londonderry, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 40 English m. long and 33 broad bounded on the W. by Donegal, N. by the ocean,

S. and S. W. by Tyrone, and E. by Antrim. It contains, according to the last census, 93,809 inhabitants, is divided into 31 parishes, and sends 2 members to parliament. It is a fruitful champaign country; and the greater part of it was given by James I. to an incorporated company of London merchants. The linen manufacture flourishes through every part of the city.

Londonderry, a city and sea-port of Ireland, capital of the foregoing county, and a bishop's see. It is still surrounded by walls, and celebrated for a long siege it sustained against James II. in 1689. It is governed by a mayor, and sends one member to parliament. The principal commerce is with America and the W. Indies. Including the suburbs, it contains 18,000 inhabitants, and is seated on the river Foyle, over which is a wooden bridge, 1,068 feet in length. Londonderry is 4 m. S. of Lough Foyle, and 115 N. W. of Dublin.

Londonderry, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H., with a manufacture of linen, cloth, and thread; seated near the head of Beaver River, which runs into the Merrimaek, 38 m. S. S. W. of Portsmouth. Pop. 1,469.

Londonderry, p.t. Windham Co. Vt. 27 m. S. W. Windsor. Pop. 1,302; also towns in Chester, Dauphin, and Bedford Cos. Pa. and Guernsey Co. Ohio.

Longacoming, p.v. Gloucester Co. N. J., 16 m. S. E. Philadelphia.

Long Loch, an arm of the sea in Scotland, which, from the frith of Clyde, extends 20 m. N. between the counties of Dumbarton and Argyle. It is from 1 to 2 m. in breadth; and near the middle, on the Argyle side, it sends off a small branch called Loch Gail.

Longford, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 25 m. long and 20 broad; bounded on the N. W. by Leitrim, N. E. by Cavan, S. E. by West Meath, and W. by the river Shannon, which parts it from Roscommon. It is divided into 25 parishes, contains 107,576 inhabitants, and sends two members to parliament. The country in general is fertile, but interspersed in some parts with bogs, morasses, and forests; the flat parts, along the Shannon, are subject to inundation. It contains several lakes, and besides the Shannon is watered by the Inny, the Camlin, the Fallen, and numerous inferior streamlets. Oats form the chief article of agricultural export.

Longford, a borough of Ireland, capital of the above country. Much linen is manufactured in the town and neighbourhood, and great quantities of flax sent to other parts. It is seated on the Camlin, 70 m. (English) W. N. W. of Dublin. Long. 7. 40. W., lat. 52. 48. N.

Longforung, a town of Scotland, in the S. E. corner of Perthshire, on the frith of Tay, 4 m. W. by S. of Dundee.

Long Island, an island belonging to the State of New York, extending along the coast of Connecticut, from S. W. to N. E., about 140 m. in length and 10 m. in average breadth. It is divided into three counties, King, Queen's, and Suffolk. At the W. extremity it forms the bay of New York. On the side of the ocean the island is bordered by an immense beach of sand. In other parts, it is much indented with numerous bays; and Gardiner's Bay, with several others, occupies an extent of near 30 m. at the E. end. These bays also encompass many islands, several of which are of considerable extent. A ridge or drain of low hills extends from the west end to the eastern extremity. The waters are stored with a vast abundance and variety of fish, and Long-Island has long been celebrated for its wild fowl and various forest game. Much of the land in the east is a light sand, still clothed with vast forests of pine; and in these are found abundance of game.'

East of the Hempstead plains, the island is covered with shrubby oaks and pines, called the brushy plains; and here are found the grouse, or, heath-hens. Farther eastward, towards Islip and Fire-place, are streams where there is good trout fishing; and towards the centre of the island, is plenty of wild deer, that are hunted and killed by way-laying them as they are driven along by hounds. In October and November, Brent, wild geese, and other waterfowl, are killed in great numbers along the bays and inlets. Deer cannot lawfully be killed on Long Island from January to July; nor heath-hens, partridges, quails, or woodcocks, from 1st April to 5th October.

The face of the country on the north side of the island is hilly, and in some places full of rocky boulders; while on the south, the country is mostly free from large stones, and presents a gradual slope towards the ocean, which appears to have formerly washed the base of the hills.

Long Island Sound, is from 3 to 25 m. broad, extending the whole length of Long Island, and dividing it from Connecticut. It communicates with the Atlantic at the E. end of the island, and with the harbour of New York at the W.

Longmeadow, p.t. Hampden Co. Mass. on the Connecticut, 6 m. below Springfield. Pop. 1,257.

Long-nan, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Se-tchuen. Long. 104. 18. E., lat. 32. 22. N.

Longnor, a town of Staffordshire, Eng. seated near the river Dove, 31 m. N. by E. of Stafford, and 152 N. N. W. of London.

Longtown, a town in Cumberland, Eng. seated on the Esk, 9 m. N. of Carlisle, and 310 N. N. W. of London.

Longtown, p.v. Rowan Co. N. C. 150 m. W. Raleigh.

Longuc, a town of France, department of Maine-et-Loire, 7 m. N. of Saumur.

Longuion, a town of France, department of Moselle. Here is a considerable iron forge and cannon foundry. 10 m. S. W. of Longwy, and 36 N. W. of Metz.

Longwy, a town of France, department of Moselle with a castle. It is divided into the Old and New town, the latter of which is fortified. It is seated on a rocky eminence, on the river Chiers, 32 m. N. N. W. of Mentz. Long. 5. 44. E., lat. 49. 32. N.

Lonicera, p.v. Baldwin Co. Geo.

Lons le Saulnier, a town of France, capital of the department of Jura. It derives its name from the salt springs in its vicinity, and is seated on the Solvan, 62 m. S. E. of Dijon. Long. 5. 30. E., lat. 46. 37. N.

Loo, a town of the Netherlands, in W. Flanders, 20 m. N. N. W. of Ypres.

Loo-choo, or Lieou-kiou, the general name of 36 islands lying between Formosa and Japan. The Great Loo-choo is 50 m. long and from 12 to 15 broad; the others are inconsiderable. They were very imperfectly known to Europeans, till visited by captain Hall and Mr. M'Leod on their return from the late embassy to China. The climate and soil seem to be among the happiest on the globe. The fruits and vegetable productions are of the most exquisite description. The inhabitants are diminutive in their stature, but strong, and well made. Their disposition appears to be peculiarly gay, hospitable, and affectionate, but they showed that strong aversion to receive strangers into their country which is characteristic of China, Japan, and all the neighbouring regions. The king is tributary to China, and the government resembles that of the Chinese. The capital is Kin-tching, about 5 m. from its port of Napa-kiang. Long. 127. 52. E., lat. 26. 14. N.

Looe, East and West, two decayed boroughs in Cornwall, Eng. separated by a creek, over which is a narrow stone bridge. They are supported chiefly by the pilchard fishery, and an inconsiderable coasting trade. Together they send as many members to parliament as the city of London. The market, held at East Looe, is on Saturday. 13 m. W. of Plymouth, and 233 W. by S. of London.

Lookout Cape, a cape of N. Carolina, S. of Cape Hatteras, and opposite Core Sound. Long. 76. 48. W., lat. 34. 22. N.

Lookout Mountain, a ridge in the Northwestern part of Georgia extending to Tennessee river.

Looz, or Lootz, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, 14 m. N. N. W. of Liege.

Lopatka Cape, the S. extremity of Kamtschatka. Long. 156. 45. E., lat. 51. 0. N. See Kuriles.

Lopham, North and South, two adjoining parishes in Norfolk, 4 m. S. E. of East Harling.

Lopo Gonsalve, Cape, a long and narrow peninsula on the coast of Guinea, low, flat, and covered with trees. It affords a good harbour, and near the cape is a village, where provisions are plentiful. Long. 8. 30. E., lat. 0. 45. S.

Loop, p.v. Giles Co. Va. 274 m. W. Richmond.

Lora, a town of Spain, in Seville, on the Guadalquivir, 28 m. N. E. of Seville.

Loramie, a township of Shelby Co. Ohio.

Lorain, a county of Ohio. Pop. 5,636. Elyria is the capital.

Lorbus (the ancient Laribus Colonia), a town of the kingdom of Tunis, with a castle, and fine remains of antiquity. It is seated in a plain, fertile in corn, 150 m. S. W. of Tunis. Long. 9. 0. E., lat. 35. 35. N.

Lorca, a town of Spain, in Murcia, divided into the Upper and Lower Town. The former has narrow, crooked, and ill paved streets; the latter is regularly and neatly built. It contains nine churches and several monasteries, and has extensive manufactures of saltpetre. In 1802 the bursting of an immense reservoir, containing water for the purpose of irrigation, occasioned much damage to the town. It is seated on an eminence near the Sengonera. 40 m. W. S. W. of Murcia. Long. 1. 22. W., lat. 37. 25. N.

Lord Howe's Group, an extensive group of islands, in the S. Pacific, thickly covered with wood, among which the cocoa-nut is very distinguishable. The natives are of a dark copper colour; their hair tied in a knot on the back of the head; and they seem to have some method of taking off the beard; for they appear as clean shaved. Their arms and thighs are tattooed in the manner described by Captain Cook of some of the natives of the islands he visited in these seas; and some are painted with red and white streaks.—They wear a wrapper round their middle. Long. from 159. 15. to 159. 37. E., lat. 5. 30. S.

Lord Howe's Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, discovered in 1783 by lieutenant King. Many excellent turtle have been caught here on a sandy beach; and it abounds with a variety of birds, which were so unaccustomed to be disturbed that the seamen went near enough to knock them down with a stick. At its end are two high mountains, nearly perpendicular from the sea, the southernmost named Mount Gower. About 14 m. to the S. is a remarkable rock, named Ball's Pyramid, which at a distance had much the appearance of a steeple. The island is 3.1-2 m. long and very narrow. Long. 159. 0. E., lat. 31. 36. N.

Lorenzo San, a town of Mexico, province of New Biscay, with 500 inhabitants, whose employment consists in cultivating the grape.—There are numerous settlements and inconsiderable islands of this name in South America.

Loreo, a town of Austrian Italy, in Rivigo, on the Adige, 20 m. E. of Rivigo.

Loretto, a fortified town of Italy, in the papal states. The cathedral contains the Casa Santa or Holy House, in which it is pretended the virgin Mary lived at Nazareth. According to the legend, it was carried by angels from Galilee into Dalmatia, and thence to the place where it now stands. This house, or chapel, is 31 feet long, 15 broad, and 18 high; the inner part very old, but cased with marble on the outside. The famous lady of Loretto, who holds the infant Jesus in her arms, stands upon the principal altar, in a niche of silver; this statue is of cedar wood, three feet high, but her face can hardly be seen, on account of the numerous gold and silver lamps around her. She is clothed with cloth of gold, set off with jewels; and the little Jesus is covered with a shirt, holds a globe in his hand, and is adorned with rich jewels. Those who go on pilgrimage to Loretto, after having performed their devotion, make the Virgin a present; so that the treasure of this chapel is immensely rich. The inhabitants of this town subsist principally by agriculture and gardening, and many of them are shoemakers, tailors, and sellers of chaplets. Loretto was taken by the French in 1796, and the church despoiled of its treasures: even the Virgin was carried away but restored in 1802. It is seated on a mountain, 3 m. from the gulf of Venice, 12 S. E. of Ancona, and 115 N. E. of Rome. Long. 13. 36. E., lat. 43. 27. N.

Loretto, p.v. Essex Co. Va. 75 m. N. E. Richmond.

Lorgues, a town of France, in Provence, on the Argens, 16 m. W. of Frejus.

L'Orient, a fortified modern sea-port of France, department of Morbihan. It is built with considerable regularity; the streets are wide, the public squares spacious and handsome, and the harbour large, secure, and easy of access. Formerly it was a very flourishing town, the French East India Company making it the exclusive entrepot of their imported goods. It has still some trade, and is a place of importance on account of its magazines for the navy. The chief manufacture is of salt. The British made an unsuccessful attempt upon it in 1746. It is seated on the bay of Port Louis, at the influx of the Scorff, 340 m. W. by S. of Paris. Long. 3. 20. W., lat. 49. 44. N.

Lorrock, a town of Germany, in Baden, 6 m. N. E. of Bale.

Lorraine, an extensive district of the N. E. of France, between Champagne and Alsace, and now forming the departments of Meurthe, Moselle, and Vosges. It abounds in all sorts of corn, wine, hemp, flax, and rape-seed.

Lorraine, p.t. Jefferson Co. N. Y. 20 m. S. E. Sackett's Harbour. Pop. 1,727.

Lossiemouth, a village of Scotland, in Murray shire, at the mouth of the river Lossie, 7 m. N. E. of Elgin, of which it is the port.

Lost Creek, a township of Miami Co. Ohio.

Lot, a river of France, which rises in the department of Lozere, begins to be navigable at Cahors, and enters the Garonne near Aiguillon.

Lot, a department of France, consisting of the former district of Quercy, in Guienne. It takes its name from the river Lot, which crosses it from E. to W. It is bounded on the N. by Correze, E. by Cantal and Aveyron, S. by Tarn-et-Garonne, and W. by Lot-et-Garonne and Dordogne. Its pastures feed numerous flocks, which constitute a great part of the commerce. The climate is mild and healthy; and the soil, consisting of fat rich earth, is cultivated with horses, and yields more than sufficient for its population, estimated at 275,296. Cahors is the capital.

Lot-et-Garonne, a department of France, including that of the former province of Guienne, bounded on the N. by Dordogne. E. by Tarn-et-Garonne, S. by Gers, and W. by Landes and the Gironde. It has its name from the rivers Lot and Garonne. Its pastures are but indifferent, and artificial meadows are little known. The land, being much covered with heath, is cultivated with oxen; and a large proportion of the department is incapable of cultivation, consisting of rugged hills or sandy deserts. Agen is the capital.

Lotinbiere, a seignitory of Buckingham Co. L. C. on the S. side of the St. Lawrence, 40 m. above Quebec.

Lothian. See Haddingtonshire, Edinburghshire, and Linlithgowshire.

Loudeac, a town of France, department of Cotes du Nord, 25 m. S. of St Brieux.

Loudon, a county of the E. district of Virginia, on the Potomac, adjoining Fairfax, Berkley, and Fauquier counties. It is about 50 m. in length and 20 in breadth. Pop. 21,338. Leesburg is the chief town.

London, a town of France, department of Vienne, 30 m. N. W. of Poitiers.

Loudon, p.t. Merrimack Co. N. H. on the E. side of the Merrimack, 45 m. N. W. Portsmouth. Pop. 1,642; also a p.v. Franklin Co. Pa. 63 m. S. W. Harrisburg.

Loudonville, p.t. Richland Co. Ohio.

Loughborough, a township in Frontenac Co. U. C.

Loughborough, a town in Leicestershire, Eng. It has a large church, with a handsome tower, seven meeting-houses for dissenters; also a free grammar school, and a charity school. The chief manufactures are those of cotton spinning, lace, and hosiery. By means of the Loughborough canal, the river, and rail-roads, it carries on a brisk trade particularly in coals. Many of the houses have an old and irregular appearance, but great improvement have lately taken place. It is seated near the Soar, 11 m. N. of Leicester and 109 N. N. W. London.

Loughrea, a town of Ireland, in the county of Galway, near a lake of the same name, 15 m. S. W. of Galway.

Louhans, a town of France, department of Upper Saone, situate on a kind of island between the rivers Seilles. Vaillere, and Solman, 18 m. S. E. of Chalons.

Louisa, a county of the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 16,151; also a p.v. Lawrence Co. Ken. 180 m. E. Frankfort.

Louis, Fort, an important barrier fortress of France, in Alsace, on the Rhine, 12 m. E. of Haguenuau.

Louis, St. an island of Africa, at the mouth of the river Senegal, with a fort, built by the French. It was taken in 1758 by the English, and ceded to them in 1763. In the American war, it was taken by the French, and kept by them after the peace of 1783. It is flat, sandy and barren. Long. 16. 15. W., lat. 16. 0. N.

Louis, St. a sea-port and fortress of St. Domingo, on the S. W. coast, at the head of a bay of its name. The exports are coffee, cotton, and indigo, 70 m. W. S. W. of Port au Prince. Long. 73. 32. W., lat. 18. 16. N.

Louis, Fort, an important barrier fortress in the N. E. of France, constructed by Vauban in 1686; on an island in the Rhine. 12. m. E. Haguenuau.

Louis de Ramsay, seignitory, Richelieu Co. Lower Canada.

Louisiade, an archipelago in the eastern seas, lying S. E. of New Guinea, and extending about 400 m. in length, by about 160 in breadth. The centre lies nearly under 10. S. lat. and 152. 25. E. long.

Louis, St. a lake of N. America, formed by the junction of the Ottawa with the St. Lawrence. It is 12 m. long and 6 broad.

Louis, St. a river N. America, which has its source near the eastern head waters of the Mississippi, and falls into lake Superior, on the west shore. It is navigable 150 m. Long. 91. 52. W., lat. 46. 44. N.

Louis de Maranhum, St., a sea-port of Brazil capital of the island of Maranhum, and a bishop's see, with a strong castle. It is the residence of a captain general, and contains a custom-house and treasury. The churches and convents are numerous, and the houses, though only one story high, are many of them neat. The harbour is tolerably large, but the entrance is difficult. It stands on the E. side of the river Mearim, near the Atlantic Ocean. Long. 43. 37. W., lat. 2. 30. S.

Louisa, a town of European Russia, on a bay of the gulf of Finland, 30 m. E. N. E. of Helsingfors.

Louisburg, the capital of the island of Cape Breton, with a citadel, and an excellent harbour, nearly four leagues in circumference. It was taken by the English in 1745, restored to the French in 1748, taken by the English in 1758, and ceded to them in 1763. The chief source of trade is the cod-fishery. Long. 59. 55. W., lat. 45. 54. N.

Louisburg, p.t. Franklin Co. N. C. on Tar river, 23 m. N. E. Raleigh.

Louisiana, one of the United States, bounded N. by the territory of Arkansas and the State of Mississippi, E. by Mississippi, S. by the Gulf of Mexico, and W. by the Mexican province of Texas. It extends from 29. to 33. N. lat. and from 89. to 94. W. long. and contains 48,220 square miles. It is intersected by the Mississippi, Red and Washita rivers and many inferior streams; the western limit is washed by the Sabine.

Three quarters of this state are without an elevation, that can properly be called a hill. The pine woods generally have a surface of a very particular character, rising into fine swells, with table surfaces on the summit, and valleys from thirty to forty feet deep. But they are without any particular range, and like the waves of a high and regular sea. The alluvial soil of course is level, and the swamps, which are only inundated alluvions, are dead flats. A range of hills commences in gentle elevations in Opelousas, rises gradually and diverges towards the Sabine. In the vicinity of Natchitoches it preserves a distance intermediate between the Sabine and Red rivers, and continues to increase in elevation to the western parts of the state. Seen from the pine hills above Natchitoches, they have in the distance, the blue outline, and the general aspect of a range of mountains. Another line of hills, not far from Alexandria, commences on the north side of Red river, and separating between the waters of that river and Dugdemony, unites with another line of singular shaped mamelle hills, that bound the alluvions of the Washita, as bluffs, gradually diverging from that river as they pass beyond the western limits of the state. That very remote part of the parish of Natchitoches, called Allen's settlement, is a high and rolling country. There are also considerable hills beyond the Mississippi alluvions east of that river. But, generally speaking, Louisiana may be considered as one immense plain, divided, as respects its surface, into pine woods, prairies, alluvions, swamps, and hickory and oak lands.

The pine woods are generally rolling; sometimes, but not often level. They have almost invariably a poor soil. The greater proportion of the prairies is second rate land. Some of those west of Opelousas, and between Washita and Red river are even sterile. Some parts of the prairies of Opelousas are of great fertility, and those of Attakapas still more so. As a general fact, they are more level, than those of the upper country. A large belt of these prairies near the gulf is low, marshy, and in rainy weather inundated. A very considerable extent of them has a cold clayey soil, with a hard crust near the surface. In other places the soil is of inky blackness, and disposed in the hot and dry season to crack in fissures of a size to admit a man's arm.

The bottoms are generally rich, but in very different degrees. Those of the Mississippi and Red river, and the bayous connected with those streams, are more fertile and productive, than the streams west of them, and between them and the Sabine. The fertility of the richer bottoms of the Mississippi and Red river is sufficiently attested by the prodigious growth of the timber, the luxuriance, size and rankness of the cane, and the cotton. The tangles of vines and creepers, the astonishing size of the weeds, and the strength of vegetation in general.

The most fertile district of Louisiana is a belt of land called the coast lying along the Mississippi in the neighbourhood of New Orleans. It consists of that part of the bottom or alluvion of the Mississippi, which commences with the first cultivation above the Balize, about forty miles below New Orleans and extends 150 m. above the city. This belt, on each side of the river, is secured by an embankment called a levee, from six to eight feet in height, and sufficiently broad, for the most part to furnish a fine high way.—The river in ordinary inundations would cover the greater part of this belt from two to six feet in depth. It is from one to two miles in width, and perhaps a richer tract of land in the same extent can not be found on the globe. The levee extends something higher on the west, than on the east side of the river. Above the levee on the east bank of the river are the parishes of Baton Rouge, and East and West Feliciana. The latter parish received its name from its pleasant surface of fertile hills and valleys, and its union of desirable circumstances for a planting country. This parish presents a spectacle, very uncommon in this country; the hills are covered with laurels, and forest trees, that denote the richest soils and which are uncommonly productive. Here are some of the richest planters and best plantations in the state. The mouth of Bayou Sarah, the point of shipment for this region, sends great quantities of cotton to New Orleans. Some of the plantations on this Bayou have from five to eight hundred acres under cultivation, worked by a large number of hands.

West of the Mississippi, the Bayous Lafourche and Plaquemine, effluxes, or outlets from the Mississippi, have the same conformation of banks and the same qualities of soil with the parent stream; and, where not inundated, are equally fertile. The sugar cane thrives as well upon their banks. No inconsiderable portion of Attakapas is of great fertility, as are smaller portions of Opelousas, which is, however, more generally adapted to become a grazing country. The Teche, which meanders through Opelousas and Attakapas has generally a very fertile alluvion, the lower courses of which are embellished with fine plantations of the sugar cane. On the Atchafalaya the lands are rich, but too generally inundated. The Courtableau, running through Opelousas, has probably as rich a soil, as is to be found in that parish. Approaching Red River from Opelousas, by Bayou Boeuf, we find on that bayou a soil, which some consider the richest cotton land in Louisiana. Bayou Rouge has also a fine soil, though it is as yet principally in a state of nature. Bayou Robert, still nearer to Red river, is of extraordinary fertility, and the cane brake along its bank is of astonishing luxuriance. Bayou Rapide, which gives name to the parish, through which it runs, is a beautiful tract of land; and the belt on either bank is laid out along its whole course in fine cotton plantations.

The bottoms of Red river itself are well known, as having a soil of extraordinary fertility: and the lower courses of this river constitute the paradise of cotton planters. The colour of the soil is of a darkish red, and appears to derive its great fertility from a portion of salt intimately mixed with it, and from its peculiar friability. It derives its red colour from red oxide of iron. It is a wide and deep valley, covered, while in a state of nature, with a dark and heavy forest. Its soil has been accumulating for unknown ages from the spoils of the Mexican mountains, and the vast prairies through which it rolls in its upper courses. All the bayous of Red river, and they are numerous almost beyond computation, partake of the character of the main river.

Vast extents of marsh interpose between the sea and the cultivable lands. The lakes and inlets and sounds are connected by an inextricable tissue of communications and passes accessible by small vessels and bay craft, and impossible to be navigated except by pilots, perfectly acquainted with the waters. The shore is indented by numberless small bays, very few of them affording sufficient water to shelter vessels. Berwick's bay is the only one that has any considerable extent.

A very great proportion of the surface of this state is covered with prairies. Almost all these prairies are connected, and form, like the waters of the Mississippi, a family, through which the connection of all the branches may be traced. The prairies, that are included under the general name of Attakapas, are the first, that occur west of the Mississippi. The parish of Attakapas is situated in these prairies. The name implies 'man eater,' in the language of the savages who formerly inhabited it, and who are reported to have been cannibals. It is an immense plain of grass, spreading from the Atchafalaya on the north to the gulf on the south. Its contents are commonly stated at 5,000 square miles. But it is thought this computation is too large. Being open to the gulf, it is generally fanned by the refreshing breezes of that sea. Its aspect of extreme fertility, its boundless plain of grass, its cheering views, its dim verdant outline, mingling with the blue of the sea, white houses seen in the distance, innumerable cattle and horses grazing in the plain, or reposing here and there under the shade of its wooded points, has an indescribable pleasantness to the traveller, who has been toiling on his way through the tangle, and the swamps, and along the stagnant lakes, and the dark and deep forest of the Mississippi bottom. All at once he leaves the stifling air, the muschetoes, the rank cane, the annoying nettles, and the dark brown shade, and emerges into this noble and cheerful plain, and feels the cool and salubrious breeze of the gulf.

Opelousas prairie is still larger than the other, and computed to contain nearly 8,000 sq. m. It is divided by bayous, wooded grounds, points and bends, and other natural boundaries, into a number of prairies, which have separate names and marks of distinction. Taken in its whole extent, it is bounded by the Attakapas prairie on the east, pine woods and hills on the north, the Sabine on the west, and the gulf on the south. The soil, though in many places very fertile, is in general less so than the former. It atones for that deficiency by being more salubrious, being generally deemed the healthiest region in the state. There are here considerable cotton plantations, and some of indigo; and the parish which bears its name, is one of the most populous in the state. The people of the other parish are devoted to the growth of the sugar cane. This is the centre of the land of shepherds, and the paradise of those who deal in cattle. The greater number of the people are chiefly devoted to that employment and they number their cattle by thousands.

Bellevue prairie is partly in Opelousas. partly in Attakapas. Calcasieu and Sabine prairies are names that designate the different forms, shapes and openings of this continuous line of prairies, as it stretches along the settlements from the Plaquemine to the Sabine.

Some of them, as Opelousas, are of immense extent. That of the Sabine is boundless to the vision. Calcasieu is seventy miles long by twenty wide. They are generally so level, as to strike the eye as a perfect plain. They have, however, slight swells and declinations, sufficient to carry the water from them. Though after long rains they are extremely wet, and immense tracts are covered with water. They have a gentle and imperceptible slope towards the gulf, and generally terminate, before they reach the shore, in wet marshes, into which, when the south wind blows, the sea is driven. These marshes are covered with a luxuriant growth of tall, reedy grass, called cane grass.--In various parts of these prairies, there are islands of timbered lands. They generally have an appearance of such regularity and beauty, that a stranger is with difficulty convinced, that they are not clumps of trees, planted out in circular, square, or triangular form for the beauty of their appearance. It would be impossible to convey to one, who has not felt it, an idea of the effect produced by one of these circular clumps of trees, seeming a kind of tower of verdure, rising from an ocean of grass. Wherever a bayou, or a stream crosses the prairie, it is marked with a fringe of timber, which strikes the eye of an observer, like the lines of trees in landscape painting. All the rivers, lakes and bayous of this State abound with alligators. On Red river before it was navigated by steamboats it was not uncommon to see hundreds at a time along the shores or on the immense rafts of floating or stranded timber, groaning or uttering their bellowing noises like thousands of furious bulls about to fight, and huddling together so closely that the smaller ones would get upon the backs of the larger. At one period thousands of them were killed for the sake of their skins which were made into leather for shoes, boots, &c. But it was found that this leather was not sufficiently fine and close grained to keep out the water. The alligators, are sometimes 12 and 15 feet in length, and are found in all the states south of North Carolina.

The climate of Louisiana is hot and moist. In summer it is extremely unhealthy, especially in the neighbourhood of marshy spots. It is however favourable to almost every vegetable production of warm countries. Here flourish the sugar cane, orange, lemon, cotton-plant, tobacco, rice, maize, sweet potato, &c. Sugar and cotton are the staple articles of cultivation. The sugar cane is principally raised upon that tract called the coast, upon the shores of the gulf, and upon the bayous of the Mississippi. The capital invested in sugar estates was estimated in 1828 at 45,000,000 dollars: the produce of sugar for the same year, was 88,878,000 pounds. The commerce of the state consists in the exportation of these products, and a great variety of others brought down the Mississippi from the western states. New Orleans is the centre of commerce for the state. The imports for 1829 were valued at 6,857,209 dollars; the exports of domestic produce at 10,898,183 dollars; total exports 12,386,060. The shipping of the state in 1825 amounted to 51,903 tons. The pop. is 215,575, of whom 109,631 are slaves.

The inhabitants of the state consist of remnants of the former Spanish and French possessors intermixed with Americans. The French are very numerous and exhibit in their manners the customary gaiety and volatility of that nation. This is one of the few states in the Union where the slaves exceed the freemen. The Catholics are the most numerous religious sect; they have above 20 parishes in the state. The Baptists have 14 ministers; the Methodists 6; the Presbyterians 5, and the Episcopalians 3. The state is divided into the Eastern and Western Districts, which are subdivided into 31 parishes. New Orleans is the seat of government. The Legislature is styled the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are chosen for 4 years and the Representatives for 2. The Governor is chosen for 4 years, and is elected by the legislature from the highest two previously voted for by the people. Suffrage is universal. There are colleges in this state at Jackson and New Orleans, but general education has received little care.

This state consists of the Southern part of the extensive country purchased by the United States from France in 1803 for 15,000,000 dollars. It was first settled by the French, and afterwards occupied by the Spanish, but subsequently came again into the hands of the French. Louisiana under its present limits was admitted into the Union as a state in 1812.

Louisiana, p.v. Pike Co. Missouri, on the Mississippi. 96 m. N. W. St. Louis.

Louisville, p.t. Jefferson Co. Kentucky, on the south bank of the Ohio, at the falls. This is a busy and flourishing town, situated upon a sloping plain at the junction of Beargrass Creek with the Ohio. The chief declivity of the falls begins a quarter of a mile below the town. The three principal streets run parallel with the river, and command a pleasant view of the opposite shore. The streets are paved with blocks of lime-stone. The buildings are mostly of brick. The town has considerable manufactures and a thriving river trade. Pop. 10,352.

Louisville and Portland Canal, passes round the falls of the Ohio, through the town above mentioned to Portland below. It is 2 m. in length and is cut through a limestone rock. It has several locks which overcome a descent of 24 feet. It admits the passage of the largest steam-boats and thus opens a line of free navigation from Pittsburg to the sea. This canal was finished in 1831.

Louisville, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. on the St. Lawrence, 30 m. below Ogdensburg. Pop. 1,076. Also a p.t. Jefferson Co. Geo. 50. m. S. W. Augusta.

Louistown, a village in Talbot Co. Maryland.

Louis, St. a county of Missouri, on the Mississippi. Pop. 14,907.

Louis, St. the capital of the above county, and the chief commercial town in the state of Missouri, stands on the Mississippi, 18 below the mouth of the Missouri, on a gently rising ground and is accessible by steam-boats from New Orleans at the lowest stages of the water. The town was founded by the French from Canada in 1764 and many of the inhabitants are still French. Here is a Catholic college and cathedral. A considerable part of the western fur-trade centres here, and the town is otherwise well situated for commerce. The passage to New Orleans is 1,200 m. by the river, and there are 6 steam-boats constantly plying between these two places. There are also the same number constantly running between this place and Louisville, besides others to different places. The town is regularly laid out and extends 2 m. along the river. Pop. 5,852. Lat. 38,26. N., long. 89. 56. W.

Loule, a town of Portugal, in Algarva, surrounded by antique walls, and seated on a river of the same name, 10 m. N. W. of Faro.

Loungan, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Chan-si, situate near the source of the Queyho, 270 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 116. 56. E., lat. 31. 46. N.

Lourde, a town of France, department of Upper Pyrenees, with a castle on a rock, 10 m. N. W. of Bagneres.

Louristan, a mountainous but fertile district, of Irak, in Persia, bordering upon Khuisistan. It is abundantly watered, and the pastures are most luxuriant, but agriculture is quite neglected. The inhabitants are a barbarous and independent race, and reside always in tents. The only town is Korumabad.

Louth, a corporate town in Lincolnshire, Eng. with manufactures of blankets and carpets, and also a large soap manufactory. Here is a noble Gothic church, with a lofty spire; also five meeting-houses for dissenters, a free school, founded by Edward VI., and another founded in 1677. It has a navigation, by means of the river Lud, and a canal, to the German Ocean, at Tetney Creek. 28 m. N. E. of Lincoln, and 141 N. of London.

Louth, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 27 m. long and 18 broad; bounded on the N. by Armagh and Carlingford Bay, E. by the Irish Sea, W. by Monaghan and E. Meath, and S. by E. Meath, from which it is parted by the river Boyne. It is a fertile country, contains 61 parishes, with about 101,000 inhabitants, and sends two members to parliament.

Louth, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name, containing the ruins of an ancient abbey, founded by St. Patrick. 18 m. N. N. W. of Drogheda.

Loutre, a village in Montgomery Co. Missouri.

Louvain, a city of the Netherlands, in S. Brabant, with an old castle, and a celebrated university. Its walls are nearly 9 m. in circumference, but within them are many gardens and vineyards. The churches, convents, and public buildings are magnificent. Large quantities of cloth were formerly made here, but this trade is decayed, and the town is now chiefly noted for good beer. It was taken by the French in 1746, 1792, and 1794 and is seated on the Doyle, 14 m. E. by N. of Brussels, and 20. S. E. of Antwerp. Long. 4 41. E., lat. 50. 53. N.

Louviers, a handsome town of France, department of Eure, with a considerable manufacture of fine cloths. It is seated on the Eure, 10 m. N. of Evreux, and 55 N. W. of Paris.

Louvres, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise, 14 m. N. of Paris

Lovell, p.t. Oxford Co. Me. 62 m. N. W. Portland. Pop. 14,508.

Lovington, p.v. Nelson Co. Va. 110 m. N. W. Richmond.

Loewenstein, a town of Germany, in Wurtemberg, capital of a county of the same name, 9 m. E. S. E. of Heilbrunn, and 33 N. N. E. of Stuttgart.

Lovenstein, a fort and ancient castle of the Netherlands, in the province of Guelderland, situated at the W. end of the island of Bommelwert. In this castle, in 1618, Hugo Grotius was confined, and after three years imprisonment was conveyed away by a stratagem of his wife, in a returned box used for the purpose of carrying books. It is 18 m. S. E. of Rotterdam.

Loxestot, a town of Suffolk, Eng. Its church is a fine Gothic building; and it has beside a chapel of ease, several dissenting meeting-houses, and two grammar schools. The chief trade is in the mackerel and herring fisheries; and it is much frequented for sea-bathing. Here are forts and batteries for protecting ships in the roads. The coast being dangerous, here are two light-houses, and a floating light was stationed off this port in 1815. It stands on a cliff, the most easterly point of Great Britain, 10 m. S. of Yarmouth, and 114 N. E. of London. Long. 1. 44. E., lat. 52. 29. N.

Loices-water, a lake in Cumberland, Eng. one mile long and a quarter of a mile broad. It is of no great depth, but abounds with pike and perch. In opposition to all the other lakes, it has its course from N. to S., and under the lofty Mell-break, runs into the N. end of Cromach-water.

Lochill, a township in Lehigh Co. Pa. 12 m. N. W. Allentown.

Lowell, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. on the Merrimack, 25 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 6,474. This place has grown up within a few years by means of its manufactures, and is now one of the most important manufacturing towns in the United States. It has the waters of the Merrimack at command, with a fall of above 30 feet. The largest manufacturing establishments in the country are at this place; they belong to 8 or 10 different companies. The town is built with regularity and is rapidly increasing. For further particulars of the manufactures of Lowell, see Massachusetts.

Lower Smithfield, p.v. Northampton Co. Pa. 15 m. N. E. Easton.

Lowicz, a town of Poland, with a strong fortress, seated on the Bzura, 42 m. W. of Warsaw.

Lowositz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutneritz. In 1756 the greatest part of it was burnt in an obstinate engagement between the Saxons and Prussians. It is seated on the Egra, 5 m. W. S. W. of Leutneritz.

Loutherscille, p.v. Lewis Co. Va. 365 m. N. W. Richmond.

Loville, p.t. Lewis Co. N. J. 57 m. N. Utica. Pop. 2,334.

Loza, or Loja, a town of Spain, in Granada, with a royal salt-work, and a copper forge; seated in a fertile country, on the river Xenil, 28 m. W. of Granada.

Loxa, or Loja, a town of Quito, capital of a province of the same name, famous for producing fine Jesuits' bark and cochineal. Carpets of remarkable fineness are manufactured here, but the town is much decayed. It stands at the head of a N. W. branch of the Amazon, 150 m. E. N. E. of Paiza. Long. 78. 16. W., lat. 4. 5. S

Loyalstock p.t. Lycoming Co. Pa.

Lozère, a department of France, corresponding to the ancient Gevaudan. It is a mountainous, barren country, and receives its name from the principal ridge of mountains. Mendè is the capital.

Lu, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, 8 m. S. S. W. of Alexandria.

Luarca, a town of Spain, in Austria, near the sea-coast, 23 m. N. W. of Oviedo.

Lubar, a town of Prussia, in the government of Volhynia, with 3,000 inhabitants.

Lubau, a town of Prussian Silesia, 30 m. N. W. of Glatz.

Lubben, a town of Lower Lusatia, seated on the Spree, in a swampy country, 50 m. S. S. E. of Berlin. Long. 13. 55. E., lat. 52. 0. N.

Lubec, a free city and sea-port of Germany adjoining the duchy of Holstein. It was the head of the famous Hanseatic league, formed here in 1164, and the most commercial city of the north; but great part of its trade is transferred to Hamburg. The city is surrounded with walls, which are planted with rows of trees, but the other defences were demolished by the French, to whom it was surrendered in 1806. The houses are built of stone in a very ancient style. The town-house is a superb structure, and has several towers. There is also a fine council-house, and an exchange. The inhabitants are Lutherans. There are four large churches, besides the cathedral. The trade consists in the export of corn from the adjoining country and the import of articles for consumption; and the manufactures, which are on a small scale, comprise woolen, silks, cotton, tobacco, soap, white lead, copper, &c. Lubec is seated on the Trave, 8 m. S. W. of the Baltic, and 35 N. E. of Hamburg. Long. 10. 49. E., lat. 53. 52. N.

Lubec, an island in the Indian Ocean, near the island of Madura. Long. 112. 22. E., lat. 5. 50. S.

Lubec, a sea-port of Maine, in Washington county, situated on a peninsula, on the W. side of Passamaquoddy Bay, 365 m. E. of Boston. It was founded in 1815, and is now a handsome and flourishing town. Pop. 1,535.

Luben, a town of Prussian Silesia, seated on the Katzbach, 14 m. N. of Liegnitz.

Lublinitz, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Oppeln, 32 m. E. of Oppeln.

Lublin, a city of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. Three annual fairs are held here, each lasting a month, which are frequented by great numbers of German, Russian, Turkish, and other traders and merchants. It is seated on the Bistritz, 85 m. S. E. of Warsaw. Long. 22. 45. E., lat. 51. 14. N.

Lublyo, a town of Poland, palatinate of Cracow 56 m. S. E. of Cracow.

Luc, a town of France, deparatment of Var, 25 m. N. E. of Toulon.

Luconas, a town of Peru, which gives name to a jurisdiction, containing rich silver mines, and feeding great droves of cattle. It stands near one of the head branches of the Apurimac, 80 m. S. of Guamanga.

Lucar, Cape St. the S. E. end of the peninsula of California. It lies under the tropic of Capricorn, in long. 111. 30. W.

Lucar de Barrameda, St. a sea-port of Spain, in Andalusia, and a bishop's see. It has a fine harbour, well defended, at the mouth of the Guadalquivir, 40 m. S. S. W. of Seville. Long. 5. 54 W., lat. 36. 58. N

Lucar de Guadiana, St., a strong town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the river Guadiana, 76 m. W. N. W. of Seville. Long. 7. 18. W., lat. 37. 28. N.

Lucoyo Islands. See Bahama.

Lucca, a duchy of Italy, lying on the E. coast of the gulf of Genoa. It is bounded by Tuscany, Modena, and the Mediterranean, and contains about 430 square m. Much of it is mountainous, but it is well cultivated, and produces plenty of wine, oil, silk, wool, and chestnuts; the oil, in particular, is in high esteem. It was formerly a republic, was constituted a principality by Napoleon in 1805, and in 1815 erected into a duchy by the congress of Vienna, and given to the infanta of Spain.

Lucca, a city of Italy, capital of the above duchy, and an archbishop's see. It is nearly three m. in circumference, regularly fortified, and contains 18,000 inhabitants. The state palace, and the cathedral and other churches, are worthy of notice. Here are considerable manufactures of silk, and gold and silver stuffs. Lucca was entered by the French in 1796, evacuated in 1799, and re-entered in 1800. It is seated in a fruitful plain, near the river Serchio, 10 m. N. E. of Pisa, and 37 W. of Florence. Long. 10. 35. E., lat. 43. 50. N.

Luce, a spacious bay on the S. coast of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, lying E. of the promontory called the Mull of Galloway. The river Luce enters its N. E. extremity, at the town of Glencuce.

Luccinstieg, St., a narrow pass from the country of the Grisons into Germany, defended by a fort, 3 m. N. of Mayenfeld; which was taken by general Massena in March 1799.

Lucena, a town of Spain, in Cordova, 32 m. S. S. E. of Cordova, and 42 W. N. W. of Granada.

Lucera, a city of Naples, capital of Capitanata, and a bishop's see. The town is small, but populous, and has a manufacture of cloth. It is 75 m. N. E. of Naples. Long. 15. 34. E., 41. 28. N.

Lucerna, a town of Piedmont, in a valley of its name, 15 m. S. W. of Turin.

Lucerne, a canton of Switzerland, containing a superficial extent of 740 sq. m.; and bounded by the cantons of Underwalden, Schweiz, and Zurich. The air is mild, and the soil uncommonly fertile. Freedom and openness of manners characterize the inhabitants, who are Roman Catholics, and computed at 87,000.

Lucerne, the capital of the above canton, is divided into two parts by a branch of the Reuss, which here enters the lake of Lucerne. It has no manufactures of consequence, and little commerce, the merchants being principally engaged in the commission business, upon goods passing between Italy, and Germany, over Mount St. Gothard and the Lucerne Lake. 30 m. S. W. of Zurich, and 43 E. of Berne. Long. 8. 14. E., lat. 47. 0. N.

Lucerne, or Waldstadt, a lake of Switzerland, between the cantons of Underwalden, Lucerne, Schweiz, and Uri. It consists of a number of detached parts, forming in a manner separate lakes. It is the largest, as well as the most romantic lake in the interior of Switzerland, being 25 m. long and from 2 to 4 broad.

Luchow, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Luneburg, seated on the Jeetze, 36 m. S. of Luneburg.

Lucia, St., one of the Carribee islands, 27 m. long and 12 broad. It consists of plains well watered with rivulets, and hills, furnished with timber; and has several good bays and commodious harbours. By the peace of 1763, this island was allotted to France. In 1803 it was taken by the English, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris in 1814. There are two high mountains, by which this island may be known at a considerable distance. Its N. end is 21 m. S. of Martinique. Long. 60. 51. W., lat. 14. 0. N.

Lucia, St., one of the Cape de Verd islands, to the W. of that of St. Nicholas. Long. 24. 32. W., lat. 16. 45. N.

Lucia, St., a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona, 15 m. W. of Messina.

Lucia, St., a town of Buenos Ayres, on a river of the same name, 30 m. N. of Monte Video, and 340 N. by W. of Buenos Ayres. It is also the name of several settlements in S. America, none of which require particular notice.

Luciana, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 8 m. W. N. W. of Ecija.

Lucito, a town of Naples, in the Molise, 11 m. N. E. of Molise.

Luckau, a town of the Prussian states, in Lower Lusatia. It is seated in a swampy country, on the Berste, 55 m. N. of Dresden.

Luckenwald, a town of Prussian Saxony, seated on the Nute, 32 m. S. of Berlin.

Luckford, a town in Dorsetshire, Eng. W. of Holme, on the Luckford, which falls into the Frome and forms the W. boundaries of Purbeck Isle.

Lucknow, an ancient city of Hindoostan, and capital of Oude. It is large, but poorly built, and the streets are narrow and crooked. The palace of the nabob is situated on a high bank near the Goonty, and commands an extensive view both of that river and the country on the eastern side. Adjoining the palace is a cantonment of one of the East India Company's regiments of native infantry; and in the vicinity is the dwelling of the British resident.

Luco, a town of Naples, on the W. bank of the lake Celano, 9 m. S. S. W. of Celano.

Lucon, a town of France, department of Vendee; seated in a morass, on the canal of Fontenay, 20 m. W. of Fontenay, and 50 S. of Nantes.

Luconu, or Manilla, the chief of the Philippine islands, 400 m. in length, and 100 in breadth. It is not so hot as might be expected, being well watered by large lakes and rivers, and the periodical rains, which inundate the plains. There are several volcanoes in the mountains, which occasion earthquakes. The produce is wax, cotton, indigo, tobacco, sugar, coffee, wild cinnamon, sulphur, cocoa-nuts, rice, &c. Gold is found in various parts of the island; and horses, buffaloes, and a variety of game abound. The inhabitants are for the most part a well disposed people, and before their subjugation were distributed into mud villages. Under the tyranny of the Spanish government they have become indolent, and destitute of energy. The interior, however, is occupied by a savage race, whom the Spaniards have not been able to subdue. They carry on a small traffic in gold, wax, and tobacco, in exchange for cattle. Long. 122. 0. E., lat. 15. 0. N.

Lucrino. See Licola.

Lucy, a town of the Sardinian states, in Savoy, 16 m. N. of Chamberry.

Ludamar, a country of Central Africa, bounded on the S. by Kaarta and Bambarra, and N. by the Sahara or Great Desert. It is inhabited by a race of Moors, who are almost strangers to agriculture, and depend for subsistence on the rearing of cale. In religion they are Mahomedans of the most bigoted and intolerant character, as was fully proved in the case of major Houghton, who was murdered here, and of Mr. Park, who was kept in long captivity, and with difficulty made his escape.

Ludchaunah, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the province of Delhi, situated on the S. bank of the river Sutteege. 180 m. N. N. W. of Delhi.

Ludenchoid, a town of Prussian Westphalia with manufactures of iron and cloth, 28 m. N. E. of Cologne.

Ludershall, a borough in Wiltshire, Eng. It is 15 m. N. of Salisbury, and 71 N. by W. of London.

Ludlow, a borough in Shropshire, Eng. It has a castle, now fast going to decay, where all business was formerly transacted for the principality of Wales. This castle and town were held for the empress Maude against king Stephen, and besieged by him. Edward V. resided here at the time of his father's death, and was carried hence to London. Arthur, prince of Wales, son of Henry VII., held a court, and died here. It is seated on the Teme, 21 m. S. of Shrewsbury, and 142 N. W. of London. Long. 2. 42. W., lat. 52. 23. N.

Luneville, a town of France, department of Meurthe. In its castle the dukes of Lorrain formerly kept their court, as did afterwards king Stanislaus. In 1801 a treaty of peace was concluded here between France and Austria. Lunéville is seated in a plain between the rivers Vesoul and Meurthe, 14 m. E. S. E. of Nancy, and 62 W. of Strasburg. Long. 6. 30. E., lat. 48. 36. N.

Lungro, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, chiefly inhabited by Greeks, 35 m. N. N. W. of Cosenza.

Lupow, a town of Pomerania, on a river of the same name, 15 m. E. of Stolpe.

Lure, p.v. Shenandoah Co. Va.

Lure, a town of France, department of Upper Saone, celebrated for a late abbey of Benedictines, converted, in 1764, into a chapter of noble canons. It is seated near the Ougnon, 30 m. N. E. of Besançon.

Lurgan, a town of Ireland, in the county of Armagh, with an extensive linen manufacture, 14 m. N. E. of Armagh, and 67 N. of Dublin.

Lusatia, a margraviate of Germany, 90 m. long and 60 broad; bounded on the N. by Brandenburg, E. by Silesia, S. by Bohemia, and W. by Saxony. It is divided into Upper and Lower Lusatia, formerly two distinct states, which became subject to Saxony and formed a province of that power until 1815. The whole of Lower Lusatia, which forms the northern part of the margraviate now belongs to Prussia, as does also one half of Upper Lusatia, which is included in the government of Liegnitz: the part that remains to Saxony is computed at 1,170 sq. m. with 170,000 inhabitants. Upper Lusatia abounds more in mountains and hills than the Lower, in which are many boggy and moorish tracts, yet it is the most fruitful. The breeding of cattle is very considerable, and there is plenty of game; but the products of the country do not supply the necessities of the inhabitants. This want is compensated by its numerous manufactures, particularly those of cloths and linens.

Lusignan, a town of France, department of Vienne, seated on the Vonne, 15 m. S. S. W. of Poitiers.

Luso, a river of Italy, which rises in the duchy of Urbino, crosses part of Romagna, and enters the gulf of Venice 10 m. N. of Rimini.

Lutterworth, a town in Leicestershire, Eng. It has a large and handsome church. Wickliff, the celebrated reformer, was rector, and died here, in 1387. Lutterworth has little trade, being principally supported by the neighbouring opulent graziers. It is seated on the river Swift, 14 m. S. of Leicester, and 88 N. W. of London.

Lutzelstein, a town of France, department of Lower Rhine, with a strong castle, seated on a mountain, 30 m. N. W. of Strasburg.

Lutzen, a town of Saxony, in the principality of Merseberg, belonging to Prussia, with a castle. Near this place, in 1632, Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, was killed in a battle, at the moment of victory. Lutzen is also celebrated for the defeat of the united forces of Russia and Prussia, by Bonaparte, in May, 1813. It is seated on the Elster, 21 m. W. S. W. of Leipzig.

Luxemburg, a province of the Netherlands, bounded by the Prussian states on the Rhine, a part of the French frontier, and the Belgic provinces of Namur and Liege, and comprising a superficial area of 2,400 sq. m. with 226,000 inhabitants. It gives the title of grand duke to the sovereign. The surface is mountainous and woody, being traversed by branches of the Ardennes; and the climate is colder than that of the other provinces. The principal river is the Moselle. Corn, potatoes, flax, and some wine are raised; the rearing of cattle forms an important branch of industry; and there are manufactures of woolen and iron; but the chief wealth of the province consists in its forests, which occupy upwards of 460,000 acres. It is divided into the districts of Luxemburg, Dietkirch and Neufchâteau.

Luxemburg, the capital of the above province, and one of the strongest towns in Europe. It is divided by the Alsitiz into the Upper and Lower Town; the former almost surrounded by rocks, but the latter seated in a plain. In 1795 it surrendered to the French, but was restored in 1814. It is 23 m. W. S. W. of Treves, and 130 S. E. of Brussels. Long. 6. 10. E., lat. 49. 37. N.

Luxeuil, a town of France, department of Upper Saone, near which are some mineral waters and warm baths. It is seated at the foot of the Vosges, 14 m. from Vesoul.

Luyo and Chillao, a province of Peru, bounded E. by mountains, N. and N. W. by the province of Jaen, and S. E. by that of Caxamarca. It is 54 m. in length, and 24 in breadth, and contains 3,500 inhabitants. The capital has the same name, and is in long. 77. 41. W., lat. 5. 33. S.

Luzara, a strong town of Austrian Italy, in the province of Mantua, where a battle was fought between the Austrians and the French and Spaniards, in 1702, when each side claimed the victory. It is seated near the conflux of the Crostolo with the Po, 16 m. S. of Mantua.

Lyman, a township of York Co. Me. 27 m. N. York. Pop. 1,502.

Lyme, or Lyme Regis, a borough and sea-port in Dorsetshire, Eng. It is seated on the side of a craggy hill, on the river Lyme, at the head of a little inlet: and its harbour is formed by two very thick walls, called the Cobbe. Here the duke of Monmouth landed, in 1685, for the execution of his ill-judged design against James II. Lyme is the birth-place of Thomas Coram, the benevolent patron and contriver of the Foundling Hospital

It is 23 m. E. of Exeter, and 143 S. W. of London.

Lyme, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H. on the Connecticut, 8 m. N. Dartmouth College. Pop. 1,804. p.t. N. London Co. Conn. at the mouth of the Connecticut. Pop. 4,098; a township of Jefferson Co. N. Y. on L. Ontario. Pop. 2,872; and a township in Huron Co. Ohio.

Lymford, a gulf of Denmark, in N. Jutland, which has a narrow entrance from the Cattegat, and extends 80 m. across the country, widening gradually, and forming several branches; the W. end is 20 m. long, and separated from the North Sea only by a narrow bank.

Lymington, a borough in Hampshire, Eng. It is seated on a river of its name, a m. from the sea, and the harbour will admit vessels of 300 tons burden. The chief trade is in salt; and it is much resorted to in summer for sea-bathing. Near it are the remains of a Roman camp; and in 1744 nearly 200 lbs. weight of their coins were discovered here in two urns. It is 18 m. S. S. W. of Southampton, and 88 S. W. of London.

Lyonnois, a former province of France, lying on the W. side of the Saone and Rhone, 30 m. in length, and 17 in breadth. This province, with Forez and Beaujolois, now forms the department of the Rhone and the Loire.

Lyons, a city of France, capital of the department of Rhone, and the see of an archbishop. Many antiquities are still observed, which evince its Roman origin. It was long considered as the second city of France in beauty, size, and population, and superior to Paris in trade, commerce, and manufactures. The quays were adorned with magnificent structures; the cathedral was a majestic Gothic edifice; and the town-house was one of the most beautiful in Europe. The other principal public buildings were the exchange, the custom-house, the palace of justice, the arsenal, a theatre, a public library, two colleges, and two hospitals. The bridge which unites the city with the suburb de la Guillotiere is 1,560 feet long; and there are three other principal suburbs, six gates, and several fine churches. Such was Lyons in June 1793, when it revolted against the national convention. Being obliged to surrender, in October, the convention decreed that the walls and public buildings should be destroyed, and the name of the city changed to that of Ville Affranchie. The chiefs of the insurgents had fled, but several of them were afterwards taken; and of 3,528 persons, who were tried before the revolutionary tribunal, 1,682 were either shot or beheaded. In 1794, however, on the destruction of the faction of the jacobins, the convention decreed that the city should resume its ancient name, and that measures should be taken to restore its manufactures and commerce. In 1795 the friends of those who were so wantonly put to death in 1793 avenged their fate by a general massacre of the judges of the revolutionary tribunal, and of all the jacobins who were then confined in the prisons of Lyons. Notwithstanding, Lyons has begun to resume its ancient celebrity, and is now a place of very great trade, which is extended not only through France, but to Italy, Switzerland, and Spain; and there are four celebrated fairs every year. The chief article of manufacture now is that of silk: the others are gold and silver brocade, plain, double, and striped velvet, richly embroidered taffeta, and satin; also gold and silver laces or galoons, gauze, hats, ribands, leather, carpets, and colored paper. The printing and book-selling of this place are the next to Paris in importance. It was the scene of several actions between the French and Austrians in 1814; and on the return of Bonaparte from Elba in 1815 the princes of the house of Bourbon were obliged to withdraw. It was also the scene of dreadful riots in the latter part of 1831. This city is seated at the conflux of the Saone with the Rhone, 15 m. N. of Vienne, and 280 S. E. of Paris. Long. 4. 49. E., lat. 45. 46. N. Pop. 145,675.

Madagascar, an island lying on the eastern coast of Africa, about 800 m. in length, 300 in breadth, and 2,000 in circumference. It is intersected throughout its whole length by a chain of lofty mountains, the scenery of which is in many places strikingly grand and picturesque. The climate is healthy and the soil extremely fertile; its products are rice, sugar, silk and potatoes. The cocoa-nut, the banana, and other useful trees, flourish here. The island rears no horses, or camels, but large herds of oxen, some of which come to an enormous size. The great bat whose flesh is very delicate, is also found here. The inhabitants are divided into a number of tribes, and amount to more than 4,000,000. The natives, called Madagasses, are commonly tall and well made, of an olive complexion, which in some is pretty dark. Their hair is usually long and black, curling naturally; their noses are small, though not flat. They seem to have had a great many Arabs among them, with whom they are mixed; and there are some of a yellowish complexion, who have neater features than the rest. Although a populous country, here are no cities or towns, but a great number of villages at a small distance from each other, composed of huts, with doors so low that a boy of 12 years old cannot enter them without stooping. They have neither windows nor chimneys, and the roofs are covered with reeds or leaves. Both men and women are fond of bracelets and necklaces, and anoint their bodies with grease or oil. Those that are dressed in the best manner have a piece of cotton cloth, or silk, wrapped round their middle; but they generally make little use of clothing. Their beds are only mats spread upon boards; and a piece of wood or stone serves them for a bolster. They are very superstitious, and practise circumcision and polygamy. Madagascar is happily exempt from the ravages of the lion and the tiger, but here are great numbers of locusts, which some times swarm to such a degree as to darken the air.

They are eaten by the natives, and considered as a dainty food. Here are also crocodiles, and cameleons. The French have frequently attempted to settle here, but have always been driven away; and there are only some parts on the coast yet known. The chief settlement was at Port Dauphin, on the S. E. coast, in long. 47. 0. E., lat. 25. 0. S., and the place most visited by the Europeans is more to the N., called Foulepointe, long. 49. 50. E., lat. 17. 40. S.

Madavascaka, river, one of the head streams of the St. John, in the northern part of the State of Maine. Its whole course lies within the territory which has lately been the subject of dispute between the American and British governments; and according to the recent decision of the king of the Netherlands it belongs to the British. At the junction of this stream with the St. John's are several French settlements established by refugees from Nova Scotia in the early part of the last century. The inhabitants amount to about 2,000.

Madalena, or Magdalena, a river of Terra Firma, which rises in the mountains to the E. of Popayan, takes a northerly course of above 600 m. and enters the Carribean Sea, by several mouths, between Carthagena and St. Martha.

Madbury, a township of Stafford Co. N. H. 11 m. N. W. Portsmouth, Pop. 510.

Madeira, an island in the Atlantic Ocean, 54 m. long and 20 broad, and 250 N. by E. of Teneriffe. The Portuguese discovered this island in 1419; it was uninhabited, and covered with wood, and on that account they called it Madeira. Prince Henry, the next year, settled a colony here, and not only furnished it with the plants and domestic animals common in Europe, but procured slips of the vine from Cyprus, and plants of the sugar-cane from Sicily; and the sugar and wine of Madeira quickly became articles of some consequence in the commerce of Portugal. The sugar-works have since been removed, but its wine is now in the highest estimation, especially such as has been a voyage to the E. or W. Indies. The scorching heat of summer and the icy chill of winter are here unknown; for spring and autumn reign continually, and produce flowers and fruits throughout the year. The cedar tree is found in great abundance, and the dragon tree is a native of this island. Flowers nursed in the English green-houses grow wild here in the fields; the hedges are mostly formed of the myrtle, rose, jasmine, and honeysuckle; while the larkspur, fleur-de-lis, lupin, &c., spring up spontaneously in the meadows. There are few reptiles to be seen in the island; the lizard is the most common. Canary birds and gold-finches are found in the mountains. The hog is the food most relished; they are suffered to range among the mountains, and are hunted and caught by dogs. Salted cod is imported from America, and is the chief diet of the poor. Madeira is well watered and populous. The British factory settled in this island consists of upwards of 20 commercial houses, and have considerably more of its trade than the Portuguese. In 1808 it surrendered to the English, but was afterwards restored. Funchal is the capital.

Madely Market, a town in Shropshire, Eng. It is celebrated for having afforded refuge to Charles I., after the battle of Worcester. Here are some very extensive iron works; and a work for obtaining fossil tar from the smoke of coal. It is 9 m. N. of Bridgenorth, and 147 N. W. of London.

Madhugiri, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore with a strong hill-fort. In its vicinity much iron is smelted, and a great number of cattle are bred. It is seated amid hills and fertile valleys, 22 m E. of Sera.

Madian, or Midian, a town of Arabia Petrea, on the E. side of the eastern arm of the Red Sea. The Arabians call it Megar el Schauud, the Grotto of Schuaid (or Jethro), and suppose it to be the place where Moses tended the flocks of his father-in-law. It is 50 m. N. of Moilah, and 80 S of Acaba.

Madison, a county of New York. Pop. 39,037. Cazenovia is the capital. A county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 9,236. Madison is the capital. A county of Georgia. Pop. 4,626. Danielsville is the capital. A county of Ohio. Pop. 6,190. London is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 2,442. Andersontown is the capital. A county of Illinois. Pop. 6,229. Edwardsville is the capital. A county of Missouri. Pop. 2,371. Frederickstown is the capital. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 18,035. Richmond is the capital. A county of W. Tennessee. Pop. 11,750. Jackson is the capital. A county of Alabama. Pop. 28,011. Huntsville is the capital. A county of Mississippi. Pop. 4,973. Livingston is the capital. A county of Florida. Pop. 525. Hickstow is the capital. Also the name of 27 towns and villages in different parts of the United States.

Madisonville, p.v. Hopkins Co. Ken.; p.v. St. Tammany Parish Louisiana.

Madras, or Fort St. George, a celebrated fort and city of Hindoostan. It is the capital of the British possessions on the E. side of the peninsula, and is a fortress of very great extent. It is close on the margin of the Bay of Bengal, from which it has a rich and beautiful appearance, the houses being covered with a stucco called chunam, which in itself is nearly as compact as the finest marble, and bears as high a polish. The Black Town is separated from the fort by an esplanade. In common with all the European settlements on this coast, Madras has no port for shipping, the coast forming nearly a straight line; and it is incommoded also with a high and dangerous surf. It is the seat of an archdeaconry, and of missions from different societies in Britain. In 1746 it was taken by the French, but restored by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. It is 100 m. N. by E. of Pondicherry. Long. 80. 25. E., lat. 13. 5. N.

Madras Territory, the countries subject to the presidency of Fort St. George, or Madras, comprehending nearly the whole of India, S. of the river Kistnah, and the extensive province denominated the Northern Circars. Within these boundaries, however, three native princes, the rajahs of Mysore, Travancore, and Cochin, still collect their resources, and exercise a certain degree of authority within their territories. The rest of the country is under the immediate jurisdiction of the governor and council of Madras; and is subdivided into 24 districts, over each of which there is a European judge and a collector, with the requisite establishments. There are also four provisional courts of circuit and appeal, to which the above mentioned judges are subordinate, and a supreme court of appeal stationary at Madras, consisting of four judges, selected from the company's civil servants.

Madre de Dios, an island in the Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Patagonia, 180 m. in circumference.

Madre de Popa, a town of New Granada, with a celebrated convent. It is much resorted to by the pilgrims of S. America, and they pretend that the image of the Virgin has done a great many miracles in favour of the sea-faring people. It is seated on the Madalena, 50 m. E. of Carthagena

Madrid, the capital of Spain, in New Castile.

It was formerly an inconsiderable place, belonging to the archbishop of Toledo, but the purity of the air engaged the court to remove hither, and it is now a considerable city. It contains 77 churches, 66 convents, 15 gates of granite, and about 200,000 inhabitants. The houses are mostly built of stone; and the principal streets are long, broad, and straight, and adorned at proper distances with handsome fountains. There are above 100 towers or steeples, in different places, which contribute greatly to the embellishment of the city. It stands in a plain, surrounded by mountains, and has a high wall, built of masonry. There are two palaces on a large scale. The Palacio Real, at the west end, is strongly built and elegantly ornamented on the outside; the Buen Retiro is situated at the east of the town, and is chiefly remarkable for its large collection of paintings, and very extensive gardens. The churches and monasteries contain many paintings, by the most celebrated masters. The squares are numerous; the finest is the Plaza Mayor, which is 1,536 feet in circuit, surrounded by houses, 5 stories high, all of an equal height; every story being adorned with a handsome balcony, and the fronts supported by columns, which form very fine arcades. Here the auto da fes, were formerly celebrated, with all their terrible apparatus. In the environs are several royal residences, such as the Casa del Campo, where a great many wild animals were formerly kept for the chase. The manufactures of Madrid are very inconsiderable; those for hats, and the royal china and salt-petre works, are the principal. The French took possession of the city in March 1808, and on the 2nd of May the inhabitants rose up in arms to expel them from the city, when a terrible carnage took place for several hours, and it was not till the arrival of more troops that order was enforced among the people. On the 20th of July following, Joseph Bonaparte entered it as king of Spain; but was obliged to quit it soon afterwards. On the 2nd of December, of the same year, it was retaken by Napoleon, who reinstated his brother on the throne, and he kept possession till August 1812, when Madrid was entered by the British army, under the duke of Wellington. The French, however, again took possession of it in November; but finally evacuated it the following year. The inhabitants joined in the revolution of 1820, when the king was obliged to accede to the general desire of restoring the constitution of the Cortes of 1812. See Spain. Madrid is on the river Manzanares, over which is a magnificent bridge, 265 m. N. E. of Lisbon, and 650 S. S. W. of Paris. Long. 3. 34. W., lat. 40. 25. N.

Madrid, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. on the St. Lawrence. Pop. 3,459.

Madrigal, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, seated in a plain, fertile in excellent wine, 10 m. N. E. of Medina del Campo.

Madrisio, a town of Italy, in Friuli, 30 m. N. of Venice.

Mad River, a town of Clark Co. Ohio, on a stream of that name running into the Great Miami.

Madrogan, a town of Africa, the capital of Mocaranga, with a spacious royal palace. The upper part of the houses is in the shape of a bell Long. 29. 40. E., lat. 10. 0. S.

Madura, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name, belonging to the British, and included in the collectorship of Dindigul.

It is fortified with square towers and parapets, and has one of the most superb pagodas in Hindoostan. It is 130 m. N. N. W. of Cape Comorin, and 270 S. S. W. of Madras. Long. 78. 12. E., lat. 9. 55. N.

Maduro, an island in the Indian Ocean, on the N. coast of the island of Java. It is 100 m. long and 15 broad, and the soil is fertile and well cultivated. The chief towns are Samanap, Parimacassan, and Bancallan.

Mueler, a lake of Sweden, 80 m. long and 20 broad, between the provinces of Westmania and Sudermania. It contains several fine islands, is usually frozen during a few weeks in winter, and opens an easy communication, by sledges, between the interior parts of Sweden and the city of Stockholm.

Maelstrom, a dangerous whirlpool on the coast of Norway, in 68. N. lat. and near the island of Moskoë, whence it is also named Moskoestrom. When it is flood, the stream runs up the country with a boisterous rapidity; but the roar of its impetuous ebb to the sea is scarcely equalled by the loudest cataracts. The whirlpool is of such an extent and depth that, if a ship comes within its attraction, it is inevitably absorbed and beaten in pieces against the rocks below; and when the water relaxes, the fragments come up again. The intervals of tranquility are only at the turn of the ebb and flood, and calm weather; and they last but a quarter of an hour, its violence gradually returning. When the stream is most boisterous, and its fury heightened by a storm, vessels have been reached by it at the distance of 5 m.

Maerna, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, 23 m. W. S. W. of Trent.

Maese. See Meuse.

Maesgik, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, on the river Meuse, 10 m. S. S. W. of Ruremonde.

Maeslandstuijs, a town of S. Holland, near the mouth of the Meuse, 10 m. W. of Rotterdam.

Maestricht, a city of the Netherlands, about 4 m. in circumference, seated on the Meuse, opposite Wyck, with which it communicates by a stone bridge. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 18,000. It has fine long streets, many churches and convents, a college formerly belonging to the Jesuits, a council house with its library and considerable manufacture of cloth, leather, hosiery, and hardware. Near it is the lofty mountain of St. Peter, with a fortress; and a stone quarry, with such a number of subterranean passages as to be capable of containing 40,000 persons. The other fortifications and the situation of Maestricht are such that it is deemed one of the strongest places in Europe. The city was besieged by the French in 1748, during the negotiations of Aix-la-Chapelle, was unsuccessfully attacked by them in 1793, and they became masters of it towards the end of the following year. In 1814 it was delivered up to the allied forces. It is 14 m. N. N. E. of Liege, and 58 E. of Brussels. Long. 5. 48. E., lat. 50. 49. N.

Mafra, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a college founded in 1772. In a sandy and barren spot near this place John V., in pursuance of a vow, erected a building of extraordinary magnificence, as a Franciscan convent. The town is seated near the sea, 18 m. N. N. W. of Lisbon.

Magadi, or Maghery, a town of Hindoostan, in the district of Mysore, seated in a hilly country, abounding in timber-trees, stone and iron, 24 m. W. of Bangalore.

Magadoza, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, on the coast of Ajan, with a citadel, and a good harbour. It stands at the mouth of a river, which is supposed to have a long course, having regular inundations that fertilize the country to a great extent. The inhabitants are mostly Mahomedans; but there are also some Abyssinian Christians. They all speak the Arabic tongue, are stout and warlike and among other weapons use poisoned arrows and lances. The city is a place of great commerce, receiving from Adel and other parts, cotton, silk spices, and drugs, in exchange for gold, ivory, wax, and other commodities. Long. 46. 25. E., lat. 2. 10. N.

Magdalen Isles, a group of islets, in the gulf of St. Lawrence, near its entrance. They are inhabited by a few families, whose chief support is derived from fishing.

Magdalena, a large river of Colombia, which rises in the province of Popayan, and after a course of 900 m. falls into the sea, in lat. 11. 2. N.

Magdalena, a river of New Mexico, which runs into the sea between the rivers Flores and Mexicano.

Magdeburg, a government of the Prussian states, in Saxony, composed of part of the Old Mark on the left of the Elbe, the principality of Halperstadt, the abbey of Quedlinburg, the county of Wernigerode, the barony of Schauen, and the bailiwicks of Klotze, Barby, and Gommern. It comprises a superficial area of nearly 4,400 sq. m., is divided into 15 circles, and contains 450,000 inhabitants. The country is in general level, and the parts which are not marshy and overgrown with wood are very fertile. Its commerce is greatly facilitated by the Elbe, which traverses through its whole extent.

Magdeburg, a fortified city, capital of the foregoing government. It has a handsome palace, a citadel with a fine arsenal, and a magnificent cathedral, which contains the superb mausoleum of Otho the great. The inhabitants are computed at 30,000. Here are manufactures of cotton and linen goods, stockings, gloves, porcelain, hats, leather, soap, and tobacco; but the principal are those of woolen and silk. It is well situated for trade, on both sides of the Elbe, by which it has an easy communication with Hamburgh. In the neighbourhood are the monastery of Bergin, and the salt-works of Schönebeck, producing about 30,000 tons annually. Magdeburg has sustained several sieges. In 1631 it was taken by the Austrians, who burnt the town, except the cathedral and a few houses, adjacent, and massacred above 10,000 of the inhabitants; but it was soon handsomely rebuilt. In 1806 it surrendered to the French, and was not restored till 1813. It is 75 m. W. S. W. of Berlin, and 120 S. E. of Hamburgh. Long. 11. 40. E., lat. 52. 10. N.

Magellan, a strait of S. America, discovered in 1520 by Ferdinando Magellan, a Portuguese in the service of Spain. It has since been sailed through by several navigators; but the passage, upward of 300 m. being dangerous and troublesome, they now sail round Cape Horn.

Magerville, a township of Sunbury Co. New Brunswick, on the St. Johns.

Mageroe, or Mageron, a large island on the coast of Norway, and the most northern land in Europe. It is separated from the continent on the S. by a narrow channel; and its N. extremity is an enormous rock, called N. Cape. Long. 25. 57. E., lat. 71. 10. N.

Magherafelt, a town of Ireland, in the county of Londonderry, with a considerable linen manufacture, 13 m. W. of Antrim, and 30 S. E. of Londonderry.

Magia, a river of Switzerland, in the canton of Tessin, which runs S. with rapidity, through a narrow valley of its name, and enters the lake of Maggiore, near Locarno.

Maggiore, a lake of Upper Italy, separating part of the Austro-Italian government of Milan from the states of Sardinia, and extending from Sesto, northward to Locarno; 30 m. in length, and 3 in breadth. The river Tesino runs S. through its whole length; and it contains the celebrated Borromean Isles.

Mogindanao. See Mindanao.

Magliano, a town of Italy, province of Sabina, seated on a mountain, near the river Tiper, 34 m. N. of Rome. Long. 12. 35. E., lat. 42. 25. N.

Magna Macca, a town and port of Italy, in the Papal states, seated at the mouth of the lake of Commachio, in the gulf of Venice, 3 m. S. E. of Commachio.

Magnsa. See Manachia.

Magny, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise, 32 m. N. W. of Paris.

Magra, a river of Italy, which rises in the Apennines, on the S. confines of Parma, and flows by Pontremoli and Sarsana into the gulf of Genoa.

Mahaleu, a town of Egypt, capital of Garbia. It carries on a considerable trade in linen, cotton, and sal-ammoniac; and the inhabitants have ovens to hatch chickens. Long. 33. 30. E., lat. 31. 30. N.

Mahanada, a river of Hindoostan, which rises in the N. E. part of Berar, crosses Orissa, and enters the bay of Bengal, by several mouths, below Cattaek. These mouths form an assemblage of low woody islands; and at the mouth of the principal channel, named Cajung or Codjung.

Mahdia. See Madea.

Mahanou, Little, Lower and Upper, three townships in Northumberland Co. Pa.

Mahantango, Upper, a township in Schuylkill Co. Pa.

Mahé, a town of Hindoostan, in Malabar, formerly belonging to the French, but taken by the English in 1793. It is situated on high ground, at the mouth of a river, 5 m. S. S. E. of Tellicherry.

Mahlberg, a town and castle of Germany, in Baden, 17 m. N. of Friburg.

Mahmoodabad, a town of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, 17 m. S. S. E. of Ahmedabad.

Mahmudpore, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, 80 m. N. E. of Calcutta.

Mahondy, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Oude, 70 m. N. W. of Lucknow, and 150 E. S. E. of Delhi.

Mahoning, three townships in Mercer, Indiana and Columbia Cos. Pa. Also a river of Pennsylvania falling into the Alleghany.

Mahratta Territory, an extensive country of Hindoostan, which till lately stretched across what is called the peninsula of India. On the accession of Ram Rajah, in 1740, the peishwa and the paymaster-general confined him to the fortress of Sattarah, and divided the empire between them, the former fixing his residence at Poonah, which became the capital of the Western Mahrattas; the latter founding a new kingdom in the province of Gundwanah, called the Eastern Mahrattas, and fixing his residence at Nagpore, which see. The peishwa became dependent on the British in 1802, but attempting to shake off his dependence, he was defeated and deposed. The Mahrattas are Hindoos: and many of the Brahmins are polished and insidious merchants. They are fond of horses, and their army was almost entirely composed of cavalry; they were however, never very formidable, as a regular force, depending more on the celerity of their motions and the suddenness of their incursions than on the boldness with which they met their enemies.

Mahrburg. See Marchburg.

Mahur, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of its name, in the province of Berar; seated on the Chin, Gongga, which flows into the Godavery, 140 m. S. W. of Nagpore. Long. 78. 34. E., lat. 19. 24. N.

Maida, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra. On the plain near this place, in 1806, a victory was obtained by the British troops over the French. It is 9 m. W. S. W. of Squillace.

Maiden Creek, a township of Berks Co. Pa.

Maidenhead, a town in Berkshire, Eng. with a good trade in malt, meal, and timber. It is seated on the Thames, over which is a bridge, 12 m. E. by N. of Reading, and 26 W. by N. of London 2 m. distant is Maidenhead Thicket, formerly infested by highwaymen.

Maidenhead, a township of Hunterdon Co. N. J.

Maidenio, an island of the Pacific Ocean, 39 m. long and 9 broad. In the N. W. part of it native copper is found. Long. 167. 10. E., lat. 54. 40. N.

Maidstone, a borough and the county town of Kent, Eng. It has a brisk trade in exporting the commodities of the county, particularly hops, of which there are numerous plantations around, here are likewise paper-mills, and a manufacture of linen. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice; and there are several meeting houses for dissenters, a grammar school, 8 charity schools, &c. Maidstone is seated on the Medway, over which is a bridge of seven arches, 10 m. W. of Canterbury, and 34 E. S. E. of London. Long. 0. 38. E., lat. 51. 16. N.

Maidstone, a township of Essex Co. Vt. 53 m. N. Montpelier. Pop. 236; also a township of Essex Co. U. C.

Maidhidpore, a town of Hindoostan, in the Malwal, near which the troops of Holkar were defeated by the British in 1817. It is seated on the Soprah, 20 m. N. of Oojain.

Maidcotay, a lofty fortress of Hindoostan, in Mysore, and one of the most celebrated places of Hindoo worship. The large temple is a square building of great dimensions, and the jewels belonging to it are very valuable. In 1772 Hyder was completely routed by the Mahrattas near this place; and it was here that the Mahratta chiefs joined lord Cornwallis in 1791. It is 17 m. N. of Seringapatam.

Mailleizais, a town of France, department of Vendee, seated on an island formed by the Seure and Autize, 22 m. N. E. of Rochelle.

Maina, a sea-port of Greece, in the Morea, which gives name to a district that lies between two bays of the Mediterranean Sea. The inhabitants of the district, estimated at 50,000, could never, even nominally, be subjected to the Turks, till the end of the 18th century, when they agreed to pay a small tribute to the Porte. The town is seated on the bay of Coron, 46 m. S. by W. of Mistra. Long. 92. 10. E., lat. 36. 34. N.

Maine, one of the United States, and constituting the north-eastern extremity of the Union. It extends from 43. 5. to 47. 20. N. lat. and from 66. 49. to 71. 4. W. long. bounded N. and N. W. by Lower Canada. E. by New Brunswick, S. by the Atlantic, and W. by New Hampshire, and containing 30,000 square m. The northern limit, as fixed by the king of the Netherlands, has somewhat reduced the state from its former dimensions. The northern parts are mountainous, and a part of the north-western limit is formed by one of the extremities of the Apalachian chain. Mount Katahdin or Ktaadn an isolated peak in the north is 5,385 feet in height, and several other elevations exceed 4,000. The mountains are covered with wood, and indeed all the northern regions may be considered as one great forest. Here imports for 1829, were valued at 742,781; the exports of domestic produce, 729,106 dollars; the total exports 737,832 dollars. The fisheries are very productive; the fish annually taken are estimated to be worth nearly half a million of dollars. The northern parts of the state furnish vast quantities of timber. The trees are felled in the depth of winter by parties which penetrate into the woods in autumn for that purpose, and cut down the trees after the ground is covered with snow sufficiently to enable them to drag the timber by oxen to the rivers where they are rolled upon the ice. When the rivers, break up in the spring the logs are floated down to the sea. Where the rivers are wide and uninterrupted by falls, the logs are fastened together in immense rafts.

is still to be found the moose, a wild animal which has disappeared from almost every other part of the United States. The trees are principally pine, hemlock, spruce and birch. Toward the sea grow the white and red oak, but these trees are not abundant. The chief rivers in Maine are the Penobscot, Kennebec, Androscoggin, and Saco which rise among the mountains and flow southerly into the Atlantic. These streams have a rapid course and in the upper part are much broken by falls. The Wallowastook Aroostook and Allagash, in the north, flows into the St. Johns. The St. Croix forms a part of the eastern boundary. There are many lakes in this state, the largest of which are the Moosehead, Chesuncook, and Schoodie. The coast is indented with a great number of bays and inlets of the sea, and no state in the Union has so many excellent harbours. Along the coast are also scattered many fine islands, a great number of which are populous and well cultivated. The mineral productions are few. Iron and lead in small quantities have been discovered. Slate and limestone are abundant; lime is burnt for exportation at Thomastown and Camden, and all the New England States are supplied from this quarter. The soil among the mountainous parts and on the coast is inferior, but there are many tracts in the interior of great fertility. Wheat, barley, rye and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Maize also receives attention, but does not thrive so well here as in the other New England States. The climate is the coldest in the United States; and in the spring heavy fogs are common. The summer is hot but of short continuance.

The inhabitants subsist mostly by agriculture and maritime enterprize. There are few manufactures in the state except domestic fabrics. The commerce is chiefly confined to the exportation coastwise of lumber, fish, lime, plaster &c. There is also some trade to the West Indies. The shipping in 1827, amounted to 202,395 tons. The

This state is divided into 10 counties. The capital is Augusta. The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Representatives, the members of which are chosen annually. The Governor is also elected annually. All the elections are popular, and suffrage is universal. The most numerous religious sect is that of the Baptists; they have 148 ministers; the Calvinistic congregationalists have 107; the Methodists 56; the Unitarians 8; the Episcopalians 4; the Catholics 4. There are also 30 societies of Quakers, 50 of Freewill Baptists; 3 of Sandemanians and some Universalists. There are colleges at Brunswick and Waterville and theological seminaries at Bangor and Readfield. Common schools are supported by law and the business of education receives great attention.

There are some Indians remaining in this state, chiefly of the Pennobscot tribe. Their settlements are on the Penobscot, and on Passamaquoddy Bay. The population of Maine is 399,462. This state was originally a part of Massachusetts with the title of the District of Maine. In 1829 it was admitted into the Union as an independent State.

The most populous part of the state lies along the coast. The northern part is unsettled. The largest town is Portland; the other principal towns are Bath, Hallowell, Gardiner, Bangor, Wiscasset, Thomastown, Eastport, Lubec and York.

Maine, a large river of Germany, formed by two streams called the Red and White Maine, which rises among the mountains of Franconia. It joins the Rhine a little above Mentz.

Maine, Lower, a circle of the Bavarian states, contiguous to Baden, Hesse-Cassel, and Hesse-Darmstadt, comprising a superficial extent of 3000 sq. m. with 423,000 inhabitants. The principal products are corn and wine. Wurtzburg is the capital.

Maine, Upper, a circle of the Bavarian states, contiguous to Bohemia and Saxony, comprising an extent of 3,460 sq. m. with 434,000 inhabitants. The manufactures, though confined to the productions of the province, viz. the metals, flax, and timber, are considerable. Bayreuth is the capital.

Maine-et-Loire, a department of France, bounded by the departments of Mayenne, Sarthe, and Indre-et-Loire, comprising an extent of 4,000 sq. m. with 401,600 inhabitants. The soil is in general fertile, producing corn, flax, hemp, fruit, and wine; and the manufacture of linen is carried on to a considerable extent. Angers is the capital.

Maine and Tauber, a circle of Baden, comprising the N. E. portion of the grand duchy, and a small tract on the Maine, insulated from the rest by part of Bavaria. Wertheim is the chief town.

Mainland, the principal of the Shetland Isles, is 60 m. long, and from 6 to 18 broad, and is divided into eight parochial districts. The face of the country exhibits a prospect of black, craggy mountains, and marshy plains, interspersed with some verdant spots, which appear smooth and fertile. The mountains abound with various kinds of game; the lofty cliffs, impending over the sea, are the haunts of eagles, falcons, and ravens; the deep caverns underneath shelter seals and otters; and to the winding bays resort the swans, geese, scaups, and other aquatic birds. The seas abound with fish, such as the herring, cod, turbot, and haddock; lobsters, oysters, muscels, &c., are also plentiful; while the rivulets and lakes abound with salmon, trout, &c. The hills are covered with sheep of a small breed, and of a shaggy appearance; but their fleece is very soft, and extremely fine. Their horses are of a diminutive size, but remarkably strong and handsome, and are well known by the name of Shelties. There is an immense store of peat, but no coal. The inhabitants are estimated at about 14,000. They have some manufactures of linen and woolen cloth, but their chief employment is derived from the fisheries. Lerwick is the capital.

Mainland, the principal of the Orkney islands. See Pomona.

Maintenon, a town of France, department of Eure-et-Loire, seated between two mountains on the river Eure, 11 m. N. by E. of Chartres.

Maire, La, a strait of S. America, between Terra del Fuego and Staten Land, about 15 m. long, and as many broad.

Maisa, a town of Hungary, in Little Cumania, with 4,100 inhabitants. 17 m. S. by W. of Felegahaza.

Mairant, St. a town of France, department of Deux Sevres, with a trade in corn, and manufactures of stockings, woolen stuffs, &c. It is seated on the Sevre Niortoise, 36 m. S. W. of Poitiers.

Majombo, a country on the coast of Guinea, between Biafara and Gabon, of which little is known.

Majorca, the principal of the Balearic Isles, 40 m. long and 35 broad, situate in the Mediterranean Sea, between Ivica and Minorca. The whole coast is lined with strong towers. The N. W. part is mountainous; the rest produces good corn, olive-trees, fine honey, and delicate wine. Palma is the capital.

Mayumba. See Mayumba.

Makarev, a town of Russia, in the government of Niznei Novogorod, situate on the Volga, 24 m. E. N. E. of Niznei Novogorod.

Makarief, or Makarev, a town of Russia, in the government of Kostroma. It is seated on the river Unza, 140 m. E. of Kostroma. Long. 44 14. E., lat. 58. 50. N.

Makefield, p.t. Bucks Co. Pa.

Maker, a village in Cornwall, Eng. 7 m. S. E. of St. Germans, on an eminence, forming the W. point of the Hamoaze, at Plymouth. On the heights is a very strong battery; and the steeple of the church, called Maker Tower, it is a noted sea-mark. Long. 4. 10. W., lat. 50. 21. N.

Malabar, a maritime province of Hindoostan, lying between 10. and 13. N. lat., now under the dominion of the British. It consists either of flat land washed by the sea, or of different ranges of hills, extending to the foot of the mountains; and it is intersected by a number of mountain streams. Its chief produce is timber, sandal-wood, cocoa-nut, coir, and black pepper. Its principal towns are Calicut, Tellicherry, and Cannanore. The inhabitants are principally Hindoos; but there are also Jews, Mahomedans, and Christians.

Malacca, or Malaya, an extensive country of India, beyond the Ganges, bounded on the N. by Siam, E. by the ocean, and S. W. by the strait of Malacca, which separates it from Sumatra. It is 775 m. in length and 125 in breadth; and produces a great many excellent fruits and roots, pepper, and other spices, with some precious gums and woods. There is but little corn, and sheep and oxen are scarce; but hogs and poultry are plentiful. The Malays are rather below the middle stature; their limbs well shaped; their complexion tawny; their eyes large; and their hair long, black, and shining. They are fond of navigation, war, plunder, emigration, adventures and gallantry; talk incessantly of their honor and bravery, and speak the softest language of Asia; yet they are deemed the most treacherous and ferocious people on the face of the globe. The government is vested in a rajah, or sultan, with a great number of chiefs under him, who generally pay very little regard to his authority. Their religion is a mixture of Mahomedism and paganism. The inland parts are possessed by a savage and barbarous people.

Malacca, the capital of the above country, situate on the western coast. The Portuguese had a factory here, which was taken from them by the Dutch in 1640; it was subjected to the English in 1795; restored to the Dutch in 1813; but is now under the authority of Great Britain, and is one of the principal stations of the London Missionary Society. It is seated on the strait of its name, 480 m. S. E. of Acheen. Long. 102. 5 E., lat. 2. 12. N.

Malaga, a sea-port and city of Spain, in Granada, with a good harbour, capable of containing 400 merchant vessels and 20 sail of the line. The cathedral is a stupendous pile, begun by Philip II. while married to Mary of England, and their united arms are over the gate. The inhabitants are about 50,000, who have some trade in raisins and excellent wines, and manufactures of silks, velvets, soap, paper, &c. Malaga was taken by the French in 1810, and remained in their possession till 1812. It is seated on the Mediterranean, surrounded by hills, 55 m. W. S. W., of Granada. Long. 4. 10. W., lat. 36. 35. N.

Malaga, p.v. Gloucester Co. N. J. 30 m. S. Philadelphia; p.v. Monroe Co. Ohio. 147 m. S. E. Columbus

Malahide, a town and bay of Ireland, in the county of Dublin, 6 m. from the capital. In the vicinity is Malahide Castle, the residence of the Talbot family.

Malambito, a town of S. America, in the province of Carthagena, about 60 m. E. of Carthagena, on the W. side of the river Magdalena.

Malamocco, a small island and town of Austrian Italy, 5 m. S. of Venice.

Malatia, a town of Asia Minor, on the site of the ancient Melitene, once the capital of Armenia Minor; seated 15 m. W. of the Euphrates, 90 W. N. W. of Diarbekir. Long. 57. 30. E. lat. 37. 30. N.

Malavelly, or Malarilly, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a large mud fort, separated into two parts by a transverse wall. Here is a fruit-garden of great extent, planted by the late sultans. Tippoo Sultan was defeated here by general Harris in 1799. It is 35 m. E. of Seringapatam.

Malchin, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, seated on the river Peene, where it forms the lake Camrow, 22 m. E. of Gustrow.

Malcho, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, between the lakes Calpin and Plau, 23 m. S. S. E. of Gustrow.

Maldeghina, a town of France, department of Lys, 10 m. E. of Bruges.

Malda, a town of Bengal, capital of a district of the same name, on the N. E. side of the Ganges. It is the residence of the commercial agent of the E. India Company, and carries on an extensive trade in raw silk, and manufactured goods. Long. 88. 4. E., lat. 25. 3. N.

Malden, a borough in Essex, Eng. with considerable trade, chiefly in corn, salt, coal, iron, deals, and wine. It has two parish churches, a free school, a library, and a town-hall. Vessels of moderate burden come up to the town, but large ships are obliged to unload at a distance below, in Blackwater Bay. The custom of Borough English, by which the youngest son succeeds to the burghage tenure, is kept up here. It is seated on an eminence, on the river Blackwater, 8 m. E. of Chelmsford, and 37 N. E. of London.

Malden, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 5 m. N. E. Boston. Pop. 2,010. Also a town and fort on Detroit river, U. C.

Maldires, a cluster of small islands, in the Indian Ocean, lying S. W. of Cape Comorin, extending from the equinoctial line to 8. N. lat., and situated between 72. and 74. E. long. They are divided into 17 atollons, or provinces, each having its separate governor and its distinct branch of industry, the brewers residing in one, the goldsmiths in another, &c. The inhabitants appear to be a mixture of Arabs and Hindoos from Malabar. They supply ships with sails and cordage cocoa-nuts, oil, and honey, dry fish, tortoise-shell, and especially cowries.

Maldonado, a town of Buenos Ayres, with a harbour sheltered by a small island of its name; seated near the N. entrance of the Plata. Long. 53. 36. W., lat. 34. 50. S.

Maldonado, a small river of Buenos Ayres, which enters the sea in the bay of Maldonado.

Malemba, a sea-port on the coast of Loango, Western Africa. 50 m. S. of Loango.

Male, the principal of the Maldive islands, and the residence of the prince. Long. 73. 10. E., lat. 6. 20. N.

Malesherbes, a town of France, department of Loiret; seated on the Essone, 35 m. N. E. of Orleans.

Malestroit, a town of France, department of Morbihan, seated on the Ouse, 19 m. E. N. E. of Vannes.

Malham, a village in W. Yorkshire, Eng. surrounded on every side by mountains and rising grounds, which abound in natural curiosities; and among them, on a high moor, is a circular lake, about a m. in diameter, which is the source of the river Aire. 6 m. E. of Settle. 233 from London.

Malines. See Mechlin.

Malivagonga, a river of Ceylon, which rises among the hills to the S. E. of Candy, nearly encompasses that city, and, after many windings among the mountains, enters the sea at Trinco malee.

Malleville, a town of France, department of Aveyron, 6 m. N. E. of Villefranche.

Mallicollo, one of the largest of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific, extending 20 leagues from N. W. to S. E. The inland mountains are very high, and clad with forests; but the soil is rich and fertile, producing cocoa-nuts, bread fruit, bananas, sugar canes, yams, eddoes, turmeric, oranges, &c. Hogs and common poultry are the domestic animals. The inhabitants appear to be a different race from those of the Friendly and Society Islands. In many particulars they seem to correspond with the natives of New Guinea, particularly in their black colour and woolly hair. They go almost naked, are of a slender make, have lively but very irregular features, and tie a rope fast round their belly. At the S. end of the island is a port, named Sandwich Harbour. Long. 167. 53. E., lat. 16. 25. S.

Malling, West, a town in Kent, Eng. 6 m. W. of Maidstone, and 29 E. by S. of London.

Mallow, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with considerable linen manufactures and a fine spring of tepid water. It is seated on the Blackwater, 17 m. N. by W. of Cork.

Malmedy, a town of the Prussian province of Lower Rhine, government of Aix-la-Chapelle, seated on the Recht, 20 m. S. of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Malnoe, a sea-port of Sweden, government of Malmohus, with a large harbour and a strong citadel. It has manufactures of woolen, and a considerable trade; seated on the Sound, 18 m. E. by S. of Copenhagen. Long. 13. 7. E., lat. 55. 36

Malmohus, a government of Sweden, including a great part of the ancient Schonen or Scania. It lies along the Sound and the Baltic, and comprises an area of 1,350 square m. with 137,000 inhabitants.

Malmisbury, a borough in Wiltshire Eng. with a woolen manufactory. Its castle is demolished but there are some remains of its once celebrated abbey. It is seated on a hill, almost surrounded by the Avon, over which it has 6 bridges, 26 m. E. by N. of Bristol, and 96 W. of London.

Malone, p.t. Franklin Co. N. Y. 50 m. N. W. Plattsburg. Pop. 2,207.

Malo, St., a sea-port of France, department of Ille-et-Vilaine, with a strong castle. It has a large harbour, difficult of access, on account of the rocks that surround it, and is a trading place of great importance. It was bombarded by the English in 1693, but without success. In 1758, they landed in Canceille Bay, went to the harbour by land, and burnt above 100 ships. St. Malo is seated on an island, united to the mainland, by a causeway, 44 m. N. N. W. of Rennes. Long. 2. 2. W., lat. 148. 39. N.

Malpas, a town in Cheshire, Eng. It has a handsome church, an independent chapel, a hospital, a grammar school, and a national school; and is seated on a hill, near the river Dee, 15 m. S. E. of Chester, and 165 N. W. of London.

Mulplaquet, a village of France, department of the North, famous for a victory gained over the French by the duke of Marlborough, in 1709, 9 m. S. E. of Mons.

Malta, an island in the Mediterranean, between Africa and Sicily. 20 m. long and 12 broad, formerly reckoned a part of Africa, but now belonging to Europe. It was anciently little else than a barren rock, but is now become a fertile island. The principal objects of cultivation are lemons, indigo, saffron, cotton, and vines which produce excellent wine. The number of inhabitants is said to be about 90,000, who speak Arabic and Italian. After the taking of Rhodes, the emperor Charles V., gave this island to the grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem. It was attacked in 1566 by the Turks, who were obliged to abandon the enterprise with the loss of 30,000 men. It was taken by Bonaparte in the outset of his expedition to Egypt on the 12th of June, 1798, when he found in it 1,200 canons, 200,000 lbs. of powder, two ships of the line, a frigate, four galleys, and 40,000 muskets; besides an immense treasure collected by superstition; and 4,500 Turkish prisoners, whom he set at liberty. It was soon afterwards taken by the British; was stipulated to be restored to the knights at the peace of Amiens, but retained in consequence of pretended dangers from France. In 1803 the war recommenced between the two nations, and the treaty of Paris, in 1814, confirmed the possession of it to Great Britain. Malta is extremely well fortified; the ditches, of a vast size, are all cut out of the solid rock, and extend many miles. Valetta is the capital.

Malta, a township of Kennebec Co. Me. 8 m. E. Augusta, p.t. Saratoga Co. N. Y. 7 m. W. Saratoga. Pop. 1,517.

Malton, Wic., a borough in N. Yorkshire, Eng. with a considerable trade in coals, corn, butter, &c. Here are two churches, four dissenting meeting houses, a free school, and a national school. It is seated on the Derwent, over which is a stone bridge to the village of Old Malton, 13 m. N. E. of York, and 214 N. by W. of London.

Malvern, Great and Little, two villages in Worcestershire, Eng. The former is 8 m. W. by S. of Worcester, and had once an abbey, of which nothing remains but the gateway of the abbey and the nave of the church, now parochial; the latter is seated in a cavity of the Malvern hills, 3 m. from Great Malvern. Between Great and Little Malvern are two celebrated chalybeate springs, one of which is called the Holy Well.

Malvern Hills, a range of hills in the counties of Worcester and Hereford, Eng. extending about 9 m. in length and from 1 to 2 in breadth. They appear to be of limestone and quartz, and the highest point is 1,313 feet above the surface of the Severn.

Malwah, a province of Hindoostan, bounded N. by the provinces of Agimere and Agra, E. by Allahabad and Gundwanah, S. by Khandeish and Berar, and W. by Agimere and Guzerat. It is 250 m. in length by 150 in breadth, and is one of the most extensive elevated, and diversified tracts in Hindoostan. Till lately the whole territory belonged to the Mahrattas.

Malzieu, a town of France, department of Lozere; seated on the Truyere, 12 m. N. N. E. of Mende.

Mamakating, p.t. Sullivan Co. N. Y. 23 m. W. Newburg. Pop. 3,062.

Mamaroneck, p.t. Westchester Co. N. Y. on Long Island Sound. 23 m. N. E. New York. Pop. 838.

Mamars, a town of France, department of Sarthe, seated on the Dive, 14 m. W. of Bellesme.

Man, an island in the Irish Sea, 30 m. long and 12 broad. It contains 18 parishes under the jurisdiction of a bishop, called the bishop of Sodor and Man, who is sole baron of the isle, and possesses other important privileges, but has no seat in the British parliament. The air is healthy, and the soil produces more corn than is sufficient to maintain the inhabitants, who are a mixture of English, Scotch, and Irish. The commodities of the island are wool, hides, butter, tallow, black marble, slate, limestone, lead, and iron. Some manufactures of coarse hats, cotton goods, and linen cloth, are carried on in different parts: but its principal trade arises from the herring fishery. The duke of Athol was formerly lord of this island, and the sovereignty of which he sold, in 1765, to the crown. The chief towns are Castletown, Douglas, Peele, Ruthin, and Ramsay. It is 18 m. S. of Scotland, 40 m. N. of Wales, 30 W. of England, and 26 E. of Ireland.

Manaar, a small island in the Indian Ocean, on the N. W. side of Ceylon. From this island a bank of sand, called Adam's Bridge, runs over to the continent of Hindoostan, which can be passed only by boats. The sea to the S. of this, between the continent and the island of Ceylon, is called the gulf of Manaar.—The Portuguese obtained possession of the island in 1560; but it was taken by the Dutch in 1658, and in 1795 by the English. Long. 79. 3. E., lat. 9. 6. N.

Manachin, or Magnisia the ancient Magnesia a town of Asia Minor, formerly the capital of the Greek empire, seated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Sarabat, 20 m. N. E. of Smyrna. Long. 27. 6. E., lat. 38. 45. N.

Manabachin, p.v. Monmouth Co. N. J. 54 m. S. E. Philadelphia.

Manellon, a township of Fayette Co. Pa.

Manapar, a town of Hindoostan, district of Tinevelly, situate on a point of land projecting in to the gulf of Manaar, 40 m. S. E. of Palamcottah. Long. 78. 17. E., lat. 8. 39. N.—Also a town in the province of Tanjore. Long. 78. 30. E., lat. 16. 39. N.

Manasquan, p.v. Monmouth Co. N. J. 50 m. N. E. Philadelphia.

Marbona, a town of Eastern Africa, situate on the sea-coast, 60 m. S. of Sofala. Long. 35. 39 E., lat. 21. 15. S.

Manchester, a village in Warwickshire, Eng. near Atherstone. It was a Roman station, and here several coins have been dug up: seated on an eminence near the Anker, 106 m. from London.

Mancha, a territory of Spain, lying S. of Old Castile, and N. of Andalusia. It is divided into Upper and Lower, and is nearly surrounded by mountains, producing antimony, vermilion, and mercury. The country is an immense plain, intersected by ridges of low hills and rocks; but it is well cultivated, and produces corn, olives, and wine. The inhabitants are affable, and great lovers of music and dancing; and it was here that Cervantes made his hero, Don Quixote, perform his chief exploits.

Manche, a department of France, including the W. part of Normandy, and comprising about 2,500 sq. m., with 600,000 inhabitants. It is almost surrounded by the English Channel. St. Lo is the capital, but Cherbourg the largest town.

Manchester, a large town in Lancashire, Eng. seated between the rivers Irk and Irwell. It is a place of great antiquity, and has attained greater opulence than almost any of the trading towns in England, but is neither a corporation nor a borough. It has long been noted for various branches of the linen, silk, and cotton manufactures, and is now principally conspicuous as the centre of the cotton trade. The labours of a very populous neighbourhood are collected at Manchester, whence they are sent to London, Liverpool, Hull, &c. These consist of a great variety of cotton and mixed goods, fitted for all sorts of markets, both at home and abroad, spreading over a great part of Europe, America, and the coast of Guinea. Manufactures of tapes and other small wares, of silk goods, and of hats, are also carried on at Manchester. Its chief ornaments are the college, the exchange, the collegiate church, another large church, and a spacious market-place. The churches and chapels of the establishment, several of which are recent erections, are 19 in number. Here are also upwards of 40 places of worship for different sects of dissenters and three for Roman Catholics; one of the latter, opened in 1820, is a beautiful edifice, erected at a cost of £10,000. The charity schools and Sunday schools are numerous. The most important of the other charitable institutions are the Manchester General Infirmary and Dispensary—The Lunatic Asylum—the Fever Hospital—the Lying-in Hospital—the Strangers' Friend Society—the Samaritan Society—the Lock Hospital—the female Penitentiary, and the School for Deaf and Dumb, instituted in 1825. Of the institutions for the promotion of literature and science, the principal are—the Literary and Philosophical Society—the Society for the Promotion of Natural History, and the Royal Manchester Institution. The Mechanics' Institute is in a very flourishing state; and there are several valuable libraries, particularly the College Library and the Portico. Manchester is governed by a borough-reeve, two constables, a deputy constable, &c., and contains several courts of law. It has risen to its present consequence entirely by its manufactures. In respect to population it ranks next to London: in 1821 it contained 133,788 inhabitants. By the Irwell it has a communication with the Mersey and all the late various extensions of inland navigation. It is 36 m. E. by N. of Liverpool, and 186 N. N. W. of London Long. 2 10 W., lat. 53. 27. N.

Mandal, a town of Norway, capital of a province in the government of Bergen; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, 60 m. W. S. W. of Christiansand. Long. 7. 42. E., lat. 58. 2. N.

Mandan, a fort and Indian village of N. America, on the Missouri, where captains Lewis and Clarke had their winter encampment, when on their expedition to the Missouri. Long. 100. 50. W., lat. 47. 20. N.

Mandar, a district of the island of Celebes, on the W. and N. coast, bounded W. by the straits of Macassar, and E. by a tract of desert mountains.

Mandingo, a country in the W. part of Negroland, at the sources of the rivers Niger and Senegal. Not only the inhabitants of this state, but the bulk of the people in many other districts in the western part of Africa, are called Mandingoes, probably from having originally emigrated from this country. They are of a mild, sociable, and obliging disposition: the men are above the middle size, well-shaped, strong, and capable of enduring great labour; the women are good-natured, sprightly, and agreeable. The dress of both sexes is composed of cotton cloth of their own manufacture. Polygamy is common, but the women are not under that restraint which prevails in many other countries. Most of the towns contain a mosque, where public prayers are offered; and a bentang, or coffee-house, where public business is transacted. The private houses are built of mud, with a conical bamboo roof, thatched with grass. The language of the Mandingoes is said to be copious and refined, and is generally understood in all the regions of Western Africa.

Mandshars, or Mandshcus, a branch of the Mongul Tartars, whose ancestors conquered China in the thirteenth century, but were expelled by the Chinese in 1368. They inhabit the three provinces of Eastern Tartary, and retain the customs they brought from China.

Manfredonia, a sea-port of Naples, in Capitanata, with a castle and a good harbour. All sorts of vegetables are in abundance, and most of the corn exported from the province is shipped here. It is seated on a gulf of the same name, 30 m. E. N. E. of Lucrea. Long. 16. 12. E., lat. 41. 31. N.

Mangalore, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Canara, seated between the two arms of a fine lake of salt water, each of which receives a river from the Ghauts; but the bar at the entrance into this harbour will not admit vessels drawing more than ten feet. It is a place of great trade: the principal exports are rice, betel-nut, black pepper, sandal-wood (from the country above the Ghauts.) cinnamon, and turmeric. Here are the ruins of a fort which Tippoo Sultan ordered to be demolished in 1784. In this town a treaty of peace was signed between Tippoo and the English in 1784: in 1799 it came into the hands of the British, and is now the residence of the judge, collector, &c., of S. Canara. It is 130 m. N. N. W. of Calicut, and 190 S. S. E. of Goa. Long. 75. 4 E., lat. 12. 50. N.

Mangea, an island in the S. Pacific, 5 leagues in circumference. In the interior parts it rises into small hills, and captain Cook, by whom it was discovered in 1777, represents it as a fine island; but he did not find a landing place. Long. 158. 16. W., lat. 21. 27. S.

Manheim, a town of Baden, and capital of the circle of the Neckar. The streets are spacious, straight, and well paved; the houses are elegant and uniform. The palace is a magnificent structure, with a cabinet of natural curiosities and a gallery of pictures. The inhabitants are computed at 24,000. Manheim was frequently taken and re-taken by the French and Austrians in the late wars; and was finally ceded to Baden in 1802. It is 17 m. N. of Spire, and 42 S. of Frankfort. Long. S. 31. E., lat. 49. 29. N.

Manheim, p. l. Herkimer Co. N. Y. on the Mohawk. Pop. 1,937. p. t. Lancaster Co. Pa. and townships in York and Schuylkill Cos. Pa.

Manica, an inland kingdom in the S. E. part of Africa, bounded on the N. by Mocaranga, E. by Sofala and Sabia, and S. and W. by unknown regions. It is said to abound with mines of gold, and has a river and capital of the same name; but it is little known to Europeans.

Manickdurg, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the province of Berar, 5 m. S. E. of Chanada.

Manickpatam, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Orissa, 12 m. S. W. of Juggernaut.

Manickpore, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name in the province of Alahabad; seated on the Ganges, in lat. 19. 40. N., long. 85. 36. E.

Mankus, p. t. Onondaga, Co. N. Y. Pop. 7,375.

Manilla, the capital of the island of Luconia, as well as of the other Philippine islands, and the see of an archbishop, who is commonly the Spanish viceroy. It is well fortified, and defended by the castle of St. Philip. The number of Christian inhabitants is estimated at 12,000. Most of the public structures are built of wood, on account of the frequent earthquakes, by one of which, in 1617, a mountain was levelled, and in 1625 a third part of the city was overthrown by another, when 3,000 persons perished. This city is seated near the lake Bahía, on the E. side of a bay, on the S. W. coast. The bay is a circular basin, 10 leagues in diameter, and great part of it land locked, but the part peculiar to the city, called Cavete, lies 9 m. to the S. W. On account of the pure and mild temperature of the air, it is deemed the most healthy of all the European settlements in the East. Long. 120. 52. E., lat. 14. 36. N.

Manningtree, a town in Essex, Eng. The principal imports are deals, corn, coal, and iron. It is seated on a branch of the Stour, called Manningtree-water, 11 m. W. of Harwich, and 60 E. N. E. of London.

Mannhartsberg, a mountain chain of Austria, beginning at the frontier of Moravia, and terminating at the Danube. The products are corn, saffron, and wine. The chief towns are Crens and Kloster-Neuburg.

Manosque, a town of France, department of Lower Alps, near the Durance, with a castle, 25 m. N. E. of Aix.

Manpurry, a town and fort of Hindoostan, in the district of Doob, seated on Issal, 54 m. E. of Agra.

Mauresa, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a castle, and manufactures of silk, hats, gunpowder, &c.; seated at the conflux of the Cardenero with the Lobregat, 20 m. N. W. of Barcelona.

Mans, a town of France, capital of the department of Sarthe, and the see of a bishop. It contains 18,000 inhabitants, and was formerly much more populous. It has excellent poultry, and its wax and stuffs are famous. It is seated on a high hill, near the Sarthe, 20 m. S. of Alencon, and 75 W. by N. of Orleans. Long. 0. 9. E., lat. 48. 0. N.

Mansaroar, a lake of Thibet, from which the southernmost head of the Ganges was long supposed to issue. It is about 115 m. in circumference, and lies about 79. E. long. and 34. N. lat.

Mantaca. See Mataca.

Mantes, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise, with a bridge over the Seine, the great arch of which is 120 feet wide. The wines of its vicinity are famous. It is 31 m. N. W. of Paris.

Mantua, a province of Italy, contiguous to the duchies of Parma and Modena, fertile in corn, flax, fruits, and excellent wine. It comprises a superficial extent of 880 square m. with 214,000 inhabitants; but the former duchy of Mantua was of greater extent. It was governed by the Gonzago family, with the title of duke, till Charles IV., taking part with the French in the dispute relating to the succession of Spain, was put under the ban of the empire, and died in 1708. Having no heirs, the house of Austria kept possession till 1800, when the French obtained it, after the battle of Marengo, but the Austrians obtained possession of it again in 1814.

Mantua, a city of Austrian Italy, capital of the above province. It is seated on an island in the middle of a lake, 20 m. in circumference and two broad, formed by the Mincio; and so very strong by situation, as well as by art, that it is one of the most considerable fortresses in Europe. The only way into this city is by means of two moles or bridges, each of which is defended by a fort and other works. The city is well built, and most of the streets are spacious, regular, and well paved. In the cathedral are paintings by the most celebrated masters; the church of St. Anthony is famous for relics; and the Franciscan church is one of the most elegant of that order in Italy. Here are many other churches, numerous convents, a synagogue for the Jews, who live in a distinct quarter, a university, the ancient ducal palace, with its gallery of paintings, &c. Virgil was born at a village near this city. Mantua surrendered to the French in 1797 (after a siege of eight months), was taken by the Austrian and Russian army in 1799, again ceded to France in 1801, and finally delivered up to the Austrians in 1814. It is 35 m. N. E. of Parma and 70 E. S. E. of Milan. Long. 10 50. E., lat. 45. 10. N.

Mantua, a village in Blockley township adjoining Philadelphia.

Mantua, p.t. Portage Co. Ohio, on the Cuyahoga, 148 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 949.

Maracaiho, a province of S. America now forming part of the Venezuelan province of the Colombian republic, and extending N. to the Caribbean Sea. The soil is in many places exceedingly fertile, and the climate, although excessively hot, is not on the whole unhealthy. The inhabitants are estimated at about 100,000.

Maracaiho, the capital of the above province, with a harbour which can only admit small vessels, owing to the obstruction of a sand bar. It has a mean appearance, some of the houses being covered with tiles, others with reeds. The climate is hot, and the storms of thunder and lightning that frequently occur are accompanied with tremendous rains. It is seated on the outlet of the lake of its name, 60 m. W. S. W. of Caracas. Long. 71. 46. W., lat. 10. 30. N.

Maracaiho, a lake of Caracas in the province of Venezuela. It is 150 m. long and 90 where broadest, with a circumference of 450; and is navigable for vessels of the greatest burden. The banks are sterile, and the air insalubrious; but the water is fresh, except in stormy weather, when the waters of the sea are forced into it. It communicates with the gulf of Venezuela, by a strait which is defended by strong forts, and has several Spanish towns seated on its borders.

Maracay, or Maracaco, a town of Colombia, in the province of Venezuela, in the neighbourhood of which are plantations of cotton, indigo, coffee, corn, &c.; seated on the E. side of the lake Valencia, in the valley of Aragoa.

Maraga, a well built city of Persia, province of Aderbijan, with a spacious bazaar, a glass manufactory, and a handsome public bath; situated at the extremity of a well cultivated plain, opening to the lake of Urumea, from which it is distant 10 or 12 m., and 68 m. N. of Tabreez. Long. 43. 25. E., lat. 37. 20. N.

Margarita, an island near the coast of Cumana, about 40 m. long and 15 broad. discovered by Columbus in 1498. The continual verdure renders it pleasant; but it has no fresh water. The inhabitants are principally mulattoes and the original natives. The pearl fishery, was once prosecuted to a great extent, but in 1620 the Dutch landed and burnt the town and castle, since which it has greatly declined. Its chief importance arises from its situation, as all vessels from Europe bound for Cumana, Barcelona, and La Guira, must pass through the channel which separates it from Cumana. Its ports are Pampatar, Pueblo de la Mar, and Pueblo del Norte. It was the scene of several sanguinary battles between the independents and the royal troops under general Morillo, who was defeated with great loss near Pampatar, and obliged to retire to the continent. Ascension is the capital. Long. 64. to 65. W., lat. 10. 56. N.

Margate, a town in Kent, Eng. on the isle of Thanet, with a brisk trade in corn, coals, fish, timber, iron, tar, &c. It is a member of the port of Dover, and owing to the great resort to it, for sea bathing, for which its situation is well adapted, it has rapidly increased in population and wealth. The harbour has been greatly improved, and the town is protected from the inroads of the sea by a stone pier. There are regular passage boats to and from London, and during summer a number of steam packets. It is situate on the side of a hill, 17 m. E. E. N. of Canterbury and 71 E by S. of London. Marseilles, a flourishing sea-port of France, capital of the department of Mouths of the Rhone. The inhabitants are computed at 110,000. It was so celebrated in the time of the Romans that Cicero styled it the Athens of the Gauls, and Pliny called it the Mistress of Education. It is divided into the Old Town and the New. The former appears like an amphitheatre to the vessels which enter the port; but the houses are mean, and the streets dirty, narrow, and steep. In this part is the principal church, built by the Goths, on the ruins of the temple of Diana. The New Town is in every respect, a perfect contrast to the Old, with which it has a communication by one of the finest streets imaginable. The other streets and square: as well as the public buildings in general are very elegant. With respect to commerce, Marseilles has long been eminent; and it is now sometimes called Europe in Miniature, on account of the variety of dresses and languages. In the environs are nearly 5,000 little country boxes of the citizens, called Bastides. The port is an oval form, 3,480 feet long, by 960 broad at its widest part, with 18 or 20 feet depth of water. In 1649 the plague raged with great violence in Marseilles, and with still greater in 1720, when it carried off 50,000 of the inhabitants. The late lord Gardenstone observes that Marseilles was a little republic within itself, that the citizens elected their own magistrates, and that the expense of a law-suit never exceeded twopence-halfpenny, which sum was lodged by each party with the clerks of court, at the commencement of every process; after which no further expense was incurred. Marseilles is seated on the Mediterranean, 15 m. S. of Aix, and 450 S. by E. of Paris. Long. 5. 27. E., lat. 43. 18. N.

Marseilles, p.v. Halifax Co. Va. 150 m. S. W. Richmond.

Murshallsville, a village of Mecklenburg Co. Va.

Murshalton, p.v. Chester Co. Pa. 30 m. S. W. Philadelphia.

Murshfield, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. seated on the Coteswold Hills, 11 m. E. of Bristol, and 103 W. of London.

Murshfield, p.t. Washington Co. Vt. 12 m. S. E. Montpelier. Pop. 1,271. p.t. Plymouth Co. Mass on the coast of Mass. Bay, 33 m. S. E. Boston. Pop. 1,563.

Murshpee, an Indian town in Barnstable Co. Mass. on the S. side of Cape Cod. 70 m. S. E.

Boston. Here are about 150 Indians. See Massachusetts.

Marsico Nuovo, a town of Naples in Principato Citra, 12 m. N. N. E. of Policastro.

Marsico Vecchio, a town of Naples in Basilicata, near the river Acre 23 m. N. E. of Policastro.

Marsilly, a town of France, department of Marne, 10 m. S. of Suzanne.

Martstrand, a town of Sweden, in the government of Gottenburg. The inhabitants, about 1,200, subsist chiefly by the herring fishery, by the number of ships which in bad weather take refuge in the harbour, which though difficult of entrance is secure and commodious, and by a contraband trade. It stands at the entrance of the Cattegat, 23 m. N. N. W. of Gottenburg. Long. 11. 36. E., lat. 57. 53. N.

Marta, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter; seated on a river of the same name, 10 m. E. of Castro.

Martaban, a city of the Birman empire, capital, of a province of the same name, fertile in rice, fruits, and wines of all kinds. It was at one time a rich trading place, but after it fell into the hands of the Birman, they caused its harbour to be nearly choked up, and it is now of little importance. It is seated on the Bay of Bengal, at the mouth of the Thaluau, 120 m. S. E. of Pegu Long. 97. 56. E., lat. 16. 30. N.

Martapuro. See Metapura.

Martel, a town of France, department of Lot seated near the Dordogne, 18 m. E. of Sarlat.

Martba, St., a district of the republic of Colombia, in the territory of New Granada, bounded N. by the Carribean Sea, E. by Maracaibo, and W. by Carthagena. It abounds with fruits proper to the climate, and there are mines of gold and precious stones, and salt-works. Here commences the famous ridge of mountains, called the Andes, which runs S. the whole length of S. America.

Martha, St., a town of Colombia, capital of the above district. The harbour is surrounded by high mountains. It was once flourishing and populous, but has of late years much declined. It has been frequently pillaged by the English, the Dutch, and the Buccaneers: in 1596 it was reduced to ashes by Sir Francis Drake. It is seated on one of the mouths of the Madalena, 100 m. W. by S. of Rio de la Hache. Long. 74. 4. W., lat. 11. 27. N.

Martinsville, p.v. Montgomery Co. Miss. 66 m. W. St. Louis.

Martin's Vineyard, an island near the S. coast of Massachusetts, a little to the W. of Nantucket. It is 21 m. long and from 2 to 10 broad; with the Elizabeth Islands it forms Dukes County, containing a pop. of 3,518. The chief products are Indian corn and rye. Edgarton is the chief town.

Marthalen, a town of Switzerland, canton of Zurich, 6 m. S. of Scaffhausen.

Martic, a township of Lancaster Co. Pa. on the Susquehanna.

Martigues, a town of France, department of Mouths of the Rhone, seated near a lake, 12 m. long and 5 broad, which produces excellent salt. 20 m. N. W. of Marseilles.

Martin, a country of N. Carolina. Pop. 8,544. Williamstown is the capital, a county of Indiana. Pop. 2,010. Mount Pleasant is the capital.

Martinsburg, p.t. Lewis. Co. N. Y. 50 m. N. Utica. Pop. 2,382; also villages in Bedford Co. Pa. Berkshire Co. Va., Knox Co. Ohio., Morgan Co. Indiana. and Hopkins Co. Kentucky.

Martin's Creek, p.v. Northampton Co. Pa. 10 m. N. Easton.

Martin, Cape, a promontory of Spain, separating the gulf of Valencia from that of Alicant. Long. 0. 36. E., lat. 38. 54. N.

Martin, St., a town of France, in the isle of Re, with a harbour and strong citadel, 10 m. W. N. W. of Rochelle. Long. 1. 21. W., lat. 46. 18. N.

Martin, St., one of the Leeward Carribee islands, 44 m. in circumference. It has neither harbour nor river, but several salt-pits, and salt water lakes. Tobacco is the chief commodity cultivated. It was long jointly possessed by the French and Dutch, was taken by the British in 1801, but subsequently restored. The W. end is 5 m. S. of Anguilla. Long. 63. 16. W., lat. 18. 4. N.

Martinach, a town of Switzerland, in the Valais, on the river Dranse, 12 m. S. W. of Sion.

Martinseille, p.t. Henry Co. Va., p.v. Guilford Co. N. C., p.v. Morgan Co. Indiana.

Martinique, one of the Windward Carribee islands, 50 m. long and 18 broad, belonging to the French. There are high mountains covered with trees, several rivers, and many fertile valleys. The chief products are sugar, cotton, ginger, indigo, chocolate, aloes, pimento, plantains, and other tropical fruits. The island is extremely populous; and it has several safe and commodious harbours, well fortified. It was taken by the English in 1762, 1794, and 1809, but restored in 1815. In 1806 it suffered great damage by a tremendous hurricane. Fort Royal is the capital.

Martock, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. with an elegant church, 130 W. by S. London.

Martorano, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citra, and a bishop's see, 18 m. from the sea and 15 S. of Cosenza.

Martorel, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, at the conflux of the Noya and Lobregat, 18 m. N. W. of Barcelona.

Martos, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a fortress. 10 m. W. of Jaen.

Maru, a town of Persia, in Khorasan, celebrated for its salt works; situate on the Morga, 130 m. E. N. E. of Mesched.

Marcao, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, 8 m. N. E. of Portalegre.

Marvejols, a town of France, department of Lozere, seated on the Colange, 10 m. N. W. of Mende.

Marcille, a town of France, department of Meuse, seated on the Oshein, 3 m. N. of Jametz.

Mary, St., a sea-port of the state of Georgia, in Camden county, at the mouth of St. Mary River, 70 m. S. by W. of Newport. Long. 81. 52. W., lat. 30. 43. N.

Mary River, St., a river of the state of Georgia, navigable for vessels of considerable burden for 90 m. Its banks afford immense quantities of fine timber suited to the W. India markets. It rises in the Okefonoko Swamp, and thence forms the boundary between Georgia and Florida to the ocean, which it enters at the town of St. Mary, between the points of Amilla and Cumberland islands.

Mary, Strait, St., a strait in N. America, about 70 m. long, which connects Lake Superior and Lake Huron. It contains a number of islands, and at the upper end is a rapid, which, by careful pilots, can be descended without danger.

Maryborough, a town of Ireland, in Queen's county, with considerable woolen manufactures.

It is the shire and assize town, and has an excellent gaol and a market-house. 17 m. S. of Philipstown and 43 S. W. of Dublin.

Maryland, one of the United States, bounded N. by Pennsylvania, E. by Delaware and the ocean; S. and W. by Virginia; extending from 38. to 39. 88. N. lat. and from 75. 10. to 75. 20. W. long. and containing 10,800 sq. m. It embosoms all the northern part of Chesapeake Bay, and is washed on the south-western limit by the Potomac; the other streams are the Patuxent, Patapsco, Severn, Choptank, and Nanticoke. A very narrow strip of its territory extends westwardly and is crossed by the eastern ranges of the Apalachian mountains; but nearly the whole of the state is level and low. In the west the soil is somewhat strong, and in other parts are tracts of thin unproductive soil, but in general the land is excellently fitted for the culture of grain and tobacco. The climate in the southern and eastern parts is unhealthy; agues and intermittent fevers are prevalent in this quarter in summer. The mineral productions are not numerous; bog iron is afforded in many of the level tracts in the south, and coal occurs in various quarters; neither of these, however, are extensively worked. Agriculture is chiefly confined to the staple articles of wheat and tobacco; cotton has lately been introduced, and promises well; flax and hemp are also raised in the west. The manufactures consist of cotton, paper, iron, glass, carpeting, &c. and there are great numbers of flour mills in the state, particularly in the neighbourhood of Baltimore. Commerce is very active; the state is admirably situated for maritime trade, being intersected by the noble bay of Chesapeake and many navigable rivers. The shipping in 1828 amounted to 170,927 tons, but a great proportion of the commerce is carried on by northern vessels. The imports for the same year were estimated at 4,804,135 dollars; the exports of domestic produce 3,662,273 dollars, total exports 4,804,465 dollars.

Maryland consists of two divisions, separated by the Chesapeake, called the Eastern and Western shores. The counties are 19. The population is 446,913, of whom 102,278 are slaves. Annapolis is the seat of government. Baltimore is much the largest city. The other principal towns are Fredrickstown and Hagerstown. The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Delegates. The senators are chosen for 5 years and the Delegates for one. The governor is chosen by the legislature annually. Suffrage is universal. The senators are chosen by electors, who are chosen by the people. Other elections are popular.

The most numerous sect are the Catholics who have an archbishop, the metropolitan of all the Catholics in the United States. They have in this state between 30 and 40 churches. The Episcopalians have 57 ministers; the Presbyterians 17; the Baptist 12; the German Reformed 9. Maryland has a university at Baltimore; at which place there is a Catholic college, and another at Emmittsburg. There is also a college at Annapolis.

The means of internal communications have been greatly increased by artificial improvements. The Potomac and Ohio canal commences in the western part of the state, and extends north-westwardly through this state and Virginia. The Port Deposit Canal passes along the Susquehanna to avoid the obstructions in that river. The Chesapeake and Delaware canal opens a ready communication between these two bays, and railroads extend from Baltimore toward the Ohio and Susquehanna.

This state was settled in 1653 by catholics who fled from persecution in England. The present constitution was formed in 1776.

Maryland, p.t. Otsego Co. N. Y. 67 m. W. Albany.

Maryport, a town in Cumberland, Eng. with a good harbour. In 1750 it was only a poor fishing town; but it has now upwards of 5,000 inhabitants who employ upwards of 130 vessels, from 50 to 250 tons burden, in the coal or coasting trade. Here are three ship-yards, and some manufactures; and near the town is the Roman station, Virosidum, where several altars and statues have been dug up. Besides the parish church, here are 5 meeting houses, and a national school. Maryport is situate at the mouth of the Ellen, in the Irish Sea. 25 m. S. W. of Carisle and 312 N. N. W. of London. Long. 3. 22. W., lat. 54. 35. N.

Maryville, p.v. Charlotte Co. Va. 60 m. S. W. Richmond.

Marysville, p.v. Campbell Co. Va. 160 m. S. W. Richmond, a town of Union Co. Ohio, 27 m. N. W. Columbus, p.v. Harrison Co. Ken. 35 m. N. E. Lexington, p.v. Blount Co. Ten. 12 m. S. Knoxville.

Marza, a town of Sicily, in Val di Noto, noted for its salt; 10 m. S. by W. of Noto.

Mas d' Agenois, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, on the river Garonne, 24 m. N. W. of Agen and 50 S. E. of Bordeaux.

Mas d' Asil, a town of France, department of Arriege, with a benedictine abbey seated on the Clisse, 8 m. S. W. of Pamiers.

Masafuero, an island in the Pacific Ocean, 80 m. W. of Juan Fernandez. It is high and mountainous but lowest to the N., and at a distance appears like a hill or rock. It is uninhabited, except by numerous seals and goats. There is also plenty of wood, but difficult to be got off; the heavy surf allows of no good landing place. Long. 81. 40. W., lat. 33. 40. N.

Masbate, one of the Philippines, about 80 m. in circumference; the natives are tributary to the Spaniards. Long. 123. 25. E., lat. 12. 18. N.

Masbrough, a village in W. Yorkshire, Eng. on the river Don, adjoining the bridge of Rotherham. Here are considerable iron works, where all sorts of hammered and cast-iron goods are made.

Mascara, the western province of Algiers, 370 m. long and 130 broad. It is dry, barren, and mountainous, except on the N. where there are plains abounding in corn, fruit, and pastures. The S. parts are inhabited by independent wandering tribes, particularly the Angad tribe.

Mascara, the capital of the above province, with a strong castle, in which the bey resides. In 1732 it was an inconsiderable place; but is now populous and flourishing. It is not so large as Tremesan, but surpasses it in beauty, having a great number of good houses and mosques. It is seated in a fertile district, 45 m. E. S. E. of Oran and 190 S. W. of Algiers. Long. 0. 40. E., lat. 35. 54. N.

Mascat, a sea-port on the E. coast of Arabia, with an excellent harbour. It has a castle on a rock, and is very strong both by nature and art, though the buildings are mean. It was taken, in 1508, by the Portuguese, who retained it for a century and a half. The cathedral, built by the Portuguese, is now the imam's palace. There is no vegetation to be seen on the sea-coast near it, and only a few date trees in a valley at the back of the town, though the inhabitants have all things in plenty. The bazaars are covered with the leaves of date trees, laid on beams which reach from the house tops on one side to those of the other. The inhabitants are Mahomedans. Great Britain recognises the flag of Mascat as neutral, and in time of war it has often been the medium of communication with the enemies' ports. It is seated on a small bay of the Arabian Sea. Long. 59. 26. E., lat. 23. 30. N.

Masham, a town in N. Yorkshire, Eng. with manufactures of coarse woolen cloths; seated on the Ure, 7 m. S. E. of Midclicham and 218 N. N. W. of London.

Mashanagar, a town of Caudahar, province of Cabul, situate on the Seward, 48 m. N. of Attock and 130 E. S. E. of Cabul. Long. 71. 7. E., lat. 33. 54. N.

Maskeley Isle, a small beautiful island, in the S. Pacific, lying off the S. E. point of Mallicollo, one of the New Hebrides. Long. 167. 59. E., lat. 16. 32. S.

Masmunster, a town of France, department of Upper Rhine, 25 m. S. S. W. of Colmar.

Mason, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H. 36 m. S. Concord. Pop. 1,403; a village in Pike Co. Miss.

Mason, a county of the W. district of Virginia. Pop. 6,534. Point Pleasant is the capital. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 16,205. Washington is the capital.

Mason Hall, p.v. Orange Co. N. C. 52 m. N. W. Raleigh.

Masonville, p.t. Delaware Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,145.

Masovia, a palatinate of Poland, bounded by Prussian Poland, the palatinates of Sendomir and Kalisch, and Vistula. The name formerly included a province of much greater extent. Warsaw is the capital.

Massa, a town of Italy, capital of the duchy of Massa Carrara which is famous for its quarries of fine marble. The town and its territory belonged to Tuscany, but they are now independent. It is seated on the river Frigido, 3 m. from the sea and 30 N. by W. of Leghorn. Long. 10. 10. E., lat. 44. 2. N. Pop. of the duchy 29,000; of the cap. 7,000.

Massa, a town of Tuscany, in Siennese. Borax and lapis lazuli are found in the neighbourhood. It is seated on a mountain near the sea, 35 m. S. W. of Sienna. Long. 11. 3. E., lat. 43. 5. N.

Massachusetts, one of the New England States bounded N. by N. Hampshire, E. by the ocean, S. by the ocean and the states of Rhode Island and Connecticut, extending from 41. 23. to 43. 52. N. lat. and from 69. 50. to 73. 10. W. long. 190 m. in extreme length from E. to W. and 90 in breadth and containing 7,500 square miles. The Green Mountains extend from Vermont into the western part of this state where they form two ridges called the Hoosac and Tagkannuc Mountains. Farther to the East the White Mountain range enters from New Hampshire and passes southerly to the east of Connecticut river, dividing below Northampton into the Mount Tom, and Lyme ranges. There are no considerable ridges farther east, but several detached eminences are scattered here and there, the most easterly of which is Mount Wachusett in Princeton. The highest point is Saddle Mountain, an eminence of the Tagkannuc ridge in the north-western corner of the state, this is 4,000 feet in height, few of the other peaks exceed 3,000. The rivers of Massachusetts are the Connecticut which intersects the western part, the Merrimack which enters at the north-east and meets the sea in this state, and the Housatonic which rises in the west and passes into Connecticut. The Pawtucket and Taunton which flow into Narraganset Bay, the Charles and Neponset flowing into Boston harbour. The climate exhibits considerable extremes of heat and cold; all the rivers are frozen for 3 months in winter, and the ground is commonly covered with snow during that time. The spring is wet, foggy and disagreeable; pleasant, settled weather is not generally expected before the middle of May. The summers are hot and vegetation is rapid; the autumn is serene and delightful; winter sets in at the end of November. The climate is salubrious with the exception of its tendency to aggravate pulmonary complaints.

The soil in the interior is generally good, and along the valley of the Connecticut, it is uncommonly rich. The south-eastern part consists of the narrow peninsula of Cape Cod, which projects into the sea in the shape of a man's arm bent inward at the elbow and wrist; it is 75 m. in length and from 5 to 20 in breadth; the soil of this part is almost entirely sand and produces little vegetation except pine shrubs, coarse grass and whortleberry bushes. Agriculture is well understood and skillfully practised in Massachusetts; no state in the Union surpasses it in this respect. The farms are generally from 100 to 200 acres and are almost universally the property of the cultivators; there are many agricultural societies in the state whose exertions to promote skilful and thrifty husbandry have been productive of the best effects. Cattle-shows and exhibitions of the various products of the soil and of household manufacture are also held in many parts of the state. The articles of cultivation are maize, wheat, rye, barley, oats, potatoes, pulse and garden vegetables in great varieties; hay is afforded in great quantities.

In minerals this state is not very productive. Iron is produced in the south; chiefly from bog ore; copper and lead have been found in the interior but they are not at present wrought; marble is abundant in the west, and granite of the best quality abounds at Chelmsford and Quincy. Soap stone and slate are produced in the interior parts, and the island of Martha's Vineyard furnishes argillaceous earth for the manufacture of alum.

The roads in this state are excellent, and the means of internal communication are facilitated by canals. Middlesex canal extends from the Merrimack to Boston harbour: Blackstone canal extends from Worcester to Providence and several canals pass round the obstructions in the Merrimack and Connecticut. The first railroad built in the United States was in this state, and extends from the granite quarries at Quincy to Neponset river. A railroad has also been commenced from Boston to Lowell, and another is projected from Boston to Providence.

In commerce this state is the second in the Union, and in tonnage of shipping, the first. The imports for 1829 were valued at 12,520,744 dollars. The exports of domestic produce at 3,949,751 dollars, total exports 2,254,937 dollars. The shipping in 1825 amounted to 429,513 tons. The fisheries are also very productive, and every sea-port in the state is engaged in them. The cod and mackerel fisheries occupy above 1,000 vessels and the whale fishery 460 ships. The product of the fisheries in 1825 was estimated at 1,070,922 dollars. In manufactures this state has the second rank: the fabrics are cotton, woolen, carpeting, paper, glass, iron, copper, lead, hats, leather, hosiery, lace, duck, chemical preparations, &c. The largest establishments are at Lowell on the Merrimack, 15 m. above Haverhill. This town has been recently founded, and by means of its manufactures has experienced a very rapid growth; a small cotton manufactory was first established here in 1813, and others were added a short time afterwards; at present the place continues to increase and bids fair to equal any of the interior towns in the United States. The manufactures of Lowell are chiefly cotton, of which more than 14,000,000 yards are made annually. Here are also made carpeting, cassimere, satinetts, &c. At Waltham, near Boston, are large manufactures of cotton, principally sheeting and shirting; about 3,000,000 yards are made annually. At Troy are large manufactures of cotton, woolen and iron. At Taunton are manufactures of calico, iron, copper, and lead. At Amesbury are manufactures of flannel, and there are others of woolen and cotton at Southbridge, Milbury, Ware, M, Dudley, Northampton, and a great number of other towns. In many places on the coast are manufactures of salt by solar evaporation. Upon Cape Cod, and in the neighbourhood of New Bedford, more than 600,000 bushels are made yearly.

There are colleges in this state at Cambridge, Williamstown and Amherst, a Theological institution at Andover, and between 50 and 60 incorporated academies in different parts. General education receives the greatest care; common schools are maintained by law in every town. The religious sects are not so numerous as in most other parts of the Union. The Calvinistic Congregationalists have 154 ministers; the Unitarians 140; the Baptists 110; the Methodists 71; the Universalists 46; the Episcopalians 30; and there are one or two other sects. Remnants of some of the Indian tribes still remain in this state; they are about 750 in number and live principally on the island of Martha's Vineyard and on the southerly coast of Cape Cod. They are under the guardianship of the state government and have missionaries residing among them.

Massachusetts was first settled at Plymouth in December 1620, and this establishment was the germ of all the New England colonies. The state received its name from Massasoit, an Indian Sachem with whom the first settlers made a treaty which was faithfully observed for 50 years. The American revolution began in this state with the battle at Lexington in 1775. The British were driven from Boston the next year, and an independent government was established which preserved the colonial form till 1790. A convention of delegates in that year framed the present constitution, which was slightly revised in 1820.

Massachusetts is divided into 14 counties. The pop. is 610,014. There are 305 towns in the state. The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Representatives, the members of which as well as the Governor and Lieutenant Governor are chosen yearly. Elections are popular, and suffrage is universal. Boston is the capital. The other large towns are Salem, Newburyport, New Bedford, Charlestown, Cambridge, Gloucester, Plymouth, Lynn, Marblehead, Nantucket, Northampton, Springfield, and Haverhill.

Massachusetts Bay, a bay of the foregoing state between Cape Ann, and Cape Cod.

Massafra, a town of Naples, in Terra d'Otranto, 16 m. N. W. of Taranto.

Massena, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. on the St. Lawrence. Pop. 2,070.

Masserano, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont. 40 m. N. N. E. of Turin.

Masserne Mountains, a branch of the Ozark range, extending east and west through the western part of Arkansas Territory.

Mecca, a city of Arabia, famous as the birth-place of Mahomet. It is seated in a barren valley, surrounded by many little hills, consisting of a blackish rock. The houses follow the windings of the valley, and are built partly on the declivities upon each side. The streets are regular, level, and convenient. The chief support of the inhabitants is derived from the pilgrims, who flock to this place from every part of the Mahometan world. On the top of one of the hills is a cave, where they pretend Mahomet usually retired to perform his devotions; and hither, they affirm, the greatest part of the Koran was brought to him by the angel Gabriel. Numbers of sheep are brought hither to be sold to the pilgrims. The principal ornament of Mecca is the famous temple, which has 42 doors, and its form resembles that of the Royal Exchange in London, but it is nearly ten times as large. The area in the middle is covered with gravel, except in two or three places that lead to the Beat-Allah through certain doors; and these are paved with short stones. The Beat-Allah, in the middle of the temple, is a square structure, covered all over with a thick sort of silk, and the middle embroidered with large letters of gold: the door is covered with silver plates, and has a silver curtain before it, thick with gold embroidery. This Beat is the principal object of the pilgrims' devotion, and is open but two days in the space of six weeks, one day for the men and the next for the women. About 12 paces from the Beat is the pretended sepulchre of Abraham, by whom the Mahometans affirm the Beat-Allah to have been erected; and 2 m. from the town, according to the same authority, is the hill on which he prepared to offer up his son Isaac. The famous balm of Mecca is not manufactured in this city but is found and brought hither from the surrounding country. Mecca is governed by a sheref, who is a temporal prince, and his revenue is increased by the donations of Mahometan sovereigns. It is 34 m. E. N. E. of Jidda, the sea-port of Mecca, and 220 S. by E. of Medina. Long. 40. 55. E. lat. 21. 40. N.

Melgaza, a town of Portugal, in Entre Douero e Minho, with a strong castle; seated on the Minho, 27 m. N. by E. of Braga.

Melida, an island of Dalmatia, in the gulf of Venice, with a benedictine abbey, 6 villages, and several harbours. It is 30 m. in length, and abounds in oranges, citrons, wine, and fish.

Melilla, a sea-port of Fez, on the coast of the Mediterranean. In 1496 it was taken by the Spaniards, who built a citadel. It is 115 m. N. E. of Fez. Long. 2. 57. W., lat. 34. 58. N.

Melinda, a kingdom of E. Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar. Its products are gold, elephants' teeth, ostriches' feathers, wax; and aloes, senna, and other drugs; also plenty of rice, sugar, coconuts, and other tropical fruits.

Melinda, the capital of the above kingdom, is a large and handsome place, surrounded by fine gardens. It has a good harbour, defended by a fort; but the entrance is dangerous, on account of the great number of shoals and rocks under water. The inhabitants are said to amount to above 200,000, principally negroes. 470 m. S. W. Magadoxa. Long. 41. 48. E., lat. 2. 15. S.

Melipilla, a province of Chile, extending about 25 leagues from E. to W, and abounding in grain and wine. Logrono is the capital.

Melita. See Malta.

Melitto, a town of Sicily, in Val di Noto, 8 m. W. of Leontini.

Melitopol, a town of Russia, government of Taurida, situate on a lake, 12 m. from the sea of Asoph and 108 S. of Catharinenslaf.

Melisham, a town in Wiltshire, Eng. with a market every other Thursday for cattle, and a manufacture of broad cloths. It has a large parish church and three meeting houses. 99 m. W. of London.

Melle, a town of Hanover, seated on the Hase, 15 m. E. by S. of Osnaburg.

Melle, a town of France, department of Deux Sevres, 12 m. S. W. of Niort.

Meller. See Mader.

Mellingen, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Aargau, seated on the Reuss, 9 m. S. by W. of Baden.

Melrille, a township of Cumberland Co. N. J.

Melnick, a town of Bohemia, with a castle. Its vicinity yields excellent red and white wine, and near it stands the Augustine convent of Schopka. It is seated on the Elbe, opposite the influx of the Muldau, 18 m. N. of Prague.

Meloui, a town of Egypt, with a remarkable mosque; seated on the Nile, 3 m. S. of Ashmunein.

Melrose, a town of Scotland, in Roxburghshire, with manufactures of linen and woollen cloth. At some distance from the town, on the S. side of the Tweed, are the magnificent remains of Melrose Abbey, founded by David I. part of which is still used for divine service. Alexander II. is said to be buried under the great altar. Abbotsford, the seat of Sir Walter Scott, is in the vicinity of the abbey. Melrose is 11 m. N. W. of Jedburg and 35 S. of Edinburgh.

Melton Montbray, a town in Leicestershire, Eng. The fine cheese called Stilton is chiefly made in its neighbourhood. The church is a fine Gothic edifice, and here are two meeting-houses, a charity school, a national school, and 12 almshouses, six of which were erected in 1827. It is seated in a rich grazing country, on the river Eye, over which are two handsome stone bridges, 15 m. N. E. of Leicester and 106 N. by W. of London.

Meltonsville, p.v. Anson Co. N. C. 130 m. S. W. Raleigh.

Melun, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne. It has a trade with Paris in corn, meal, wine, and cheese; and is seated on the Seine, 25 m. S. E. of Paris. Long. 2. 35. E., lat. 48. 30. N.

Melville Island, one of a group of islands in the Polar Sea of the western continent, called the Georgian Archipelago, where the English discovery ships under Capt. Parry wintered. It lies between 74. 25, and 75. 50. N. lat. and 106. and 114. W. long. 240 m. long and 100 broad. It is a mass of rocks without a tree or shrub, but in the ravines or valleys the soil affords grass, moss and salads. A few Esquimaux resort hither in summer, and the wild animals of the north also make it their abode in the same season. Herds of musk oxen were seen at Winter Harbour in this island early in the spring. These animals have a singular appearance owing to the shortness of their limbs, their broad, flattened and crooked horns and their long hair which hangs nearly down to the ground. When full grown they weigh about 700 pounds. The flesh of the young cow and calves is tolerably good, but the old ones have so strong a scent of musk that they cannot be eaten. They are found in great numbers within the Arctic Circle, and go in herds of eighty or an hundred.

Menel, a strong town of E. Prussia, with a castle, a fine harbour, and an extensive commerce. It is seated on a river of the same name, at the N. extremity of the Curische Haff; and on the N. E. side of the entrance into the harbour is a lighthouse. It is 70 m. N. E. of Konigsberg and 130 N. E. of Dantzie. Long. 21. 26. E., lat. 55. 46. N.

Memmingen, a town of Bavaria, defended by art, and surrounded by a morass. It has a considerable trade in fine linen, fustian, cotton, paper, salt, tobacco, and hops. Near this place, in 1795, the French republicans defeated the emigrants under the prince of Conde; and in 1800 the French defeated the Austrians, and took the town. It is seated in a fertile plain, near the river Iller, 28 m. S. by E. of Ulm. Long. 10. 12. E., lat. 48. 0. N.

Memphis, p.t. Shelby Co. Ten. on the Mississippi, on the site of old Fort Pickering. It has a fine situation at a point where the great western road strikes the river.

Memphrenagog, a lake of N. America, in Canada and Vermont, 35 m. long and 3 broad. Its outlet is the river St. Frances, running into the St. Lawrence. On an island in this lake is a quarry of oil stone equal to the best Turkey oil stone.

Menai, a strait which divides the island of Anglesey from the other parts of N. Wales. An elegant suspension bridge has been thrown over this strait, which will allow vessels that pass the strait to sail beneath it.

Menan, a river of the kingdom of Siam, which passes by the city of Siam, and enters the gulf of Siam, below Bancoek.

Menancobore, a kingdom in the centre of the island of Sumatra. The country is described as a large plain, clear of wood, comparatively well cultivated, and abounding in gold.

Meude, a town of France, capital of the department of Lozere, and a bishop's see. It has manufactures of serges and other woolen stuffs; and is seated on the Lot, 35 m. S. W. of Puy and 210 S. by E. of Paris. Long. 3. 30. E., lat. 44. 31. N.

Mendham, p.t. Morris Co. N. Y.

Mendip Hills, a lofty tract in the N. E. of Somersetshire, Eng. abounding in coal, calamine, and lead; copper, manganese, bole, and red ochre, are also found. A great portion of these hills, formerly covered with heath and fern, has been brought into cultivation and produces good corn. At the bottom of a deep ravine, near the village of Berrington, a cavern was discovered, in 1798, containing a great number of human bones, many of them incrustated with a calcareous cement, and a large portion completely incorporated with the solid rock.

Mendelsham, a decayed village and parish in Suffolk, Eng. where an ancient silver crown, weighing 60 ounces, was dug up about the end of the 17th century. It is seated near the source of the Deben, 80 m. N. E. of London.

Mendon, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 37 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 3,152; a township of Monroe Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,075.

Mendoza, a city of Buenos Ayres, province of Cuyo, on the E. side of the Andes, in a plain adorned with gardens, well watered by canals. It contains four convents, a college, and a church. A river of the same name flows by this town, and finally enters the Atlantic under the name of Colorado. Long. 70. 12. W., lat. 34. 0. S.

Mendrah, a province of the kingdom of Fezzan, much of which is a continued level of hard and barren soil; but the quantity of trona, a species of fossil alkali, that floats on the surface, or settles on the banks of its numerous smoking lakes, has given it a higher importance than that of the more fertile districts. It has a town of the same name, 60 m. S. of Mourzouk.

Mendrisio, a town of Switzerland, canton of Ticino, containing several convents. 7 m. W. by N. of Como.

Menchould, St., a town of France, department of Marne. In 1792 the French gave the first check to the progress of the Prussians at this place, which in the end compelled them to a retreat. It is seated in a morass, on the river Aisne, between two rocks, 20 m. E. N. E. of Chalons.

Mengen, a town of Wurtemberg, near the Danube, 50 m. S. of Stuttgart.

Mengeringhausen, a town and castle of Germany, county of Waldeck, 8 m. N. E. of Corbach and 24 N. W. of Cassel.

Mein, a town of the Netherlands, in W. Flanders. It has been often taken; the last time by the French in 1794. It is seated on the Lis, 10 m. N. of Lisle.

Mentone, a town of Nice, with a castle and a small harbour, 5 m. E. N. E. of Monaco.

Mentor, p.t. Geauga Co. Ohio.

Mentz, or Mayence, a city of Germany, in the grand duchy of Hesse, and a bishop's see. It is well fortified, and deemed a barrier fortress. The city is built in an irregular manner, and plentifully provided with churches. The principal buildings are the electoral palace (now much decayed), the house of the Teutonic knights, and the cathedral. Mentz is one of the towns which claim the invention of printing; and the growth of the best Rhenish wine is limited to a circle of about five miles round it. The French took this place by surprise in 1792; and the next year it stood a long blockade and siege before it surrendered to the allies. It was twice re-attacked by the French in 1795, but they were defeated by the Austrians, who also relieved it from a blockade of two months in 1796. The siege was soon after resumed, and continued till the signing of the treaty of Udina in 1797, when the city was taken possession of by the French. By the peace of Luneville, in 1801, it was formally ceded to France, but was delivered up to the allies in 1814. Mentz is seated on the Rhine, just below the influx of the Maine, and on the opposite side is the town of Cassel, connected with it by a bridge of boats. It is 22 m. W. S. W. of Frankfort and 70 E. by N. of Treves. Long. 8. 10. E., lat. 49. 58. N.

Mentz, a township of Cayuga Co. N. Y. 12 m. N. W. Auburn on the Erie Canal. Pop. 4,144.

Menuf, a town of Egypt, situate in a well cultivated country, near that branch of the Nile which flows to Rosetta, 40 m. N. N. W. of Cairo.

Menzala, a town of Egypt, situate near a lake of the same name, 60 m. long, separated from the Mediterranean by a narrow slip of land. It is 40 m. S. S. E. of Damietta and 73 N. N. E. of Cairo. Long. 32. 2. E., lat. 31. 3. N.

Meppen, a town of Westphalia, capital of a district of the same name, 52 m. N. of Munster.

Mequinenza, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a castle, seated at the conflux of the Segra with the Ebro, 58 m. E. S. E. of Saragossa and 180 E. N. E. of Madrid.

Mequinez, a city of Morocco, seated in a delightful plain, having a serene and clear air; for which reason the emperor frequently resides in this place in preference to Fez. The palace stands on the S. side, and is guarded by several hundreds of black eunuchs, whose knives and scimitars are covered with wrought silver. In the middle of the city, the Jews have a place to themselves, the gates of which are locked every night, and guarded. Close by Mequinez, on the N. W. side, is a large Negro town, which takes up as much ground as the city, but the houses are not so high, nor so well built. The inhabitants of Mequinez, estimated at 112,000, are considered more polished and hospitable than those of the southern provinces. 58 m. W. of Fez. Long. 5. 46. W., lat. 32. 40. N.

Mer, a town of France, department of Loire-et-Cher, 11 m. N. N. W. of Blois.

Meran, a town of the Austrian States, in Tyrol, of which it was formerly the capital; seated near the conflux of the Passar, with the Adige, 12 m. N. N. W. of Botzen. Long. 11. 5. E., lat. 46. 39. N.

Mercer, a county of the W. district of Pennsylvania. Pop. 19,731. The chief town has the same name. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 17,706. Harrodsburg is the capital. A county of Ohio. Pop. 1,110. St. Mary's is the capital. A county of Illinois. Pop. 26.

Mergui, a sea-port on the W. coast of Siam, with an excellent harbour. It was wrested from the Siamese by the Birmans in 1755, but was ceded to Britain in 1824-5, and is 208 m. S. W. of Siam. Long. 98. 9. E., lat. 12. 12. N.

Mergui Archipelago, consists of islands extending 135 m. along the coast of Tannasserim and the isthmus of the Malay peninsula, with a strait between them and the mainland, from 15 to 30 m. broad, having regular soundings and good anchorage. They are in general covered with trees, but are not inhabited, although the soil appears fertile. The principal of them are King's Island, Ciara, St. Mathew's and Tannasserim.

Merida, a strong town of Spain, in Estremadura, built by the Romans, before the birth of Christ. Here are fine remains of antiquity, particularly a triumphal arch. In 1811 it fell into the hands of the French, but was retaken by general (afterwards lord) Hill in the following year. It is seated in an extensive fertile plain, on the river Guadiana, over which is a noble Roman bridge. 32 m. E. of Badajoz. Long. 5. 58. W., lat. 38. 47. N.

Merida, a town of Mexico, capital of a province of the same name, lying between the Bays of Honduras and Campeachy. It is situated in an arid plain. 30 m. S. of the gulf of Mexico and 70 N. of Campeachy. Long. 89. 58. W., lat. 20. 45. N.

Meriden, p.t. New Haven Co. Conn. 17 m. N. W. of Haven. Pop. 1,708.

Meridiansville, p.v. Madison Co. Alab.

Meridien, p.v. Madison Co. Missouri.

Merion, Upper and Lower, two townships in Montgomery Co. Pa. near Philadelphia.

Merionethshire, a county of Wales. It contains nearly 500,000 acres, is divided into 5 hundreds and 37 parishes, has four market towns, and sends one member to parliament. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 34,382. The face of the country is varied throughout with a romantic mixture of all the scenery peculiar to a wild and mountainous region. The principal rivers are the Dee and Dyfi. Cader Idris, one of the highest mountains in Wales, is in this county.

Merith, an important town and fortress of Hin doostan, in the province of Bejapoor, situate near the N. bank of the Kistna, 62 m. S. W. of Visiapour.

Mermentau, a lake and river in the S. W. part of Louisiana flowing into the gulf of Mexico.

Mero, a strong town of the kingdom of Pegu 140 m. S. W. of Pegu. Long. 98. 36. E., lat. 10. 0. N.

Merou, a town of Persia, in Khorassan, seated in a fertile country, which produces salt, 112 m. S. W. of Bokhara. Long. 64. 25. E., lat. 37. 40. N.

Merrittstown, p.v. Fayette Co. Pa.

Merrittsville, p.v. Greenville Dis. S. C. 120 m. N. W. Columbus.

Merrimack, a river of New England rising in New Hampshire. One of its head streams called the Pemigewasset has its source near the Notch of the White Mountains; the other flows through Winnipisogee Lake. The river runs south into Massachusetts, where it turns south-east and flows to the sea at Newburyport. In the upper part of its course it is much obstructed by falls. These afford excellent mill sites, and the largest manufactories in the United States are situated on this river. Many canals pass around the falls; at Chelmsford the Middlesex canal extends from this river to Boston harbour. The mouth of the river is obstructed by a sand bar which does not admit the passage of ships except at high water. There is a good navigation for vessels of 200 tons to Haverhill. Two chain bridges cross the river at Newburyport and Salisbury. The current is rapid and the shores bold; the interval borders are narrower than upon the Connecticut, but afford much beautiful scenery. The waters are pure and salubrious and abound in salmon, shad, alewives, herring and sturgeon, which last gave name to the river, Merrimack being the Indian name for sturgeon. The chief branches are the Contoocook in New Hampshire and Nashua and Concord rivers in Massachusetts.

Merrimack, a county of New Hampshire, formed from the N. part of Hillsborough Co. Pop. 34,619. Concord is the capital.

Merrimack, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H. 6 m. E. Amherst. Pop. 1,191. Also townships in Washington and Franklin Cos. Missouri.

Merryhill, p.v. Bertie Co. N. C.

Merry meeting Bay, a wide expansion of water at the junction of the Kennebec and Androscoggin rivers. Also a bay in Winnipisogee Lake.

Mersea, a town in Essex Co. U. C. on Lake Erie.

Mersch, a town of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Luxemburg, 8 m. N. of Luxemburg.

Merseburg, one of the new divisions of the Prussian states, consisting principally of cessions made by Saxony in 1815. It lies to the S. of Anhalt and to the E. of the government of Erfurt, and comprises an area of 4,000 sq. m. with 471,000 inhabitants.

Merseburg, the capital of the above government, formerly a bishopric. The most remarkable buildings are the castle, the cathedral which stands below it, and the academy. The brewing and exportation of strong beer furnish the principal employment of the inhabitants. It is seated on the Saale, 15 m. N. W. of Leipzig.

Mersey, a river of England, which rises in the N. extremity of the Peak in Derbyshire, receives the Tame at Stockport, and, lower down, the Irwell; it then passes by Warrington, and receives the Weaver at Frodsham, where it forms a broad estuary, that contracts on its approach to Liverpool, below which it enters the Irish Sea. This river not only affords salmon, but it is visited by annual shoals of smelts, here called sparlings, of a remarkable size and flavor.

Mersey, an island in Essex, Eng. between the mouth of the Coln and the entrance of Blackwater Bay. It has two parishes, called E. and W. Mersey. 7 m. S. of Colchester.

Merthyr Tydfil, a town of S. Wales, in Glamorganshire. It has a canal to Cardiff, immense mines of iron and coal, and very extensive iron works. 3 m. distant are the ruins of Morlais Castle, said to have been the residence of the kings of Brecknock. It is seated on the Taaf, 24 m. N. N. W. of Cardiff and 180 W. of London.

Mertola, a strong town of Portugal, in Alemtejo, seated near the Guadiana, 60 m. S. of Evora and 100 S. E. of Lisbon. Long. 7. 37 W. lat. 37. 41. N.

Merton, a village in Surrey, Eng. with calico manufactures and bleach-fields. Here Henry III. held a parliament in 1236, at which were enacted the Provisions of Merton, the most ancient body of laws after Magna Charta. It is seated on the Maudle, 7 m. S. W. of London.

Merville, a town of France, department of Nord, seated on the Lys, 15 m. N. of Lisle.

Mesched, a city of Persia, capital of Khorassan. It is fortified with several towers; and is famous for the magnificent sepulchre of Iman Risa, of the family of Ali, to which the Persians pay great devotion. Here is a manufacture of beautiful pottery, and another of skins. Caravans are continually passing through this city from Bokharia, Balk, Candahar, Hindoostan, and all parts of Persia. It is 180 m. E. of Asterabad and 490 N. E. of Ispahan. Long. 58. 30. E., lat. 35. 56. N.

Mesched Ali, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irak-Arabi, near a large lake, called Rahema, which communicates with the Euphrates by a canal. It stands on the spot where Ali, one of the successors of Mahomet, was interred; and his tomb is annually visited by Persian pilgrims. It is 110 m. S. of Bagdad. Long. 44. 50. E., lat. 32. 5. N.

Mesopotamia, the ancient name for the country lying between the Tigris and Euphrates. It now forms a part of Asiatic Turkey.

Mesopotamia, p.t. Truabull Co. Ohio. 170 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 562.

Messa, a considerable town of Morocco, on the river Sus, not far from the Atlantic. It is 165 m. S. W. of Morocco. Long. 10. 46. W., lat. 29. 58. N.

Messina, a sea-port of Sicily, capital of an intendency of the same name, in Val di Demona, with a citadel and several forts. It is 5 m. in circumference, has four large suburbs, and contains 36,000 inhabitants. The public buildings and monasteries are numerous and magnificent; there are 50 churches, including the cathedral, which is much admired. The harbour is one of the safest in the Mediterranean, and has a quay about a mile in length. A great trade is carried on here in silk, oil, fruit, corn, and excellent wine. This city suffered much by an earthquake in 1770; and also in 1683, when it was half destroyed. It has since been rebuilt, with elegant houses only two stories high. For several years prior to the peace of 1814, Messina was the head-quarters of the British troops in Sicily. It is seated on the strait of Messina, which separates Sicily from Calabria 130 m. E. of Palermo. Long. 15. 50. E., lat. 38. 10. N.

Messing, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Aichstat. 14 m. N. N. E. of Aichstat.

Mestre, a town of Austrian Italy, in Treviso 8 m. N. W. of Venice.

Metz, a town of France, in the department of Moselle, and formerly the capital of the kingdom of Austrasia. The fortifications are excellent, and it has three citadels and noble barracks. The cathedral is one of the finest in Europe. Here are manufactures of cotton, linen, gauze, chintz, fustian, &c.; and a considerable trade in leather, wine, brandy, &c. The sweetmeats made here are in high esteem. Metz is the seat of the department administration and a bishop's see, and contains nearly 42,000 inhabitants. It is seated at the conflux of the Moselle and Sille, 210 m.

N. E. of Paris. Long. 6. 10. E., lat. 49 °. N.

Metzovo, a range of mountains in European Turkey, separating Albania from Thessaly. It is the ancient Pindus. There is a village of this name among the mountains.

Meudon, a village of France, with a magnificent royal palace and park; seated on the Seine, 6 m. S. of Paris.

Meulan, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise; seated on the Seine, over which is a stone bridge of 21 arches, 26 m. N. W. of Paris.

Meurs, or Maers, a town of the Prussian states, capital of a small principality of the same name. It has a castle, and was formerly a place of strength, but its fortifications were destroyed in 1764. 16 m. N. N. E. of Dusseldorf.

Meurthe, a town of France, including part of the former province of Lorraine. It is bounded by the department of Moselle, Vosges, and Meuse, and comprises an area of 2,500 sq. m., with 365,600 inhabitants. The climate is temperate, and the soil in general fertile. Nancy is the capital.

Meurthe, a river of France, which rises in the department of Vosges, and flows by Lunéville and Nancy into the Moselle.

Meuse, a river which rises in France, in the department of Upper Marne. It enters the Netherlands at Givet, flows to Charlemont, Namur, Huy, Liege, Maestricht, Ruremonde, Venlo, Grave, Battenburg, Ravestern, Gorcum (where it receives the Waal), and Worcum. At Dort it divides into four principal branches, the most northern of which is called the Merve. These form the island of Ysselmonde, Voorn, and Over-slackee, and enters the German Ocean below Briel, Helvoetsluys and Goree.

Meuse, a department of France, including the former duchy of Bar. It is bounded by the grand duchy of Luxemburg, and the departments of Moselle, Vosges, Marne, and Ardennes, and comprises an area of 2,500 sq. m. with 285,000 inhabitants. Bar sur Ormain is the capital.

Mewar, an extensive district of Hindoostan, province of Agimere, lying chiefly between 25. and 26. of N. lat.

Mewar, a hilly and woody tract of Hindoostan lying on the S. W. of Dehli, confining the low country, along the W. bank of the Jumna, to a comparatively narrow slip, and extending westward 130 m. From N. to S. it is 90 m. Its inhabitants, the Mewattí, have been ever characterized as the most savage and brutal, and are still noted as thieves and robbers. The country contains some strong fortresses on steep or inaccessible hills. It is nominally possessed by the rajah of Macherry.

Mexicano, or Adayes, a river of New Mexico, on the confines of Louisiana, which runs into the gulf of Mexico.

Mexico, a country of N. America, now forming an independent republic, situated between 42. and 113. W. long., and extending from the Pacific Ocean to the Carribean Sea, the gulf of Mexico and the Sabine River. It comprises an area of 1,700,000 sq. m. with about 7,000,000 of inhabitants. In general it is a mountainous country intermixed with many rich valleys: the highest mountains many of which are volcanoes, are near the coast of the Pacific Ocean. The eastern shore is a flat country, full of impenetrable forests, with bogs and morasses, overflowed in the rainy season, which is from April to September. Although a considerable portion of Mexico is within the torrid zone, the climate in general is temperate and healthy. No country abounds more with grain, fruits, roots, and vegetables, many of them peculiar to the country, or at least to America. It is also celebrated for its mines of gold and silver, and has quarries of jasper and porphyry, and exquisite marble. Cochineal is almost peculiar to this country; its indigo and cocoa are superior to any in America; and its logwood has long been an important article of commerce. Among the quadrupeds are the puma, jaguar, bears, elks, wolves, deer, &c. The peccary of this country is sometimes called the Mexican hog. These animals frequent the mountainous and woody parts and go in large herds together. They commit great ravages among the sugar-canes, maize, manihot and potato fields. In Guiana the Indians shoot them with poisoned arrows blown through a tube. The domestic animals of Europe, particularly horned cattle, have multiplied here, almost with incredible rapidity. Numbers of these having been suffered to run wild, now range over the vast plains, in herds from 30,000 to 40,000; they are killed merely for the sake of their hides, which are annually exported, in vast quantities, to Europe. The inhabitants consist of native Spaniards, Creoles, who are descendants of Europeans; Mulattoes, the issue of whites and negroes; Mestizoes, descendants of whites and Indians; Zamboes, descendants of negroes and Indians; and African negroes, with whom are classed a mixed extraction from Europeans, Africans, Indians, and Malays or others of Asiatic origin. Far from becoming extinct, the indigenous population goes on increasing, especially during the last hundred years; and accordingly, it would appear that, in total amount, these countries are more populous at present than they were previously to the arrival of Europeans. The kingdom of Montezuma did not equal in extent the eighth part of New Spain as it now exists. The great towns of the Aztecs, and their most cultivated lands were met with in the environs of the capital of Mexico, and particularly in the delicious valley of Tenochtitlan. The kings of Alcolhuacan, of Tlacoapan, and of Mechoacan, were independent princes. Beyond the parallel of 20. were the Chichimegs and Otomites, two wandering and barbarous nations, whose hordes, though far from numerous, pushed their incursions as far as Tula, a town situated near the northern border of the valley of Tenochtitlan. It would be just as difficult however to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, the number of Montezuma's subjects, as it would be to decide respecting the ancient population of Egypt, Persia, Carthage, or Greece, or even with regard to many modern states. History presents us, on the one hand, with a train of conquerors ambitious to throw additional lustre on their own exploits; on the other, religious and sensible men directing with noble ardour the arms of eloquence against the cruelty of the first colonists. Both parties were equally interested in exaggerating the flourishing condition of the newly discovered countries. At all events, the extensive ruins of towns and villages that are met with in the 18. and 20. of latitude in the interior of Mexico, seem to prove that the population of this single part of the kingdom was once far superior to what it is now. Yet it must be remarked that these ruins are dispersed over a space that, relatively speaking, is but very limited.

To a great degree of muscular strength, the copper-coloured natives add the advantage of being seldom or never subject to any deformity. M. Humboldt assures us that he never saw a hunch-back Indian, and that they very seldom squint, or are met with either lame or wanting the use of their arms. In those countries where the inhabitants suffer from the goitre, this affection of the thyroid gland is never observed among the Indians, and rarely among the Mestizoës. The Indians of New Spain, and especially the women, generally live to an advanced age. Their hair, it is said, never turns grey, and they preserve all their strength till the period of their death. In respect of the moral faculties of the indigenous Mexicans, it is difficult to form a just estimate of them, if we consider this unhappy nation almost in the only light in which there has been an opportunity of viewing it by intelligent travellers, as sinking under long oppression, and depressed almost to the lowest pitch of degradation.

In his present condition, the Mexican Indian is grave, melancholy, and taciturn, as long as he is not under the influence of intoxicating liquors. This gravity is particularly remarkable in the children of Indians, who at the early age of four or five years display infinitely greater intelligence and development of mind than the children of whites. They delight in throwing an air of mystery over their most trifling remarks. Not a passion manifests itself in their features. At all times sombre, there is something terrific in the change, when he passes all at once from a state of absolute repose to violent and ungovernable agitation. The energy of his character, to which every shade of softness is unknown, habitually degenerates into ferocity. This is especially the case with the inhabitants of Tlascal. In the midst of their degradation, the descendants of these republicans are still distinguished by a certain haughtiness with which they are inspired by the remembrance of their former greatness.

The Mexicans have preserved a particular taste for painting and for the art of carving on stone and wood. It is truly astonishing to see what they are capable of executing with a bad knife upon the hardest wood and stone. They exercise themselves in painting the images, and carving the statues of saints; but from a religious principle, they have continued to servilely imitate for 300 years, the models which the Europeans brought with them at the period of the original conquest. In Mexico as well as Hindoostan, the faithful are not allowed to make the smallest change in their idols; every thing connected with the rites of the Aztecs was subjected to immutable laws: It is on this very account that the Christian images have preserved in some degree, that stiffness and hardness of feature which characterised the hieroglyphical pictures of the age of Montezuma. They display a great deal of aptitude for the exercise of the arts of imitation, and still greater for those of a purely mechanical nature.

When an Indian has attained a certain degree of cultivation, he shows great facility in acquiring information, a spirit of accuracy and precision, and a particular tendency to subtilize, or to seize on the minutest differences in objects that are to be compared with each other. He reasons coldly and with method; but he does not evince that activity of imagination, that lively freshness of sentiment, that art of producing, which characterises the people of Europe and many tribes of African negroes. The music and dancing of the indigenous natives partake of that want of cheerfulness which is so peculiar to them. Their singing is of a melancholy description. More vivacity, however, is observed in their women than in their men; but they share the evils of that state of subjection to which the sex is condemned among most of those nations where civilization is still imperfect. In the dance women take no part; they are merely present for the sake of offering to the dancers the fermented drinks which they themselves had prepared.

The Mexican Indians have likewise preserved the same taste for flowers that Cortez noticed in his time. We are astonished to discover this taste, which doubtless indicates a taste for the beautiful, among the people in whom a sanguinary worship, and the frequency of human sacrifices appears to have extinguished every feeling connected with sensibility of mind and the softer affections. In the great market of Mexico, the native does not even sell fish, or ananas, or vegetables, or fermented liquor, without his shop being decked out with flowers, which are renewed every succeeding day. The Indian shop-keeper appears seated behind a perfect entrenchment of verdure and every thing around him wears an air of the most refined elegance.

The Indian hunters, such as the Mecos, the Apaches, and the Lipans, whom the Spaniards comprehend under the denomination of Indios bravos, and whose hordes in their incursions which are often made during night, infest the frontiers of New Biscay, Sonora, and New Mexico, evince more activity of mind, and more strength of character, than the agricultural Indians. Some tribes have even languages, the mechanism of which appears to prove the existence of ancient civilization. They have great difficulty in learning the European idioms, while, at the same time they express themselves in their own with an extreme degree of facility. These same Indian chiefs, whose gloomy taciturnity astonishes the observer, will hood a discourse of several hours, whenever any strong interest rouses them to break their habitual silence. This whole country was long under the dominion of Spain, and governed by a viceroy. The first attempt to assume independence took place in 1810. In 1824 a federal government was established. Numerous disturbances have since arisen, and the country is still far from being in a settled state.

Mexico, the capital of the above country. It was a flourishing city before the Spaniards entered the country, and was seated on several islands, in a salt-water lake, called Tezcuco, to which there was no entrance, but by three cause-ways, 2 m. in length each. The circumference of the city, exclusive of the suburbs, was formerly above 19 m. and it contained at least 80,000 houses, with several large temples, and three palaces. It was taken by Ferdinand Cortez, in 1521, after a siege of nearly three months, and, as the Mexicans defended themselves from street to street, it was almost ruined, but was afterwards rebuilt by the Spaniards. The water in the neighborhood of the city has dried up, and Mexico is now three miles distant from the shores of the lake. The streets are wide and straight, but badly paved. The houses present a magnificent appearance, being built of porphyry and amygdaloid. Several palaces and private mansions have a majestic effect, and its churches glitter with metallic riches. The cathedral surpasses, in this respect, all the churches in the world; the balustrade which surrounds the great altar being composed of massive silver. A lamp of the same metal, is of so vast a size that three men go into it when it is to be cleaned; and it is enriched with lions' heads, and other ornaments of pure gold. The statues of the Virgin and the saints are either made of solid silver, or richly gilded, and ornamented with precious stones. Palaces, mansions of great families, beautiful fountains, and extensive squares, adorn the interior of this city. To the north, near the suburbs, is the principal public promenade, or Alameda. Round this walk flows a rivulet, forming a fine square, in the middle of which there is a basin with a fountain. Eight alleys of trees terminate here, in the figure of a star. But in consequence of an unfortunate proximity, immediately in front of the alameda, the eye discovers the Quemadero, a place where Jews and other victims of the terrible Inquisition, were burned alive. This detestable tribunal was finally abolished by the Emperor Augustin Iturbide in 1820. In the fine evenings, during the dry season, the environs of the city present a scene of pleasure, gaiety, and bustle, scarcely to be paralleled; hundreds of canoes, on the canal of Chalco, of various sizes, mostly with awnings, crowded with native Indians, neatly dressed, and their heads crowned with the most gaudy flowers, are seen passing in every direction; each boat, with its musician seated on the stern, playing on the guitar, and some of the party singing, dancing, or both united. Revolution has had its usual operation here; it has reduced the overgrown, but insecure wealth of the rich, to an independent protected competence; but it has also wiped away the tears, and broken the chains which galled the innocent people whose labours had amassed it.

M. de Humboldt saw erecting, in the great square of Mexico, an equestrian and colossal statue of the king of Spain, by M. Tolza, "a statue," says he, "which, by its imposing mass, and the noble simplicity of its style, might adorn the first cities of Europe. According to the accounts of Spanish authors, balls, and games of hazard, are pursued with ardour, while the more noble enjoyments of the drama are less generally relished. To vivid passions the Mexican Spaniard adds a great fund of stoicism. He enters a gaming-house, loses all his money upon a single card, and then takes out his cigar from behind his ear, and smokes as if nothing had happened.

Mexico preserves few monuments of antiquity. The ruins of aqueducts, the stone of sacrifices, and the calendar stone, both of which are placed in the great square of the city; manuscripts, or hieroglyphical tables, badly preserved in the archives of the vice-regal palace; and finally, the colossal statue of the goddess Teo-Yaomiqui, lying on its back in one of the galleries of the University, are all that remains worthy of notice in this city. But, to the north-east of the town, and of the lake Tezcuco, on the little hills of Teotihuacan, are seen the imposing remains of two pyramids, consecrated to the sun and moon, and, according to some historians, constructed by the Omec, an ancient nation that came to Mexico from the east, that is to say, from some country situated on the Atlantic Ocean. The pyramid, or house of the sun, (Tonatiu-ytzaqual), is 171 feet high, and its base measures 645 feet; that of the moon, (Mezli-ytzaqual), is thirty feet smaller. These monuments appear to have served as models for the Teocallis, or houses of the gods, constructed by the Mexicans in the capital and other parts of the country; but the pyramids are incased by a thick wall of stone. They formerly supported statues covered with very thin leaves of gold. A few small pyramids, which appear to have been dedicated to the stars, surround the two great ones. The situation of Mexico is highly favorable for carrying on commerce both with Europe and Asia, being about 69 leagues distant from Vera Cruz on the one hand and from Acapulco on the other. The working of gold and silver has long been carried to great perfection here, and here are also manufactures of calico, cloth, soap, and tobacco. This city has been frequently inundated by the overflowing of the lakes in its vicinity, particularly in 1629, when 40,000 persons are said to have been drowned. To prevent the recurrence of such calamities, a vast conduit was constructed to turn the course of the waters which formerly flowed into the lake Tezcuco through the mountains. 200 m. E. N. E. of St. Juan de Ullua. Long. 100. 40. W., lat. 20. 4. N.

Mexico, Gulf of, an immense gulf of N. America lying between the S. coast of E. Florida and the N. E. point of Yucatan.

Mexico, p.t. Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 344; p.t. Oswego Co. N. Y. on a bay of Lake Ontario, 15 m. E. Oswego. Pop. 2,671; p.t. Millin Co. Pa. on the W. branch of the Susquehanna.

Meyahoun, a city of Pegu, with numerous gilded temples and spacious monasteries. Its vicinity is uncommonly fruitful in rice; and here are capacious granaries always kept filled with grain ready to be transported to any part of the empire in which there happens to be a scarcity. It stretches 2 m. on the S. W. bank of the Irrawaddy, and is 85 m. N. W. of Pegu. Long. 95. 8. E., lat. 18. 18. N.

Meyenfeld. See Mayenfeld.

Meyreics, a town of France, department of Lozere, 23 m. S. of Mende.

Mezenna, a sea port of Fez, on the coast of the Mediterranean, 80 m. E. of Tetuan. Long. 4. 1. W., lat. 35. 22. N.

Mezieres, a town of France, department of Ardennes, with a citadel; seated on an island in the river Meuse, 12 m. W. by N. of Sedan.

Mezin, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, 9 m. N. W. of Condom.

Mhendigaut, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, on the W. bank of the Ganges. Long. 79. 57. E., lat. 27. 3. N.

Miaco. See Meaco.

Miami, Little and Great, two rivers of the state of Ohio, which run S. into the Ohio, the former just above Columbia and the latter 21 m. below Cincinnati. The Little Miami is 60 m. to its source, but generally so shallow as to afford no navigation. The great Miami has a navigation, like the Muskingum, that approaches near the navigable waters of Lake Erie. The country between these two rivers was called the Miamis, and is reckoned among the richest belonging to the United States.

Miami, a county of Ohio. Pop. 12,806. Troy is the capital; a township in Cooper Co. Missouri, and townships in Hamilton, Champaign, Greene, Clermont, Montgomery, Oxford and Logan Cos. Ohio.

Miana, a town of Persia, in Aderbeitzan. Here the celebrated traveller M. Thevenot died, on his return from Ispahan. It is 57 m. S. E. of Tauris.

Micha, a cape of Dalmatia, which advances into the gulf of Venice, near the town of Zara.

Michael, St., the most extensive and populous island of the Azores. It is 54 m. long and from 6 to 15 broad, and contains nearly 80,000 inhabitants. In a valley on the eastern side are a number of boiling fountains; also many sulphureous springs, some of a hot, and others of a cold temperature. The principal towns are Punta del Guda (the capital of the island) and Villa Franca. Long. 25. 42. W., lat. 37. 47. N.

Michael St a borough in Cornwall, Eng. with 180 inhabitants. 8 m. S. S. W. of St. Columb and 250 W. by S. of London.

Michael, St., a town of France, department of Meuse, with a fine hospital, and the rich library of a Benedictine abbey. It is surrounded by mountains, and is seated on the Meuse, 20 m. N. E. of Bar le duc.

Michael, St., a town of Mexico, in the province of Nicaragua, on the river St. Michael, 110 m. N. W. of Leon. Long. 87. 45. W., lat. 12. 25. N.

Michael, St., a town of Mexico, province of Culiacan, near the mouth of the Siguatlan, 30 m. E. S. E. of Culiacan. Long. 107. 40. W., lat. 24 10. N.

Michael, St., a city of Tucuman, situate in a fruitful valley, at the foot of a range of rugged mountains, 150 m. N. W. of St. Jago del Estero. Long. 66. 45. W., lat. 27. 0. S.

Michael de Ibarra, St., a town of Colombia, in the presidency of Quito, capital of a jurisdiction of its name. It has a large and elegant church, a college, and several convents; and is 70 m. N. E. of Quito. Long. 77. 30. W., lat. 0. 25. N.

Michael de Piura, St., a town of Quito, seated near the mouth of the Piura, 325 m. S. S. W. of Quito. Long. 80. 40. W., lat. 5. 10. S.

Michael, Gulf of, St., to the E. of Panama, that part of the Pacific Ocean which was first discovered by the Spaniards, after their march across the isthmus of Darien

Michigan, a territory of the United States, the western part of which is sometimes called the Territory of Huron. It was formerly limited to the peninsula enclosed between Lakes Michigan and Huron, but now comprising also that tract called the Northwest Territory. It is bounded N. by Canada and Lake Superior, E. by Lakes Huron, St. Clair and Erie, and S. by Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. It extends from 41. 31. to 49. N. lat. and from 82. to 98. W. long. containing about 180,000 sq. m. This territory is intersected in the eastern part by Lake Michigan and washed on the western limit by the Mississippi. Except the peninsula, the country has been little explored. It is everywhere level except in the western part, south of Lake Superior, where are some mountain ranges call the Ocooch Mountains and Porcupine Hills. The peninsula is a complete level with but just sufficient elevation in the centre to give the rivers a direction to the shores of the lakes. The country consists mostly of prairies and forest, but the greater part is covered with wood. It is watered by numerous rivers, as the Ouiscousin, Chippeway, St. Francis, Missisagaigon, St. Croix, St. Louis, Wolf, Fox, Menomenies, Saginaw, Grand, Kallimazo, St. Joseph, Raisin, and others. The western parts abound with wild animals, as bison, elks, bears, deer, beaver, otters, muskrats, &c. The elk is very similar to the rein deer. He is 4 or 5 feet in height, and feeds upon the buds and tender twigs of the forest. He is shy and has very acute senses. His flesh is highly esteemed by the hunters and Indians, and the horns when soft are a great delicacy. The elk has often been domesticated.

The soil is various: the alluvions of the rivers are fertile; along the shore of Lake Michigan it is sandy and sterile. The chief mineral production is lead, for which See Lead Mines. Copper was formerly thought to exist here in great abundance, but this does not appear to be the case. Iron is found in various parts. The climate of the southern parts is mild, but in the north the winters are severe. One of the most valuable natural productions is the wild rice which grows on the marshy borders of the lakes and rivers. It grows in 6 or 7 feet depth of water where the bottom is muddy; the stalk is 12 or 14 feet in length; the leaves and spikes resembles those of oats. Sheaves of them are bound together while growing, to preserve them from the birds who resort to these spots in millions for the purpose of feeding upon the rice. After it has ripened in this manner, the Indians row their canoes through the rice and beat the grain with sticks into the canoes where blankets are spread to receive it.

There are many Indians residing in this territory. The tribes are the Chippeways, Winnebagoes, Menomonees and Ottawas. Their numbers amount to about 30,000. A very great proportion of the county is still in a wild state, and the settlements are chiefly within the peninsula. The counties in the territory are 18. The pop. exclusive of Indians is 31,260 of whom 27 are slaves. Detroit is the capital. The Methodists have 11 preachers in the territory; the Presbyterians 6; the Episcopalians 5; the Baptists 2; and there are some Catholics.

A settlement was made here at Detroit by the French, so early as 1670, but they never occupied much of the country. The territorial government was established in 1805. The peninsula was overrun by the British in 1812 shortly after the commencement of the war, but they were driven from the territory by General Harrison the next year.

Michigan, Lake, one of the great chain of lakes in North America. It lies wholly within the limits of the United States, inclosed in the territory above described. It is 290 m. in length, 55 in breadth, and 800 in circumference. It communicates with Lake Huron at the northern extremity by the Strait of Michilimackinac, which has 12 feet depth of water. The lake is deep enough to be navigated by ships of any burden. It abounds with fine trout, sturgeon and various other kinds of fish. Canals are in contemplation to connect it with the waters of the Mississippi.

Micnascelle, p.v. Hartford Co. Maryland.

Michilimackinac, a county of Michigan. Pop. 877. It comprises all the northern part of the Territory. Michilimackinac or Mackinac, on the island of that name, is the capital.

Michilimackinac, a strait which unites the lakes Michigan and Huron. It is 6 m. wide; and on its S. e. side, in Lake Huron, is an island, with a fort and village of the same name. Long. 84. 30. W., lat. 45. 48. N.

Michilimackinac, Little, a river of the state of Illinois, which enters the Illinois 200 m. above its junction with the Mississippi.

Middleborough, p.t. Plymouth Co. Mass. 40 m. S. E. Boston. Pop. 5,003. Here are manufactures of nails and iron, which are supplied with bog ore from ponds in the neighbourhood.

Middlebrook, p.v. Augusta Co. Va. and Montgomery Co. Maryland.

Middleburg, a large commercial town of the Netherlands, capital of the island of Walcheren, and of all Zealand. The squares and public buildings are magnificent; particularly the town-house, formerly a celebrated abbey. The harbour is commodious, and has a communication with Flushing by a canal, which will bear the largest vessels. Middleburg was taken by the British in July, 1800, but evacuated in the December following. 85 m. S.W. of Amsterdam. Long. 3. 37 E., lat. 51. 29. N.

Middleburg, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, 5 m. S. E. of Sluys.

Middleburg, one of the Friendly Islands. See Euoove.

Middlesex, a county of England, bounded N. by Hertfordshire, E. by Essex, S. by Surrey and Kent, and W. by Buckinghamshire. It contains an area of 179,200 acres, has two cities (London and Westminster) and seven market towns, and sends eight members to parliament. The air is healthy; but the soil in general, being gravelly, is not naturally fertile, though by means of its vicinity to the metropolis many parts of it are converted into rich beds of manure, clothed with almost perpetual verdure. Besides the Thames, Lea, and Coln, which are its boundaries to the S., E. and W. Middlesex is watered by several small streams, one of which, called the New River, is artificially brought from near Hertford, for the purpose of supplying London with water.

Middlesex, a county of Massachusetts. Pop. 77,968. Cambridge is the capital. A county of Connecticut. Pop. 24,845. Middletown is the capital. A county of New Jersey. Pop. 23,157. New Brunswick is the capital. A county of the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 4,122. Urbana is the capital

Middlesex Canal, unites the Merrimack with the Boston harbour, passing through the county of that name in Massachusetts. It is 31 m. long, 24 feet wide and 4 feet deep. It has 16 locks and a descent of 107 feet from the summit level. It was begun in 1793 and finished in 1804, at a cost of above 700,000 dollars.

Middleton, a town in Lancashire, Eng. The church is an ancient edifice; and there are five meeting-houses, and a free grammar school. It has the cotton trade in all its branches, a large twist manufacture, considerable bleaching works, some manufactures of silk, and extensive dye works. It stands on the Rochdale Canal, 6 m. N. by E. of Manchester and 190 N. N. W. of London.

Middleton, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, situated on the N. W. angle of Cork harbour. 13 m. E. of Cork.

Middlewich, a town in Cheshire, Eng. The trade of the place is chiefly derived from the surrounding neighbourhood, which is a great farming district; to which may be added the extensive salt works, and some silk factories. Here are a spacious church, three meeting-houses, and a free grammar school. The Trent and Mersey Canal runs through the town, and it is seated on the Croco, near its confluence with the Dane, 24 m. E. of Chester, and 167 N. W. of London.

Midhurst, a borough in Sussex, seated on the Arun, 50 m. W. by S. of London.

Midnapour, a town of Hindoostan, in Orissa, capital of a district of the same name. It is seated near a river that flows into the Hoogly, 70 m. W. by S. of Calcutta. Long. 87. 25. E., lat. 22. 30. N.

Midway, a town in Liberty Co. Geo. 30 m. S. Savannah.

Mies, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen, on the river Nisa, 18 m. W. of Pilsen.

Mifflin, a county of the W. district of Pennsylvania. Pop. 21,529. Lewistown is the capital. Also towns in Alleghany, Cumberland, Lycoming Franklin, and Dauphin Cos. Pa. and Richland and Pike Cos. Ohio.

Mikalida, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natiolia, with a fort; situate on a river which runs into the sea of Marmora, 55 m. W. by S. of Bursa.

Milan, or the Milanese, a country of Italy bounded on the N. by the Alps, E. by the Venetian territory, S. by the Apennines, and W. by Piedmont. The soil is every where fertile in corn, wine, fruits, rice, and olives; and there are also plenty of cattle. The rivers are the Seccia, Ticino, Adda, Oglio, and Po. There are likewise several lakes, the three principal of which are those of Maggiore, Como, and Lugano. Milan, with other countries in Italy, was long comprised under the general name of Lombardy. In the 14th century it became a duchy. The campaign of prince Eugene, in 1706, put it in possession of the house of Austria, to whom, with the exception of the Sardinian Milanese, it continued subject during 90 years, until the victories of Napoleon in 1796. In 1797 it was formed into four departments, as the Cisalpine republic; but in 1814 after several other changes, the part belonging to the king of Sardinia was restored, and the remainder incorporated with the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, or Austrian Italy. The Austrian Milanese forms, along with the duchy of Mantua and the Valteline, the government of Milan. It is divided into 8 delegations, and contains 7,700, sq. m., with 2,100,000 inhabitants. The Sardinian Milanese, which lies to the W. of the Austrian, is divided into 9 districts, comprising an area of 3,300 square miles, and containing 560,000 inhabitants.

Milan, a city of Italy, capital of the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom, and the see of an archbishop. The city is 10 m. in circumference; but the garden grounds are so extensive that it does not contain above 140,000 inhabitants. It stands in a delightful plain, between the rivers Adda and Ticino, which communicate with the city by means of two canals. The cathedral, in the centre of the city, is a splendid specimen of Gothic architecture, and, next to St. Peter's at Rome, is the most considerable in Italy. This vast fabric is built of white marble, supported by 50 columns, and adorned, within and without, by a prodigious number of marble statues. The other public buildings are the university, several colleges, the convents, the hospitals, the theatres, the mansions of the minister of finance, of the minister of the interior, and of the archbishop, and the former ducal palace, now the residence of the Austrian viceroy. In the Piazza di Castello is an arena in imitation of the amphitheatre of Verona, which is capable of containing 30,000 spectators. The college of St. Ambrose has a library, which, besides a prodigious number of manuscripts, contains 60,000 printed books; and its superb gallery is adorned with rich paintings. The chief trade of Milan is in grain (especially rice), cattle, and cheese; and the manufactures of silk and velvet stuffs, stockings, handkerchiefs, ribands, gold and silver lace and embroideries, woolen and linen cloths, glass, porcelain, &c. It has been many times taken in the wars that have desolated Italy. The French took it in 1796. It was retaken by the Austrians and Russians in 1799; but again possessed by the French in 1800, and retained by them till the fall of Napoleon in 1814. It is 280 m. N. W. by N. of Rome. Long. 6. 12. E., lat. 45. 28. N.

Milan, p.v. Huron Co. Ohio. 123 m. N. Columbus.

Milazzo, or Melazzo, a sea-port of Sicily, in Val di Demona. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town: the former stands on a promontory and is fortified; the latter has a fine square, with a superb fountain. It stands on a rock, on the W. side of a bay of the same name, 20 m. W. of Messina. Long. 15. 24. E., lat. 38. 12. N.

Milborn-port, a borough in Somersetshire, Eng. It has manufactures of woolen cloth, linen, and hosiery; and is seated on a branch of the Parret, 2 m. E. by N. of Sherborn and 114 W. by S. of London.

Milburn, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. 92 m. N. E. Portland. Pop. 1,006.

Mildenhall, a town in Suffolk, Eng.; seated on the Larke, a branch of the Ouse, 12 m. N. W. of Bury and 70 N. N. E. of London.

Miles, a township of Centre Co. Pa.

Milesburgh, p.t. Centre Co. Pa. 33 m. N. W. Lewistown.

Mileto, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1783. 8 m. N. E. of Nicotera.

Milford, a town of Wales, in Pembrokeshire. It is elegantly and uniformly built, and stands on the N. side of Milford Haven, a deep inlet of the Irish Sea. The haven branches off into so many creeks, secured from all winds, that it is esteemed the safest and most capacious harbour in Great Britain. At the entrance on the W. point, called St. Ann's, is an old lighthouse, and a blockhouse. Here the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., landed, on his enterprise against Richard III. A quay and several good buildings have been constructed by a company from Nantucket, who have formed an establishment here for the southern whale fishery.

Milford, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H. 27 m. S. Concord. Pop. 1,303. Here are manufactures of cotton and screws; p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 18 m. S. E. Worcester. Pop. 1,380; p.t. New Haven Co. Conn. on Long Island Sound, 9 m. S. W. New Haven. Pop. 2,256. The town has a good harbour for small vessels with some commerce and a quarry of marble; p.t. Otsego Co. N. Y. 76 m. W. Albany. Pop. 3,025; also towns in Hunterdon Co. N. J.; Pike, Bucks, Mifflin, Lehigh, and Somerset Cos. Pa.; Kent. Co. Del.; Greenville Dis. S. C.; Ashtabula, Union, Butler, Hamilton, and Clermont, Cos. Ohio.

Milhan, a town of France, department of Aveyron, seated on the Tarn, 50 m. N. W. of Montpelier.

Milhaud, a town of France, department of Gard, seated on the Vistre, 9 m. S. W. of Nismes.

Militsch, a town of Prussian Silesia, seated on the river Bartsch, 27 m. N. N. E. of Breslau. Long. 17. 23. E., lat. 51. 32. N.

Milo, p.t. Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 321.

Milo, the ancient Melos, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 18 leagues in circumference, with one of the best and largest harbours in the Mediterranean. It produces plentiful crops of corn, excellent fruit, and wine; abounds in very good cattle, especially goats, and has mines of iron, and sulphur. In this island are curious subterranean galleries, the roofs of which are covered with genuine capillary or plume alum, and the crevices of the rocks filled with pure sulphur. Here are two bishops: one of the Greek, and the other of the Latin church. At the commencement of the 18th century the inhabitants amounted to above 20,000, but since that period it has declined. It now belongs to Independent Greece, yet a considerable time must elapse before it can recover its former opulence and splendor. The population of the whole island does not at present exceed 1,200. On the E. side of the island is a town of the same name, 60 m. N. of Candia, and 100 S. by E. of Athens. Long. 25. 0. E., lat. 36. 41. N.

Miltenberg, a town of the Bavarian states, principality of Leiningen, with a castle on a hill; seated on the Maine. 20 m. S. S. E. of Aschaffenburg.

Milthorpe, a town in Westmoreland, Eng. seated on the Cetha, near the mouth of the Ken. It is the only port in the county, and hence the fine Westmoreland slates and other commodities are exported. The manufactures consist chiefly of sacking, twine, and paper: in the vicinity are limestone and marble quarries. 255 m. N. N. W. of London.

Milton, a town of Kent, Eng. It is noted for excellent oysters; and much corn, &c. is shipped here for the London markets. It is a place of great antiquity, and was the residence of the king of Kent, and of Alfred, who had a palace here. 14 m. N. E. of Maidstone, and 40 E. of London.

Milton, p.t. Norfolk Co. Mass. 7 m. S. Boston, on Neponset river which is navigable hence to the sea for vessels of 150 tons. Here are manufactures of paper and chocolate. Pop. 1,565. Milton Hill in this town, is an abrupt and rocky eminence, from which one of the most enchanting prospects in the world may be enjoyed, comprising the city and bay of Boston, the ocean, and a wide extent of country delightfully variegated with hills, valleys, cultivated fields, towns and villages. In very clear air the White Mountains of New Hampshire have been discovered from this spot.

Milton, p.t. Chittenden Co. Vt. on L. Champlain, at the mouth of the Lamoil. Pop. 2,100; p.v. Litchfield Co. Conn. 5 m. W. Litchfield; p.t. Saratoga Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,070; p.v. Ulster and Cayuga Cos. N. Y.; also towns and villages in Morris Co. N. C., Northumberland Co. Pa., Sussex Co. Del., Albemarle Co. Va., Rockingham Co. N. C., Lawrence Dis. S. C., Wayne Co. Ind., Gallatin Co. Ken., Rutherford and Lincoln Cos. Ten. and 5 townships in Ohio.

Milton Abbas, or Abbey Milton, a village in Dorsetshire, Eng. 7 m. S. W. of Blandford. It formerly had an abbey, founded by king Athelstan, but the whole was swept away, except the church in 1771, by the earl of Dorchester, who erected on its site a large Gothic mansion. The village, with its church and almshouse, were built by the same nobleman.

Mina, a town of Persia, province of Kerman, surrounded by a wall with towers, and seated on the Ibrahim, near its entrance into the gulf of Ormus, 190 m. S. of Kerman. Long. 56. 50. E., lat. 26. 40. N.

Minu, p.t. Chataque Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,318.

Minas, a town of S. America, in Buenos Ayres, seated near the source of the river St. Lucia, 34 m. N. E. of Maldonado. Long. 55. 5. W., lat. 34. 21. S.

Minasville, p.t. Montgomery Co. N. Y.

Minas Geraes, a province of Brazil, bounded N. by Bahia, W. by Goiaz, and S. by the Parai-buna. It extends 600 or 700 m. from N. to S. nearly the same from E. to W., and contains 300,000 inhabitants. This vast territory produces gold and diamonds in abundance; also iron, antimony, bismuth, platina, chromate of lead, &c. The soil is likewise rich, producing in the valleys sugar, cotton, &c.: and in the higher grounds wheat, and generally all kinds of European grain.

Minch, an arm of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, which separates the Isle of Sky from Lewis Island.

Minching Hampton, a town of Gloucestershire, Eng. with a considerable manufacture of cloth. It is pleasantly situated on a declivity, 10 m. W. of Cirencester and 98 W. of London.

Mincio, a river of Italy, which flows S. from the lake Garda, forms the lake and marshes that surround Mantua, and afterward runs into the Po.

Minckendorf, a town of Austria, on the Triesing, 6 m. E. N. E. of Baden.

Mindanao, an island in the Eastern seas, and one of the Philippines, about 300 m. long and 108 broad. The coast is indented by numerous bays, and the interior is intersected by chains of lofty mountains, with intervening plains that afford pasture for immense herds of cattle. The sides of the hills and valleys are stony, and yet there are tall trees, of kinds unknown in Europe. Some of the mountains yield very good gold; and the valleys are well watered with rivulets. Rice is produced in abundance; as are also plantains, cocoa-nuts, sweet potatoes, and all the fruits common to tropical climates. There are neither lions nor tigers, but horses, beeves, buffaloes, goats, hogs, deer, &c., are numerous. The fowls are ducks, hens, pigeons, parrots, paroquets and turtle-doves, besides many small birds. The inhabitants are generally of a low stature, with little heads, small black eyes, short noses, and large mouths. Their hair is black and straight, and their complexion tawny, but more inclined to yellow than that of other Indians. The chief trades are goldsmiths, blacksmiths, and carpenters, who can build pretty good vessels. Polygamy is practised. The government is partly feudal and partly monarchical. The prevailing religion is Mahomedism, but the Spaniards have been in possession of a large portion of the sea-coast to the W., N. and N. E., where they have planted colonies of Christians.

Mindanao, the capital of the above island, and the residence of the sultan and his court, is about 6 m. up the Pelangy. Opposite stands the town of Selangan. Long. 124. 40. E., lat. 7. 9. N.

Mindelheim, a town in Bavaria, with a castle on a mountain, situate between the rivers Iller and Lech, 25 m. S. W. of Augsburg.

Minden, a government of the Prussian states comprising the N. E. part of the province of Westphalia and the former principalities of Minden, Paderborn, Rittberg, and Corvey, the bailiwick of Reckeberg, and the lordship of Rheda. It has an area of 2,000 sq. m. divided into 13 districts, with 330,000 inhabitants. The soil in general is fertile, and the pasturage good.

Minden, the capital of the above government is one of the oldest towns of Germany, and, while the see of a bishop, formed a petty republic. Its convenient situation for trade and navigation, its breweries, sugar-houses, and wax manufactures, are great advantages to the inhabitants. Near this town prince Ferdinand, of Brunswick, defeated the French in 1759. It was occupied in 1806 by the French, and finally ceded to Prussia in 1814. It is seated on the Weser, 43 m. E. of Osnaburg. Long. 8. 56. E., lat. 52. 19. N.

Minden, a township of Montgomery Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,567.

Mindoro, one of the Philippines, separated from Luconia by a narrow channel. It is mountainous, and abounds in palm-trees and all sorts of fruits. The inhabitants are pagans, and pay tribute to the Spaniards.

Minersville, a village in Schuylkill Co. Pa. surrounded by extensive coal mines.

Minerva, a township of Essex Co. N. Y. Pop. 358; p.v. Mason Co. Ken.

Minchvad, p.t. Essex Co. Vt. on the Connecticut. Pop. 150.

Mine Shibolet, p.v. Washington Co. Missouri, 55 m. S. W. St. Louis. Here is one of the richest lead mines in the country.

Minchhead, a borough and sea-port in Somersetshire, Eng. It has a good harbour on the Bristol Channel, and carries on a trade in wool, coal, and herrings. 31 m. N. of Exeter and 160 W. by S. of London. Long. 3. 34. W., lat. 51. 12. N.

Minorelia, a country of Asia, bounded W. by the Black Sea, E. by Imeritia, S. by the river Phasis, and N. by Georgia. It is governed by a prince who is tributary to Russia. The face of this country, its products, and the customs and manners of the inhabitants, are similar to those of Georgia.

Minho, a river of Spain, which rises in the N. E. part of Galicia, passes by Lugo, Orense, and Tuy, and dividing Galicia from Portugal, enters the Atlantic at Caminha.

Minie, a town of Egypt, on the left bank of the Nile, 90 m. S. of Fayoum.

Minisink, p.t. Orange Co. N. Y. on the Delaware. Pop. 4,979.

Minorvino, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari 24 m. W. S. W. of Trani.

Minorca, one of the Balearic islands, lying 50 m.

to the N. E. of Majorca. It is 30 m. long and 12 broad; and is a mountainous country, with some fruitful valleys. Some corn is raised, but the principal products of the island are wine, wool, cheese, and various fruits. It has been frequently in the hands of the British, by whom it was taken without the loss of a man in 1798, but given up at the peace of 1802. Ciudadella is the capital; but Mahon claims greater consequence, on account of its excellent harbour, Port Mahon, which is defended by two forts. Long. 3. 48. E., lat. 39. 51. N.

Minot, p.t. Cumberland Co. Me. Pop. 2,908.

Minsk, an extensive province of European Russia, comprehending the old palatinate of Minsk and portions of Polotzk, Novogrodek, and Wilna. It extends from the Dwina N. to the province of Volhynia, comprises an area of 37,000 sq. m. is divided into ten circles, and contains 950,000 inhabitants. The surface, productions, &c. are the same as in Lithuania.

Minsk, the capital of the foregoing province, with two citadels, is seated on the Swislocz, 80 m. S. E. of Wilna and 310 E. N. E. of Warsaw. Long. 27. 58. E., lat. 53. 46. N.

Mintaon, an island in the Indian Ocean, 40 m. long and 14 broad, on the W. coast of the island of Sumatra. Long. 97. 38. E., lat. 0. 25. S.

Mioss, a lake of Norway, in the province of Hedemark, 90 m. in circumference. It is almost divided by a peninsula, and contains a fertile island 10 m. in circumference.

Miquelon, a small desert island, S. W. of Cape Ray in Newfoundland, ceded to the French in 1763, for drying and curing their fish. They were dispossessed of it by the English in 1793, but it was restored to them in 1802. Long. 56. 10. W., lat. 46. 42. N.

Mira, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 16 m. N. W. of Coimbra.

Miranda, a town of Portugal, in Tras os Montes, seated on a rock, on the river Douro, 32 m. E. S. E. of Braganza. Long. 6. 32. W., lat. 41. 46. N.

Miranda de Corvo, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 13 m. S. E. of Coimbra.

Miranda de Ebro, a town of Spain, in the province of Burgos, with a castle; seated in an excellent wine country, on the river Ebro, over which is a handsome bridge. 34 m. N. E. of Burgos.

Mirande, a town of France, department of Gers. Wool, down, and the feathers of geese, are its principal articles of trade. It is seated on an eminence, near the river Baise, 13 m. S. W. of Auch.

Mirandela, a town of Portugal, in Tras os Montes, 22 m. S. W. of Braganza.

Mirandola, a city of Italy, in the Modenese, capital of a province of its name, and a bishop's see, with a citadel and a fort. Besides the cathedral, it contains many fine churches and convents. It is 18 m. N. N. E. of Modena. Long. 11. 19. E., lat. 44. 52. N.

Mirazel, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a strong castle; seated on the side of a hill, 16 m. S. by W. of Placentia.

Mirebeau, a town of France, department of Upper Vienne, 14 m. N. by W. of Poitiers.

Mirebeau, a town of France, department of Cote d'Or, 13 m. N. of Dijon.

Mircourt, a town of France, department of Vosges, famous for its violins and fine lace; seated on the Modon, 15 m. W. N. W. of Epinal.

Miremont, a town of France, department of Dordogne. Near it is a remarkable cavern, called Cluseau. It is seated near the river Vizere, 15 m. E. of Bergerac.

Mirepaix, a town of France, department of Ariège; seated on the Gers, 15 m. E. N. E. of Foix and 43 S. S. E. of Toulouse.

Misano, a town of Naples, in Otranto, 6 m. S. S. E. of Ostuni.

Mistra, or Mistras, a town of Independent Greece, once the capital of the Morea and a place of importance, but it is now decayed. It is 90 m. S. E. Lepanto. In the neighbourhood are to be seen the ruins of ancient Sparta.

Misnia. See Meissen.

Mississippi, a river of the United States, rising in a number of head streams between 47. and 48. N. lat. and flowing into the Gulf of Mexico. It is more than 3,000 m. in length and receives from the west the Missouri, which on account of its superior length is sometimes considered the main stream rather than a branch of the Mississippi. The other tributaries of the Mississippi are the Ohio, Illinois, Arkansas, and Red river with a great many inferior streams. The falls of St. Anthony, are in the upper part of its course, and have a perpendicular descent of 17 ft.; below the point the river is navigable for vessels of 30 tons to the sea. It runs but a little distance from its source, before it becomes a considerable stream. Below the falls of St. Anthony, it broadens to half a mile in width; and is a clear, placid and noble stream, with wide and fertile bottoms, for a long distance. A few miles below the river Des Moines, is a long rapid of nine miles, which, for a considerable part of the summer, is a great impediment to the navigation. Below these rapids the river assumes its medial width and character from that point to the entrance of the Missouri. It is a still more beautiful river, than the Ohio, somewhat gentler in its current, a third wider, with broad and clean sandbars, except in the time of high waters, when they are all covered. At every little distance, there are islands, sometimes a number of them parallel, and broadening the stream to a great width. These islands are many of them large, and have in the summer season an aspect of beauty, as they swell gently from the clear stream,—a vigour and grandeur of vegetation which contribute much to the magnificence of the river. The sandbars, in the proper season, are the resort of innumerable swans, geese and water fowls. It is, in general, a full mile in width from bank to bank. For a considerable distance above the mouth of the Missouri, it has more than that width. Altogether, it has, from its alternate bluffs and prairies, the calmness and transparency of its waters, the size and beauty of its trees, an aspect of great amenity and magnificence.

Where it receives the Missouri, it is a mile and a half wide. The Missouri itself enters with a mouth not more than half a mile wide. This united stream below, has thence to the mouth of the Ohio, a medial width of little more than three quarters of a mile. This mighty tributary seems rather to diminish, than increase its width; but it perceptibly alters its depth, its mass of waters, and wholly changes its character. It is no longer the gentle, placid stream, with smooth shores and clean sandbars; but has a furious and boiling current, a turbid and dangerous mass of sweeping waters, jagged and dilapidated shores, and, wherever its waters have receded, deposits of mud.

It remains a sublime object of contemplation. The noble forest still rises along its banks. But its character of calm magnificence, that so delighted the eye above, is seen no more.

The bosom of the river is covered with prodigious boils, or swells, that rise with a whirling motion, and a convex surface, two or three rods in diameter, and no inconsiderable noise, whirling a boat imperceptibly from its track. In its course, accidental circumstances shift the impetus of its current, and propel it upon the point of an island bend or sandbars. In these instances, it tears up the islands, removes the sandbars, and sweeps away the tender, alluvial soil of the bends, with all their trees, and deposits the spoils in another place. At the season of high water, nothing is more familiar to the ear of the people on the river, than the deep crash of a land-slip, in which larger or smaller masses of the soil on the banks, with all the trees, are plunged into the stream. The circumstances that change the aspect and current of the river, are denominated, in the vocabulary of the watermen, chutes, races, chains, sawyers, planters, points of islands, wreck heaps and cypress bends. The divinity most frequently invoked by boatmen, seems to have imparted his name oftener than any other to the dangerous places along the river. The 'Devil's' race paths, tea-table, oven, &c. are places of difficult or hazardous navigation, that frequently occur. They are serious impediments to the navigation of this noble stream. Such is its character from Missouri to the Balize; a wild, furious, whirling river,—never navigated safely, except with great caution. On the immense wreck heaps, where masses of logs, like considerable hills, are piled together, the numerous wrecks of boats, lying on their sides and summits, sufficiently attest the character of the river, and remain standing mementos to caution. Boats propelled by steam power, which can be changed in a moment, to reverse the impulse and direction of the boat, are exactly calculated to obviate the dangers of this river.

No person, who descends this river for the first time, receives clear and adequate ideas of its grandeur, and the amount of water which it carries. If it be in the spring, when the river below the mouth of the Ohio is generally over its banks, although the sheet of water that is making its way to the gulf is, perhaps, thirty miles wide, yet finding its way through deep forests and swamps that conceal all from the eye, no expanse of water is seen, but the width, that is curved out between the outline of woods on either bank; and it seldom exceeds, and oftener falls short of a mile. But when he sees, in descending from the falls of St. Anthony, that it swallows up one river after another, with mouths, as wide as itself, without affecting its width at all; when he sees it receiving in succession the mighty Missouri, the broad Ohio, St. Francis, White, Arkansas, and Red rivers, all of them of great depth, length and volume of water; when he sees this mighty river absorbing them all and retaining a volume, apparently unchanged,—he begins to estimate rightly the increasing depths of current, that must roll on in its deep channel to the sea. Carried out of the Balize, and sailing with a good breeze for hours, he sees nothing on any side, but the white and turbid waters of the Mississippi, long after he is out of sight of land.

From its source to the falls of St. Anthony, it runs alternately through wild rice lakes and swamps by limestone bluffs and craggy hills; occasionally through deep pine forests, and beautiful prairies; and the tenants on its borders are elk, buffaloes, bears and deer, and the savages that pursue them. In this distance, there is no civilized inhabitant on its shores, if we except the establishments of Indian traders, and a garrison of the United States. Buffaloes are seldom seen below these falls. Its alluvions become wide, fertile, and for the most part, heavily timbered. Like the Ohio, its bottoms and bluffs generally alternate. Its broad and placid current is often embarrassed with islands, which are generally rich alluvial lands, often containing from five hundred to a thousand acres, and abounding with wild turkeys and other small game. From 100 m. above the mouth of the Missouri, it would be difficult for us to convey an idea of the beauty of the prairies, skirting this noble river. They are a perfect level; and are in summer covered with a luxuriant growth of grass and flowers without a tree or bush.

Below the mouth of the Ohio, in the season of inundation, to an observing spectator a very striking spectacle is presented. The river sweeps along in curves, or sections of circles, of an extent from six to twelve miles, measured from point to point. The sheet of water, that is visible between the forests on either side, is a mile wide. On a calm spring morning, and under a bright sun, it shines like a mass of burnished silver. Its edges are distinctly marked by a magnificent outline of cotton wood trees, generally of great size, and at this time of the year, of the brightest verdure. On the convex, or bar side of the bend, there is generally a vigorous growth of willows, or young cotton wood trees, of such astonishing regularity of appearance, that it always seems to the inexperienced spectator, a work of art. The water stands among these trees, from ten to fifteen feet in height. Those brilliant creatures the black and red bird, flit among these young groves, that are inundated to half their height. Nature is carrying on her most vigorous efforts of vegetation below. If there be wind or storm, the descending flat and keel boats immediately make for these groves, and plunge fearlessly, with all the headway they can command, among the trees. Should they be of half the size of the human body, struck fifteen feet from the ground, they readily bend before even a frail boat.—You descend the whole distance of a thousand miles to New Orleans, landing at night in fifteen feet water among the trees; but, probably, in no instance within twenty miles of the real shore, which is the bluff. The whole spectacle is that of a vast and magnificent forest, emerging from a lake, with its waters, indeed, in a thousand places in descending motion.

One of the most striking peculiarities of this river, and of all its lower tributaries, is the uniformity of its meanders, called in the phrase of the country, its 'points and bends.' In many instances these curves are described with a precision, with which they would have been marked off by the sweep of a compass. The river sweeps round, perhaps the half of a circle, and is precipitated from the point, in a current diagonally across its own channel, to another curve of the same regularity upon the opposite shore. In the bend is the deepest channel, the heaviest movement of waters, and what is called the thread of the current. Between this thread and the shore, there are generally counter currents, or eddies; and in the crumbling and tender alluvial soil, the river is generally making inroads upon its banks on the bend side. Opposite the bend there is always a sandbar, matched, in the convexity of its conformation, to the concavity of the bend. Here it is, that the appearance of the young cotton wood groves have their most striking aspect. The trees rise from the shore, showing first the vigorous saplings of the present year; and then those of a date of two and three years; and trees rising in regular gradation to the most ancient and lofty point of the forest. These curves are so regular on this, and all the rivers of the lower country, that the boatmen and ludians calculate distances by them; and instead of the number of miles or leagues, they estimate their progress by the number of bends they have passed.

The navigation upon this river is very great. Ships seldom ascend higher than Natchez. The number of steam-boats upon the Mississippi and its tributaries is about 300. Their size is from 540 tons downward. The passage from Cincinnati to New Orleans and back, has been made in 19 days. From New Orleans to Louisville the shortest passage has been 8 days and 2 hours, the distance being 1,650 m. and against the current. The steam-boats have generally high-pressure power, and many fatal explosions have happened upon these waters. The first steam-vessel here was built in 1810. New Orleans is the outpost of this river, and the largest city on its banks. Its waters pass into the Gulf by several channels which intersect a flat marshy tract. The main entrance is at the Balize.

Mississippi, one of the United States, bounded N. by Tennessee, E. by Alabama, S. by Louisiana and W. by Louisiana and Arkansas. It extends from 30.10. to 35. N. lat. and from 80.30. to 91.35. W. long. 335 m. in length from N. to S. and 150 in breadth, containing 45,760 sq. m. It is watered by the Mississippi on the western boundary, the Yazoo and Big Black rivers, branches of the Mississippi, the Pascagoula and Pearl which flow into the Gulf of Mexico, and the head streams of the Tombekbee rise in the N. part and pass into Alabama. There is a small extent of coast lying upon Lake Borgne at its outlet into the Gulf, along which are scattered a few low sandy islands but there is no sea-port of consequence in the state. Nearly the whole country is an alluvial flat, and the shore of the Mississippi in the north is an immense swamp 70 m. in width. In the N. E. part are some hilly, broken tracts. A great part of the soil is a pine barren, but the river intervals are rich and productive. Sugar-cane is raised in the south. The middle parts produce figs, grapes, tobacco, maize, sweet potatoes, rice, and indigo. Cotton is raised in all parts, and is the staple article of cultivation. The climate is hot, moist and in the level country is insalubrious. Stagnant waters are abundant, and the intense heat of the summer engenders bilious diseases. In the elevated parts the climate is healthy and pleasant.

The northern and central portions of this state are occupied by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; the former tribe number about 21,000 souls and the latter 3,600; civilization and useful arts have made considerable progress among them; their agriculture is in a thriving state, and they have commodious houses, shops, schools and churches, and support a missionary. They occupy some of the best land in the state.

Mississippi is divided into 26 counties and has a population excluding Indians, of 136,806. The slaves are 65,659. Jackson, on Pearl river, is the seat of government. Natchez is the only considerable town. The legislature is styled the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are elected for 3 years and one third of the number are renewed each year. The representatives are chosen yearly. All residents of one year are voters; clergymen are excluded from office. The Baptists are the largest religious sect, they have 58 churches; the Methodists have 23 preachers; the Presbyterians 25; the Episcopalians 4, and there are some Catholics. Education is provided for by a literary fund; public schools are maintained in some of the large towns, and there is a college at Washington near Natchez. The commerce of the state is directed to the outports of Louisiana and Alabama. Mississippi was erected into a territorial government in 1798. It was admitted into the Union in 1817.

Missisagaigon, one of the head streams of the Mississippi rising near the W. end of Lake Superior.

Missiscow, a river of Vermont flowing into the N. part of L. Champlain.

Missolonghi, a town of Independent Greece, on the N. side of the Gulf of Lepanto, opposite Patras. It has a shallow harbour, and is surrounded by marshes. It was taken and retaken several times by the Turks and Greeks during the war of the revolution. Here Lord Byron died in 1824. There is another town of this name in the Morea.

Missouri, a river of the United States, which, taken in connexion with the Mississippi, into which it flows, is the longest river on the globe; its length from the highest navigable stream to the gulf of Mexico being 4,491 m., its length to the junction with the Mississippi is 3,096 m. It rises in the Rocky Mountains, nearly in the same parallel with the Mississippi. The most authentic information we have yet had of the sources of this mighty river, is from its first intrepid American discoverers, Lewis and Clarke. What may properly be called the Missouri seems to be formed by three considerable branches, which unite not far from the bases of the principal ranges of the mountains. To the northern they gave the name of Jefferson, to the middle, Gallatin, and to the southern, Madison.—Each of these branches forks again into a number of small mountain streams. It is but a short distance from some of these to the head waters of the Oregon, on the other side of the mountains. A person may drink from the spring sources of each, without travelling more than a mile. After this junction, the river continues a considerable distance to be still a foam ing mountain torrent. It then spreads into a broad and comparatively gentle stream full of islands. Precipitous peaks of blackish rock frown above the river in perpendicular elevations of 1,000 feet. The mountains, whose bases it sweeps, are covered with pines, cedars, and firs; and mountain sheep are seen bounding on their summits, where they are apparently inaccessible. In this distance the mountains have an aspect of inexpressible loneliness and grandeur.

The river then becomes almost a continued cataract for the distance of about 17 m. In this distance its perpendicular descent is 362 feet. The first fall is 98 feet; the second, 19; the third, 47; the fourth, 26. These falls are next to Niagara the grandest in the world. The river continues rapid for a long distance beyond. The Roche Jaune, or Yellow Stone, is probably the largest tributary of the Missouri. It rises in the same ranges of mountains with the main river, and has many points of resemblance to it. It enters from the south by a mouth 850 yards wide. It is a broad, deep, and sweeping river; and at its junction appears the larger of the two. Its course is commonly calculated at 1,600 miles. But the size and length of all these tributaries are probably over rated. Its shores, for a long distance above its entrance, are heavily timbered, and its bottoms wide, and of the finest soil. Its entrance is deemed to be 1,880 m. above the mouth of the Missouri; and it was selected by the government, as an eligible situation for a military post, and an extensive settlement. White bears, elk, and mountain sheep, are the principal animals seen along this part of the river. The other tributaries are the Kansas, Platte, Osage, Little Missouri, Running Water, White and Milk Rivers.

At the point of junction with the Yellow Stone, the Missouri has wide and fine bottoms. But its banks are for the most part destitute of timber, and this for a long series of years will prevent its being inhabited. The 'Gates of the Rocky Mountains,' through which the Missouri seems to have torn itself a passage, are commonly described as among the sublimest spectacles in the world. For nearly 6 m. these mountains rise in black and perpendicular masses 1,200 feet above the surface of the river. The chasm is little more than 250 yards wide; and the deep and foaming waters of the Missouri rush through the passage, as if it were a cataract. The heart of the beholder is chilled, as he contemplates, in these wild and uninhabited regions, this conflict between the river and the mountains. The smooth and black walls of the cleft rise more than twice as high as the mountains on the Hudson, below West Point. Every passenger up that river has been impressed with the grandeur of that scene in the midst of amenity and life. What then must be the sensations of the passenger through the gates of the Rocky Mountains, who witnesses the proofs of this conflict of nature, in a region three hundred leagues from civilization. Vast columns of the rock are torn from the mountains and lie along the banks of the river.

The bottoms of the Missouri have a character, very distinguishable from those of the Upper Mississippi. They are higher, not so wet, more sandy, with trees which are not so large, but taller and straighter. Its alluvions are something narrower; having for the first 500 m. a medial width of more than 4 m. Its bluffs, like those of the other river, are generally limestone, but not so perpendicular; and have more tendency to run into the mamelle form. The bottoms abound with deer, turkeys and small game. The river seldom overflows any part of its banks, in this distance. It is little inclined to be swampy. There are much fewer lakes, bayous, and small ponds, than along the Mississippi. Prairies are scarcely seen on the banks of the river, within the distance of the first 400 m. of its course. It is heavily timbered, and yet from the softness of the wood, easily cleared. The water, though uncommonly turbid with a whitish earth, which it holds in suspension, soon and easily settles, and is then remarkably pure, pleasant and healthy water. The river is so rapid and sweeping in its course, and its bed is composed of such masses of sand, that it is continually shifting its sandbars. A chart of the river, as it runs this year, gives little ground for calculation, in navigating it the next. It has numerous islands and generally near them is the most difficult to be stemmed.—Still more than the Mississippi below its mouth, it tears up in one place, and deposits in another; and makes more frequent and powerful changes in its channel, than any other western river.

Its bottoms are considerably settled for a distance of 400 m. above its mouth. That of Charaton is the highest compact settlement. But the largest and most populous settlement in the state is that called Boone's Lick. Indeed, there are American settlers, here and there, on the bottoms, above the Platte, and far beyond the limits of the state of Missouri. Above the Platte the open and prairie character of the country begins to develop. The prairies come quite into the banks of the river; and stretch from it indefinitely, in naked grass plains, where the traveller may wander for days, without seeing either wood or water.—The 'Council Bluffs' are an important military station, about 600 m. up the Missouri. Beyond this point commences a country of great interest and grandeur in many respects; and denominated, by way of eminence, the Upper Missouri. The country is composed of vast and almost boundless grass plains, through which stretch the Platte, the Yellow Stone, and the other rivers of this ocean of grass. The savages of this region have a peculiar physiognomy and mode of life. It is a country, where commence new tribes of plants. It is the home of buffaloes, elk, white bears, antelopes and mountain sheep. And its inexhaustible supplies of game make it the paradise of hunters. Sometimes the river washes the basis of the dark hills of a friable and crumbling soil. Here are found, as Lewis and Clarke, and other respectable travellers relate, large and singular petrifications, both animal and vegetable.—On the top of one of these hills they found the petrified skeleton of a huge fish, 45 feet in length

The herds of gregarious animals, particularly the buffaloes, are innumerable. Such is the general character of the country, until we come in contact with the spurs of the Rocky Mountains.

As far as the limits of the state, this river is capable of supporting a dense population, for a considerable distance from its banks. Above those limits it is generally too destitute of wood, to become habitable by any other people than hunters and shepherds. All the great tributaries of this river are copies, more or less exact, of the parent stream. One general remark applies to the whole country. The rivers have a narrow margin of fertility. The country, as it recedes from the river, becomes more and more sterile, sandy and destitute of water, until it approximates in character towards the sandy deserts of Arabia.

Missouri, one of the United States, lying west of the Mississippi, and intersected by the great river from which it takes its name. It is bounded N. and W. by the Territory of Missouri, E. by Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee, and S. by Arkansas; extending from 36. to 40. 30. N. lat. and from 89. to 94. 10. W. long. 270 m. in length and 220 m. in breadth. It contains 60,000 sq. m. The Mississippi washes the eastern boundary, the other principal streams are the branches of the Missouri and this river. The Ozark Mountains extend south-westerly from this state into Arkansas, and there are some mountain ridges toward the east. A large extent of this great state in its south-east angle commencing above New Madrid, and extending down the great swamp, and through the alluvial region, a considerable distance back from the Mississippi, is low, swampy, full of lakes, and in many places subject to be inundated. Beyond that region, which is generally marked by a bold line of rolling and fertile high lands, the country gradually rises into high flint knobs, still rising beyond that region to the mountainous country of the lead mines. This country extends to the Osage and its tributaries. Beyond this the country is broken and hilly; until we open upon the boundless belt of open prairies, which spreads beyond the western limits of this state. The best portion, and the most inhabited parts of the state are between the Missouri and Mississippi. This vast tract is no where mountainous. It contains great tracts of alluvial and hilly prairies. It is for the most part a surface, delightfully rolling and variegated. There is no part of the globe, where greater extents of country can be traversed more easily, and in any direction by carriages of any description, where there are no roads, and that is yet in a state of nature.

One specific difference between the soil of this country, and the country bordering on the Ohio is, that the land here contains a much greater proportion of sand, is more loamy and friable, and the soil is not so stiff. There are tracts over all this country, where we find the clayey soils of Ohio and Kentucky. But they are small. The roads generally, run over tracts, where the falling rain and snow are so readily absorbed, even in the winter, that the people are not troubled with the deep and almost impassable roads, that we find in those states. The rich uplands are of a darkish grey colour; with the exception of the great tract about the lead mines, where the soil, composed of decomposed pyrite, is reddish, and of a colour brighter than Spanish brown. The poorer uplands are generally covered with white oak, and that small shrubby species of oak denominated here pin oak.

It is usually a stiffer and more clayey soil than the other; and it is of a light yellow colour. There are two extensive tracts of that fine kind of timbered upland alluvion, which constitutes the finest central portions of Kentucky. The one is, perhaps, fifteen or twenty miles in extent. It is south-west of the mine country, and is called Bellevue settlement. The other tract is much larger, and is called in this country the Boone's lick settlement. There are smaller extents of this kind of land, spread over all the state. In a state of nature, it strikes the eye delightfully. The surface rolls gently and almost imperceptibly. It has the same trees and shrubs, and the grand vegetation, that designate the rich alluvions; and at the same time it has the diversified surface, and the associated ideas of health, and springs of water that are naturally connected with the notion of uplands. These lands are timbered with the same trees which the alluvions bear. Like those, they are surmounted with grape vines, and are free from underbrush. The graceful pawpaw, the persimon, and the wild cherry tree, all denoting rich soils, abound in these regions; and they are nearly as fertile as the bottoms of the Missouri, or the Mississippi.

The prairies are generally level and of an intermediate character between the richer and the poorer uplands. The alluvial prairies are universally rich, and nearly as fertile as the bottoms. Some tracts of the upland prairies are rich. But there are scarcely any lands in this state sufficiently level for cultivation, that have not fertility enough to bring good crops of corn without manure; and in many instances the poorer lands are better for wheat than the richer. The grandest objects of nature will, probably, not excite so much surprise in the mind of a traveller from the Atlantic states, as the first view of a prairie. Riding, day after day, through forests, where the small improvements made in the wilderness scarcely interrupt the general aspect of woods, he opens at once upon the view of a boundless horizon. In the early periods of summer, he beholds outstretched under his eye a perfectly level plain, of the most soft and beautiful verdure, covered with a thousand flowers of every scent and hue. Here and there, in the skirts of the prairies, and often in their centre are clumps of oaks, and pecans and black walnuts, disposed in forms so regular, and generally circular, as could not fail to delight the eye of an admirer of the ancient style of gardening. He is unprepared for such a view, seen in such strong contrast with dark and lonely forests. It is, after all, impossible to convey by description the impression, which these views create. In these vast and beautiful prairies, or on the verge of the bluffs, that overlook them he beholds at once a verdant and sleeping ocean of grass, vast rivers rolling their mighty masses of waters through the dark forests, romantic hills stretching away in the distance, and here and there a cabin or a house throwing up its column of smoke, and the cattle, horses and sheep sleeping about it. A grander spectacle is exhibited when in the autumn the Indians set fire to the dry grass. The flames leap forward with astonishing rapidity and spread in all directions. The hunter or the traveller is unable to escape by their utmost speed and the wild horses, deer and buffaloes are often overtaken and burnt to death.

The lead mines of this state are highly productive. They are connected with that great mineral tract which extends from the N. W. part of Illinois into the adjacent territories, and which the reader will find described under the head of Lead Mines. The richest mines in this state are in the neighbourhood of Potosi, upon Big river, a small stream flowing into the Maramec. The ore is found not in veins, but in detached masses from 2 to 29 feet below the surface. About 3,000,000 pounds are annually smelted. Coal is found in abundance along the Missouri, and iron in every part of the state. Manganese, zinc, antimony, and cobalt accompany the lead ore; salt, nitre, soapstone, plumbago, barytes, pumice stone, gypsum, flint and marble are also produced here.

The climate is generally salubrious, and the air uncommonly dry; but the weather is subjected to greater extremes of cold and heat than in the other western states. Wheat and maize are the staple articles of cultivation; flax, hemp and cotton are also raised.

Missouri is divided into 33 counties. The population is 140,074, of whom 24,990 are slaves. The capital is Jefferson, the largest town is St. Louis. The legislature is called the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are chosen for 4 years and the representatives for 2. The Governor is chosen for 4 years and is ineligible for the next term. Elections are popular and suffrage is universal. The Baptists have 67 ministers in this state; the Methodists 23; the Presbyterians 10; the Episcopalians 3, and there are some Catholics. There is a college at St. Louis and a few seminaries of learning exist in other parts.

This state was originally a part of the Territory of Louisiana. It was admitted into the Union in 1821.

Missouri Territory, the name given to that vast extent of wild country belonging to the United States which lies west of all the settled districts and east of the Rocky Mountains. It is bounded N. by the British possessions, E. by Michigan, Illinois, and the state of Missouri, S. and S. W. by Mexico and W. by the Rocky Mountains. It extends from 36. 30. to 49. N. lat. and from 90. to 112. W. long. and is estimated to contain 800,000 sq. miles. A great part of this immense territory is intersected by the river Missouri and its numerous branches. The north-western part is traversed by a mountain ridge which branches from the great Rocky Mountain chain, about the 42d degree of latitude, and extends north-westerly towards Lake Winnipeg. The eastern part is a level country. From 200 to 400 miles west of the Mississippi, the land is partly covered with forests. Beyond this limit commences a vast ocean of prairies, and the country is mostly a plain in some parts fertile and covered with grass, and in others a barren desert of sand

The surface and soil of this vast extent of country is different from any other of the same dimensions on the globe. The lower courses of all the rivers, that enter the Mississippi from this region, are wooded. In proportion, as we ascend towards the mountains, the wood becomes more scarce, and the upper tributaries of these streams run through open prairies. There is, also, a fertile belt along the banks of all these streams; but in proportion as we diverge from them, the land becomes more sterile and parched. We sometimes may travel whole days, without seeing water. Great portions of this country may be almost likened to the Sahara of the African deserts. There is, however, in the most sterile parts a thin sward of grass and herbage. Countless droves of buffaloes, elk and deer, range upon these vast prairies. These will probably, in some future period of our national existence be replaced by herds of domestic cattle, and flocks of sheep, followed by moving bands of shepherds. Almost the whole course of the Missouri, Platte and Yellow Stone are through a rich soil. The same may be affirmed of Red river. The upper courses of the Arkansas are through the most sterile region of this ocean of prairies.

In a country of such immense extent, generally level, naked and open, the climate must of course in a great measure correspond to the latitude. The first climate, beyond the state of Missouri, and the territory of Arkansas, is mild and temperate. The belt beyond has nearly the climate of New England. Still further towards the mountains, it is Canadian. Pike and other travellers speak of encountering storms of sleet and hail in the summer, near the sources of the Arkansas. When the winds blow from the west over the summits of these mountains, the cold they occasion is extreme.

Wild horses are abundant in various parts of this country. Lewis and Clarke in their expedition saw many of them on the plains of the Missouri, and Major Long observed whole troops upon the prairies still farther south. The Indians are abundantly supplied with them, many of which are very fleet, and capable of great endurance. A savage warrior mounted on one of these with his long spear, makes a very formidable appearance.

The Indians take no pains to breed horses, but supply themselves by catching and taming as many as they want. A method sometimes adopted by hunters for taking the wild horse, is to shoot the animal through the neck, using the requisite care not to injure the spine. A horse may receive a rifle ball through a particular part of the neck, without sustaining any permanent injury, the blow, is however, sufficient to occasion a temporary suspension of the powers of life, during which, the animal is easily taken. This is called creasing; and requires for its successful performance, no small degree of skill in the use of the rifle.

Major Long remarks, that in the habits of the wild horse, we find little unlike what is seen in the domestic animal. He becomes the most timorous and watchful of the inhabitants of the wilderness. It would appear from the paths that are seen, that they sometimes perform long journeys.

Wild horses were once numerous on the Kootanny Lands, near the northern sources of the Columbia, on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountain Ridge, but of late years they have been almost eradicated in that quarter. They are not known to exist in a wild state to the northward of the fifty-second or fifty-third parallel of latitude. The Kootannies are acquainted with the Spanish and American mode of taking them with the lazo. Major Long mentions that horses are an object of particular value to the Osages. For the purpose of obtaining these animals, which in their wild state preserve all their fleetness, they go in a large party to the country of the Red Canadian River, where they are to be found in considerable numbers. When they discover a gang of the horses, they distribute themselves into three parties, two of which take their stations at different and proper distances on their route, which by previous experience they know the horses will most probably take when endeavouring to escape. This arrangement being completed, the first party commences the pursuit in the direction of their colleagues, at whose position they at length arrive. The second party then continues the chase with fresh horses, and pursues the fugitives to the third party, which generally succeeds in so far running them down, as to noose and capture a considerable number of them.

Immense herds of bison, elks, deer, and other wild animals occupy these vast plains. Of these the bison is the most remarkable from the incredible numbers in which they feed together. Sometimes 40 sq. m. of territory have been seen completely covered with them. At the period when the Europeans began to make settlements in North America, this animal was occasionally met with on the Atlantic coast; but even then it appears to have been rare to the eastward of the Appalachian Mountains; for Lawson has thought it to be a fact worth recording, that two were killed in one season on Cape Fear River. As early as the first discovery of Canada it was unknown in that country. Theodat, whose history of Canada was published in 1636, merely says, that he was informed that bulls existed in the remote western countries. Warden mentions that at no very distant date, herds of them existed in the western part of Pennsylvania, and that as late as the year 1766 they were pretty numerous in Kentucky. The bison wander constantly from place to place either from being disturbed by hunters, or in quest of food. They are much attracted by the soft tender grass, which springs up after a fire has spread over the prairie. In winter they scrape away the snow with their feet, to reach the grass. The bulls and cows live in separate herds for the greater part of the year; but at all seasons, one or two bulls generally accompany a large herd of cows. The bison is in general a shy animal, and takes to flight instantly on winding an enemy, which the acuteness of its sense of smell enables it to do from a great distance. They are less wary when they are assembled together in numbers, and will then often blindly follow their leaders, regardless of, or trampling down the hunters posted in their way. It is dangerous for the hunter to show himself after having wounded one, for it will pursue him, and although its gait may be heavy and awkward, it will have no difficulty in overtaking the fleetest runner. While feeding, they are often scattered over a great extent of country, but when they move in a mass, they form a dense and almost impenetrable column, which once in motion, is scarcely to be impeded. Their line of march is seldom interrupted even by considerable rivers, across which they swim without fear or hesitation, nearly in the order that they traverse the plains. When flying before their pursuers, it would be in vain for the foremost to halt, or attempt to obstruct the progress of the main body, as the throng in the rear still rushes onward, the leaders must advance, although destruction awaits the movement. The Indians take advantage of this circumstance to destroy great quantities of this favourite game, and certainly no mode could be resorted to more effectually destructive, nor could a more terrible devastation be produced, than that of forcing a numerous herd of these large animals, to leap together from the brink of a dreadful precipice, upon a rocky and broken surface, a hundred feet below.

When the Indians determine to destroy bison in this way, one of their swiftest footed and most active young men is selected, who is disguised in a bison skin, having the head, ears, and horns adjusted on his own head, so as to make the deception very complete, and thus accoutred, he stations himself between the bison herd and some of the precipices that often extend for several miles along the rivers. The Indians surround the herd as nearly as possible, when at a given signal, they show themselves and rush forward with loud yells. The animals being alarmed, and seeing no way open but in the direction of the disguised Indian, runs towards him, and he taking to flight dashes on to the precipice, where he suddenly secures himself in some previously ascertained crevice. The foremost of the herd arrives at the brink—there is no possibility of retreat, no chance of escape; the foremost may for an instant shrink with terror, but the crowd behind, who are terrified by the approaching hunters, rush forward with increasing impetuosity, and the aggregated force hurls them successively into the gulf where certain death awaits them.

The grizzly bear is a native of this territory and is the most ferocious of all his tribe. He is twice as large as the black bear, with enormously large paws and teeth. He is the monarch of the Rocky Mountains as the lion is of the deserts of Africa. The Indians regard him with the utmost terror.

His enormous strength enables him to kill and drag away a bison, whom he buries in a pit dug for the purpose. His extreme tenacity of life renders him still more dangerous; for he can endure repeated wounds which would be instantaneously mortal to other beasts, and in that state, can rapidly pursue his enemy. So that the hunter who fails to shoot him through the brain, is placed in the most perilous situation.

One evening the men in the hindmost of one of Lewis and Clark's canoes perceived one of these bears lying in the open ground about three hundred paces from the river; and six of them, who were all good hunters, went to attack him. Concealing themselves by a small eminence, they were able to approach within 40 paces unperceived; four of the hunters now fired, and each lodged a ball in his body, two of which passed directly through the lungs. The bear sprang up and ran furiously with open mouth upon them; two of the hunters, who had reserved their fire, gave him two additional wounds, and one breaking his shoulder-blade, somewhat retarded his motion. Before they could again load their guns, he came so close on them, that they were obliged to run towards the river, and before they had gained it the bear had almost overtaken them. Two men jumped into the canoe; the other four separated and concealing themselves among the willows, fired as fast as they could load their pieces. Several times the bear was struck, but each shot seemed only to direct his fury towards the hunter; at last, he pursued them so closely that they threw aside their guns and pouches, and jumped from a perpendicular bank, 20 feet high, into the river. The bear sprang after them, and was very near the hindmost man, when one of the hunters on the shore shot him through the head, and finally killed him. When they dragged him on shore, they found that 8 balls had passed through his body in different directions. On one occasion Capt. Lewis was walking at some distance from the river when a huge bear sprang suddenly upon him. He had no resource but flight, and plunging into the river, he hoped thus to escape, but the bear pursued him in the water, and would not give up the pursuit, until Capt. Lewis turned round and threatened him with a spear which he had in his hand. He then thought it best to return, and fled into the thicket.

This territory is inhabited by various Indian tribes, the most numerous of which are the Sioux. The whole number of the Indians is estimated at 150,000. The United States have military posts in different parts. It constituted a portion of the great territory of Louisiana purchased of the French.

Missouri, towns in Clark and Hempstead Cos Arkansas.

Missouriton, a town in Howard Co. Missouri.

Mistaken Cape, the S. point of the eastern-most of the Hermit Islands, about 9 m. E. N. E. of Cape Horn.

Mistaken Point, a promontory on the W. of Cape Race, at the S. E. point of the island of Newfoundland.

Mistassin Lake, a lake of New Britain, lying E. of the S. part of James' Bay, and surrounded by mountains called the Great Mistassins. It is above 250 m. in circuit, of a very irregular shape, being much intersected by long and narrow projections of land, and contains several islands. It is formed of the Mistassin and other rivers from the mountains, and its outlet is the river Rupert.

Mistretta, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona, 50 m. E. S. E. of Palermo

Mitcham, a village in Surrey, Eng. 7 m. S. W. of London. It is seated on the Wandle, on which are some snuff-mills and calico-printing manufactories.

Mitchellcan, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. seated at the N. extremity of the forest of Dean, 12 m. W. of Gloucester and 116 W. by N. of London.

Mitchelstown, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with a college for 12 decayed gentlemen and 16 gentlemen. It is 23 m. N. E. of Cork and 26 S. S. E. of Limerick.

Mittau, a town of Russia, capital of the government of Courland, the residence of Louis XVIII for several years during his exile. The walls and moats of the town are decayed, the houses, for the most part, have no particular elegance; and a great many gardens and open places are contained within its circuit. Here are two Lutheran churches, a beautiful Calvinist church, and a Catholic church. It is seated on the Aa, 45 m. E. of Goldingen and 270 N. N. E. of Warsaw. Long. 23. 50. E., lat. 56. 40. N.

Mittenwald, a town of Siberia, on the Neisse, 18 m. S. of Glatz.

Mittenwald, a town of Bavaria, capital of the county of Werdenfels; seated on the Iser, 12 m. N. of Inspruck.

Mitterburg, a town of Austrian Illyria, with a castle on a rock, 30 m. S. E. of Trieste

Mobile, p.t. Mobile Co. Alabama, and the only considerable town in the state. It stands on the W. side of a large bay to which it gives its name, and has a good trade principally in the exportation of cotton. Steam-boats ply between this place and New Orleans, as well as the towns on the river above Mobile. This town was founded by the Spaniards about the year 1700. The yellow fever is often prevalent here Lat. 30. 37. N. long. 88. 18. W. Pop. 3,194

Mobile, a river of Alabama, formed by the junction of the Alabama and Tombecbee, 40 m. above the town of Mobile. It enters Mobile Bay by several channels. The western channel is called the Mobile; the eastern is called the Tensaw, and has the greatest width and depth. Mobile Bay is 30 m. long and 12 broad; it has two entrances from the Gulf of Mexico, the deepest of which is 18 feet of water.

Mobile, a county of Alabama. Pop. 6,265. Mobile is the capital.

Mocaranga, or Mocara, a kingdom on the E. coast of Africa, erroneously called Monomotapa, which is the title of the monarch. It is bounded on the N. by Monomugi, E. by the Mosambique, S. by Sofala and Manica, and W. by unknown regions. It has several rivers, of which the Zambeira is the chief; is fertile in rice, millet, and sugar-canes, which last grow without cultivation; and the pastures feed vast multitudes of cattle, especially of the largest sorts, but not any horses. There are a great many ostriches, wild beasts, and elephants; and several mines of gold and silver. The natives possess all the characteristics of the African negro. Their houses are built of wood, and covered with plaster; but they have few towns. Madrogan is the capital.

Mocaumpour, or Mockeanpore, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name subject to the rajah of Nepal. It is situate on the E. side of the Nepal, 48 m. S. S. E. of Catmandu and 136 N. of Patna. Long. 85. 20. E., lat. 27. 30. N.

Mocha, or Moka, a town of Arabia, in Yemen, seated on a small bay of the Red Sea, near the strait of Babelmandel. On each of the points of land, which enclose the road, is a fort; but they are wretched structures. The town is of a circular form, surrounded by a wall in which are six gates. It stands in a dreary plain, bounded by mountains, and consisting entirely of arid sand. The English, from Hindoostan, at present engross almost exclusively the trade of this place, which is very considerable, especially in coffee. 140 m. S. S. W. of Sana and 638 S. S. E. of Mecca. Long. 44. 25. E., lat. 13. 10. N.

Modbury, a town in Devonshire, Eng. with a manufacture of plush. It has a spacious church and two meeting-houses, and is seated between two hills, 36 m. S. S. W. of Exeter and 208 W. S. W. of London.

Modena, or Modenese, a duchy of Italy, bounded on the W. by Parma, N. by the Po, E. by the papal states, and S. by the Apennines. It now includes the principalities of Massa and Carrara, and contains an area of 2,060 sq. m. with 370,000 inhabitants. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, and fruits of different kinds. It also feeds a great number of cattle.

Modena, the capital of the Modenese, and a bishop's see, with a citadel and a magnificent college. The cathedral, several of the churches, and some of the monasteries, are handsome structures. The ducal palace is richly furnished and contains fine paintings. The inhabitants of Modena, estimated at 30,000 carry on manufactures of hemp, woolens, glass, leather, &c. It is seated between the rivers Secchia and Panaro, 30 m. E. S. E. of Parma and 60 N. N. W. of Florence. Long. 11. 12. E., lat. 44. 34. N.

Modica, a town of Sicily, in Val di Noto, capital of a district of its name; seated near the river Scicli, 10 m. W. of Noto.

Modon, a strong town of the Morea, and a bishop's see, with a safe harbour. It is seated on a promontory, projecting into the sea of Sapienza, 15 m. W. of Coron. Long. 21. 31. E., lat. 36. 53. N.

Moers. See Mcurs.

Moeskirch, a town of Bavaria, 18 m. N. of Constance.

Moffat, a town of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, near the river Annan, encompassed on all sides, except the S. by hills of different heights. Its delightful situation and its mineral springs attract much company. 20 m. N. by E. of Dumfries and 50 S. of Edinburgh.

Moffat Hills, the highest mountains of the S. of Scotland, on the N. border of Dumfries-shire. Hartfel, the most elevated, is 2,300 feet above the level of the sea. They feed numerous flocks of sheep; and from them descend, in different directions, the Tweed, Clyde, and Annan, whose sources are but little distant from each other.

Mogador, a town of the empire of Morocco, with a harbour for vessels of a middling size. It is the emporium of all the foreign, and indeed of the entire trade of Morocco, and contains 10,000 inhabitants. The town is surrounded by walls, with batteries, and at high tides is almost encompassed by the sea. The streets are all in straight lines and contain a great number of handsome houses. The port is formed by a channel, between the mainland and an island above a mile in length. It is 180 m. W. N. W. of Morocco Long. 9. 35. W., lat. 31. 28. N.

Mohats, a town of Lower Hungary, in the county of Burany. Here Louis, the last king of Hungary, was defeated in 1526, by the Turks under Soliman II., with the loss of 22,000 men, and after the battle was suffocated by the fall of his horse in a muddy brook. In 1687 the Turks were defeated by prince Charles of Lorraine, with the loss of 10,000 men, their cannon, and baggage. It is seated at the conflux of the Corasse with the Danube, 23 m. N. by E. of Esseck.

Mohawk River, a river of New York, which rises 40 m. E. of Lake Ontario, and, after receiving many tributary streams, enters Hudson river, 10 m. above Albany. About 3 m. above its junction with the Hudson it has a cataract, where the stream, 100 yards wide, falls perpendicularly about 70 feet.

Mohawk, a village on the Onse or Grand river, U. C., and the principal settlement of the Six Nations of Indians.

Mohegan, a village of New London Co. Conn. on the Thames, 5 m. below Norwich. It is inhabited by a remnant of the Mohegan Indians.

Mohican, on Mohecan, p. t. Wayne Co. Ohio, on a creek of the same name. 80 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 1,310.

Mohila, one of the Comoro Islands, between the N. end of Madagascar and the continent of Africa. The inland parts are mountainous and woody. Some of the inhabitants are Mahomedans, who have a few wretched mosques, built of wood and straw without, and matted neatly within. This island produces plenty of rice, peas, honey, cocoa-nuts, plantains, various fruits and sugar-canes. It has a good road for ships. Long. 43. 59. E., lat. 12. 35. S.

Mohilif, or Megiler, a considerable government of the Russian empire, to the E. of the government of Minsk. Its area is 18,500 sq. m., and its pop. about 800,000, of whom the majority are Poles.

Mohilef, the capital of the above government, is the seat of the government officers, and the residence of a Greek and a Catholic archbishop, and has a castle, surrounded with an earthen mound. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade with Dantzic, Riga, and Memel. In July, 1812, a vere battle was fought in the neighbourhood of this place between the French and the Russians. It is situate on the Dnieper, 340 m. E. N. E. of Warsaw and 364 S. of Petersburg. Long. 30. 14. E., lat. 53. 52. N.

Mohrin, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, 18 m. N. N. W. of Custrin.

Mohringen, a town of Prussia, in the government of Königsberg, situate on a lake of the same name, which almost surrounds it. Here is an old castle, formerly a convent, belonging to the knights of the Teutonic order, in consequence of whose wars the town has frequently suffered. It is 56 m. S. S. W. of Königsberg and 56 S. E. of Dantzic.

Möilah, a town and fort of Arabia Petraea, on the coast of the Red Sea, 130 m. S. of Acaba and 180 N. W. of Medina. Long. 33. 50. E., lat. 27. 30. N.

Moirra, a township of Franklin Co. N. Y. Pop. 791.

Moirans, a town of France, department of Isere, 25 m. S. E. of Vienne.

Moissac, a town of France, department of Tarn-et-Garonne, with a trade in corn and flour; situated on the Tarn, near its confluence with the Garonne, 18 m. N. W. of Montauban.

Mola di Bari, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, seated on the gulf of Venice, 17 m. E. of Bari.

Mola di Gaeta, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, seated near the sea, 3 m. N. E. of Gaeta.

Mold, a town of Wales, in Flintshire. It is surrounded by rugged hills, rich in mineral treasures. 5 m. S. of Flint and 201 N. W. of London.

Moldavia, a province of Turkey in Europe, bounded N. by Austrian Poland, E. by Russia, S. by Turkey, and W. by Transylvania. The principal rivers are the Danube, Pruth, and Sereth. The W. part is mountainous, and there are some uncultivated deserts; but it abounds in good pastures, which feed a great number of horses, oxen, and sheep; it also produces corn, pulse, honey, wax, fruits, with plenty of game and fowls. The sovereign, who is styled hospodar, is tributary to the grand seignior. Jassy is the principal town.

Mole, a port of St. Domingo. See Nicholas, St.

Molfetta, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, seated on the Gulf of Venice, 10 m. W. by N. of Bari.

Molieres, a town of France, department of Tarn-et-Garonne, 11 m. N. of Mont Auban.

Molina, a strong town of Spain, in New Castile, seated on a river of the same name, in a territory abounding in pastures, 108 m. E. N. E. of Madrid.

Molise, a province of Naples, in the form of a triangle, whose sides are 39 m. long, lying between Terra di Lavoro, Abruzzo Citra, Capitanata, and Principato Ultra. It is a mountainous country, but fertile in corn, wine, saffron, and silk. It suffered much damage by an earthquake in 1805, when upwards of 20,000 of the inhabitants perished.

Molise, the capital of the foregoing province, with a castle. 50 m. N. N. E. of Naples. Long. 14. 43. E., lat. 41. 36. N.

Mollen, a strong town of Denmark, in the duchy of Lauenburg, seated on the Steckenitz, 8 m. S. of Lubeck.

Molsheim, a town of France, department of Lower Rhine, seated on the Brusche, 10 m. W. of Strasburg.

Moluccas, or Spice Islands, a number of islands in the Indian Ocean, lying E. of Celebes. They include those from Mortay in the N. to Banda in the S., and from Mysol in the E. to Booro in the W. The other principal ones are Gilolo, Ceram, Amboyna, Ouby, Ternate, Tidore, Motir, Machian, and Bachian. Except Gilolo, they produce neither corn, rice, nor cattle, but they have oranges, lemons, and other fruits; and are most remarkable for spices, especially cloves and nutmegs. On the shores there are large rocks of coral, of great variety and beauty.

The clove tree, (now called by botanists Eugenia caryophyllata.) is about forty or fifty feet high, with long pointed leaves like those of the laurel. Some compare its appearance to that of the beech. At the beginning of the wet season in May, it throws out a profusion of leaves. Soon after, the germs of the fruit are to be seen at the extremities of the shoots, and in four months the cloves are fully formed. The fruit, at first of a green colour, assumes in time a pale yellow, and then a blood red. At this period, it is fit to be used as a spice, consequently this is the clove harvest. But to open sufficiently for the purposes of propagation, it requires three weeks longer; in which period it swells to an extraordinary size, loses much of its spicy quality, and contains a hard nucleus like the seed of the bay. It is now called "the Mother Clove." There are five varieties of this fruit. It has a more limited geographical distribution than any other useful plant. It was originally confined to the five Molucca islands, and chiefly to Makian. It had been conveyed to Amboyna a very short time before the arrival of the Portuguese. Not partial to large islands, it does not grow well in Gilolo, Ceram, Booro, or Celebes. It has been cultivated, and has produced fruit, in the western part of Oceanica. It has also borne fruit, though of inferior quality, for these fifty years in the Mauritius. Even at Amboyna, the tree is not productive before the tenth or twelfth year of its growth, and requires great attention whereas, in the parent islands, it bears in its seventh or eighth year, and requires very little care or culture. It neither thrives near the sea nor on the high hills. The gathering, the drying, and the packing of it, are all as simple operations as possible; and very little care is required for its preservation as an article of commerce.

The most remarkable animals in these islands are the barbiroussa, the opossum, the phalanger, the Indian jerboa, and the chevrotin or Moschus pygmaeus. There are but few domestic animals. The eye is delighted with the magnificent plumage of some of the birds, such as the bird of para dise, the fishing martin, the different parroquets, cockatoos, and others. We know little of the minerals of these regions.

The natives of the Moluccas, before they were visited by foreign nations, attached no value to the vegetable riches which are peculiar to their islands, and which have rendered them at once so celebrated and so unfortunate. The Chinese first accidentally landed in the middle age, and discovered the clove and the nutmeg, in consequence of which a taste for these commodities was diffused over India, and thence extended to Persia and to Europe. These Islands were discovered in 1511, by the Portuguese, who formed some settlements; but were driven out in 1607 by the Dutch, to whom the islands are at present subject.

Molwitz, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Brieg, famous for a victory gained by the Prussians over the Austrians in 1741. 4 m. W. of Brieg.

Mombaza, a city on the coast of Zanguebar. It was seated on a peninsula, which has been since turned into an island, by cutting a canal through the isthmus. It is defended by a strong citadel, has a commodious harbour for large vessels, and carries on a great commerce with the islands and kingdoms adjacent, in gold, ivory, rice, flesh, &c. The king of Melinda, being a Christian, had a quarrel with the Portuguese governor, took the castle by assault, turned Mahomedan, and murdered all the Christians, in 1631. In 1729 the Portuguese again became masters of this territory; but since that time the natives have regained possession of it, and have treated in the most treacherous and hostile manner all Christians who have attempted to land. Mombaza is 75 m. S. S. W. of Melinda. Long. 39. 30. E., lat. 3. 15. S.

Momflot, a town of Egypt, with manufactures of linens, seated on the left bank of the Nile, 20 m. N. N. W. of Siout.

Monpoz, a town of New Granada, in the province of Carthagera, on the left bank of the Magdalenal, 112 m. S. S. E. of Carthagera.

Mona, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, to the S. W. of the isle of Zealand, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. Stege is the chief town.

Monacks, p.v. Montgomery Co. Alabama.

Monaco, a fortified sea-port of Italy, capital of a small principality of the same name, between the country of Nice and the duchy of Genoa. The harbour is good, but not deep enough for large vessels; the principal export is olive oil. It is seated on a craggy rock that projects into the sea, 12 m. E. N. E. of Nice. Long. 7. 30. E., lat. 43. 44. N.

Monaghan, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, bounded N. by Tyrone, E. by Armagh, S. E. by Louth, S. W. by Cavan, and W. by Fer managh. Its area includes 179,600 Irish acres, part of which is occupied by woods and bogs, and a third part taken up by Lough Erne. A great part is, however, in a high state of cultivation, and the population amounts to about 180,000. It contains five baronies, is divided into 20 parishes, and sends two members to parliament.

Monaghan, the capital of the foregoing county, was fortified with a castle and a fort, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. It is 40 m. S. W. of Belfast and 60 N. N. W. of Dublin. Long. 6. 49. W., lat. 54. 16. N.

Monaghan, a township of York Co. Pa.

Monaster, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, seated near the sea, 70 m. S. E. of Tunis. Long. 11. 6. E., lat. 35. 50. N.

Monasterran, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, situate on the Barrow, near the grand canal, 19 m. N. of Carlow and 32 S. W. of Dublin.

Monblanc, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, on the river Francoli, 17 m. N. of Tarragona.

Moncallier, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated on an eminence near the Po, 5 m. S. E. of Turin.

Moncalvo, a town of Piedmont, province of Monterrat, seated on a mountain, 12 m. S. W. of Casal and 30 E. of Turin.

Moncaon, a town of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, with a strong castle; seated near the Minho, 24 m. N. of Braga.

Monchabon, a city of Birmah, and during a short period its capital, is surrounded by a wall and ditch, but is chiefly celebrated as the birth-place of A'ompra, who afterwards became the deliverer of his country and the conqueror of Pegu. It is 40 m. N. of Ummerapoora.

Moncon, a town of Spain, in Arragon, with a castle, 6 m. S. of Balbastro and 50 N. E. of Saragossa.

Moncontour, a town of France, department of Cotes du Nord, 12 m. S. S. E. of St. Brioux.

Monadnock, mountain, usually called the Grand

Monadnock, is situated in the towns of Jaffrey and Dublin, in Cheshire Co. N. H. about 22 m. E. from Connecticut river, and 10 N. of the Southern boundary of this state. The direction of the ridge is N. E. and S. W. The mountain is about 5 m. long from N. to S. and 3 m. from E. to W. According to Professor Dana, who visited the mountain in 1816, its base is 1,452, and its summit 3,450 feet above the level of the sea. The mountain is composed of talc, and mica slate, distinctly stratified. Garnet, schorl, feldspar, and quartz, occur in various parts. On the E. side, plumbago is found in large quantities. Crucibles and pencils have been manufactured from it, but for the latter, it proves not very good. The summit when seen at a distance of 4 or 5 m. appears rounded and destitute of those high cliffs and mural precipices belonging to granitic mountains. The prospect from the pinnacle is very extensive; thirty ponds of fresh water, some of which are so large as to contain islands of 8 or 10 acres, may be seen from it, in the immediate vicinity. Near the base of the mountain, is the "Monadnock Mineral Spring."

Moncontour, a town of France, department of Vienne, 27 m. N. W. of Poitiers.

Mondego, a river of Portugal, which has its source near Guardo, crosses Beira by Coimbra, and enters the Atlantic, near a cape of the same name. Its banks were the theatre of great military movements between the French and British in 1810 and 1811.

Monededo, a town of Spain, in Galicia, and a bishop's see; 60 m. N. E. of Compostella and 115 N. W. of Leon. Long. 7. 10. W., lat. 43. 30. N.

Monkori, a fortified town of Piedmont, capital of a province of its name and a bishop's see. In 1796 the French gained a victory here over the Austrians, which made them masters of the states of the king of Sardinia. It is seated on a mountain, near the river Ellero, 14 m. E. of Coni. Long. 8. 3. E., lat. 44. 25. N.

Monragan, a town of Spain, in Guipuscoa, near which are some medicinal springs and a famous mine of excellent iron. It is seated on the Deva, 24 m. S. S. W. of St. Sebastian.

Monragone, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, celebrated for its medicinal waters. 13 m. N. W. of Capua.

Monfa, an island on the coast of Zanguebar, to the N. E. of Quiloa, tributary to Portugal. Long. 40. 50. E., lat. 7. 50. S.

Monflanquin, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, 20 m. N. N. E. of Agen.

Monforte, a town of Spain, in Galicia, with a castle, 19 m. N. of Orense.

Monforte, a town of Portugal in Beira, 17 m. S. E. of Castel Branco.

Monforte, a town of Portugal, in Alemejo, 21 m. S. of Portalegra.

Monforte, a town of Portugal, in Tras os Montes, 30 m. W. of Braganza.

Monghyr, a celebrated town and fortress of Hindoostan, capital of a district of its name in the province of Bahar, seated on the S. bank of the Ganges, which in the rainy season forms here a prodigious expanse of fresh water. The town, as distinct from the fortress, consists of 16 different bazaars, or market-places, scattered over a space of about a mile and a half long and a mile wide. The population is estimated at 30,000. Since 1816 this has formed one of the stations of the Baptist Missionary Society, whose exertions have here been attended with a pleasing degree of success. 80 m. E. by S. of Patna and 300 N. W. of Calcutta. Long. 86. 36. E., lat. 25. 24. N.

Mongolia, or Western Chinese Tartary, is bounded on the N. by Siberia, E. by Eastern Tartary, S. by the Great Wall of China and Leatong, and W. by Independent Tartary, and occupying most of the space between China and Asiatic Russia. Almost the whole territory consists of a level plain, which borders on the Altai and other mountain chains that form the Russian frontier. The inhabitants are decidedly distinguished both from the Turks and Tartars. They have neither towns nor houses; but wander in hordes, and live under tents, which they remove from one place to another, according as the temperature of the different seasons, or the wants of their flocks, require. They pass the summer on the banks of rivers, and the winter at the foot of some mountain or hill which shelters them from the piercing N. wind. Their ideas of honour, perhaps less ridiculous than those of our contemporaries, induce them rather to be content with the food which their flocks supply them, than cultivate the earth. During the summer they live only on milk, using without distinction that of the cow, mare, ewe, goat, and camel. Their ordinary drink is warm water, in which a little coarse tea has been infused; with this they mix cream, milk, or butter, according to their circumstances. They have also a method of making a kind of spirituous liquor of sour milk, especially of that of the mare. The Monguls are free, open, and sincere. They pride themselves chiefly on their dexterity in handling the bow and arrow, mounting on horseback, and hunting wild beasts. Polygamy is permitted among them; but they generally have only one wife. Their religion is confined to the worship of Fo. They have the most superstitious veneration for their lamas, to whom they give the most valuable of their effects in return for prayers, which they go about reciting from tent to tent. The Monguls are now split into a number of petty states, dependant on the empires of Russia and China. Those under the Chinese government may be divided into four principal tribes, which are the Monguls, properly so called, the Kalkas, the Ortoos, and the Tartars of Konkonor.

Monheim, a town of Bavaria, in Neuburg, 8 m. N. of Donawert.

Monkendam, a sea-port of the Netherlands, in N. Holland, with manufactures of soap and silk; seated on an arm of the Zuider Zee, 8 m. N. E. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 38. E., lat. 52. 28. N.

Monistrol, a town of France, department of Upper Loire, 14 m. S. W. of St. Etienne.

Monks corner, p.v. Charleston Dis. S. C.

Monkton, p.t. Addison Co. Vt. 26 m. S. E. Burlington. Pop. 1,354; also a township of Annapolis Co. N. C. and Westmoreland Co. N. B.

Monmouth, a county of New Jersey. Pop. 29,233. Freehold is the capital.

Monmouth, p.t. Kennebec Co. Me. 17 m. W. Augusta. Pop. 1,822.

Monmouth, a borough of England, capital of Monmouthshire. It was formerly defended by a wall and ditch; and contains the ruins of a castle in which the warlike Henry V. was born, hence called Henry of Monmouth. His cradle and the armour which he wore at the battle of Agincourt are still shown at Troy House, the seat of the duke of Beaufort, about half a mile from the town. Here are two ancient churches, both curious structures. The inhabitants carry on some trade by means of the Wye, and there are iron and tin works in the neighbourhood. Monmouth is seated at the conflux of the Wye and Minour, 25 m. W. of Gloucester and 131 W. by N. of London.

Monmouthshire, a county of England, 24 m. long and 20 broad. The eastern, and largest part, is a tract fertile in corn and pasture, well wooded, and abounding with limestone. The western portion is mountainous, and in great part unfavourable for cultivation; whence it is devoted to the feeding of sheep and goats. Monmouthshire was formerly reckoned one of the counties of Wales; and from the names of its towns and villages, its mountainous rugged surface, and its situation beyond the Wye, which seems to form a natural boundary between England and Wales in this part, it certainly partakes most of the character of the latter country though now comprehended in the civil division of the former. The higher ranks generally speak English, but the common people use the Welsh language. The chief wealth of the county arises from its agricultural and mineral products. During the last century a great number of iron works have been established, and some tin works; and the inland intercourse has been greatly facilitated by the Brecknock and Monmouthshire canals, as also by the several railways.

Montreal, a fertile island and county of Lower Canada in the river St. Lawrence, 30 m. long and 10 broad; surrendered by the French to the English in 1760.

Montreal, city, stands on the eastern side of the above island. It makes a fine appearance from a distance with its compact mass of buildings, roofed with sheets of tin, and overtopped by church spires glittering with the same metal. Behind it rises a mountain spotted with orchards. The houses are mostly of stone, or plastered to resemble it, and are low with a heavy look; the streets are narrow. The cathedral is the largest church in North America except that of Mexico; it is 255 feet long and 134 wide and is capable of containing 10,000 people. The college is a large edifice of stone, and has 300 students. The General Hospital or Convent of the Grey Sisters was established in 1753 and is under the management of a Superior and 19 Nuns. The other objects worthy of notice are Nelson's Monument, the Museum, and the Parade, a beautiful public ground. This city is the principal depot of the Northwestern Fur

Company, and carries on a large trade with the United States. A rapid in the river below, is a great impediment to the commerce with Quebec. Montreal was taken from the French by the English under General Amherst in 1790. In 1775 it was taken by the Americans under General Montgomery, but shortly after abandoned. It is 120 m. S. Morat, or Murten, a town of Switzerland, canton of Friburg, with a castle. It stands on the S. E. side of a lake of its name, lying parallel with the lake of Neufchatel, into which it flows by the Broyne. This town sustained a siege against the duke of Burgundy, in 1476, in which his whole army was destroyed. 10 m. N. E. of Friburg

Moratalaz, a town of Spain, in New Castile, 22 m. E. of Ciudad Real.

Moratalla, a town of Spain, in Murcia, 34 m. S. W. of Chincinilla.

Morava, a large river of Servia, which rises in Bulgaria, and, running through Servia by Nissa, joins the Danube at Semendria.

Moravia, a province of the Austrian empire, bounded N. and W. by Bohemia, E. by Hungary, and S. by Austria Proper. With Austrian Silesia, now annexed to it, its area is upwards of 10,000 sq. m. and its population 1,680,000. It is intersected by mountain ranges, but the most lofty ridges are diversified with fertile valleys and extensive plains, and it is watered by a great number of rivers and brooks. More corn is grown than the inhabitants consume, and much hemp and flax are raised. The principal manufactures are woolens, linen, cotton, iron, glass, paper, and gunpowder. From this country a sect of Christians takes its name, their doctrines having been first taught here; but the inhabitants in general are Roman Catholics. Brunn is the capital

Moravian Village, a village in Upper Canada, on the Thames, between Lakes Huron and Erie. 70 m. E. Detroit. It is inhabited by about 160 Indians, and their pastors, the Moravian missionaries. Here General Harrison defeated the British in 1813.

Morava, or Marsch, a river of the Austrian states, which rises in the mountains between Bohemia and Silesia, crosses Moravia by Olmutz and Hradisch, and receiving the Teya, on the confines of Austria and Hungary, separates these two countries as far as the Danube, into which it enters, 15 m. above Presburg. It has commonly the latter appellation till it receives the Teya.

Morbegno, a town of Austrian Italy, one of the handsomest and most commercial towns in the Milanese, seated on the Adda, 12 m. S. E. of Chiavenna. Long. 9. 36. E., lat. 46. 8. N.

Morbeys, or Omnirabih, a river of Barbary, which rises in Mount Atlas, flows through the empire of Morocco, and enters the Atlantic at Azamor.

Morbihan, a department in the N. W. of France, bounded N. by that of Cotes du Nord and S. by the sea. It takes its name from a bay between Vaunes (the capital) and the island of Bellisle. Its entrance is narrow; but it extends within, and contains about 30 little islands.

Morcone, a town of Naples, province of Molise, 19 m. S. S. E. of Molise.

Morea, the ancient Peloponnesus, a peninsula in the south of Greece, joined to the main land by the isthmus of Corinth. It is 180 m. long and 120 broad. The soil is fertile, except in the middle, where there are many mountains; and it is watered by several rivers, of which the Alpheus, Vasilii Potamo, and Stromio, are the chief. See Greece.

Moreau, p.t. Saratoga Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, opposite Glen's Falls. Pop. 1,690.

Moreland, p.v. Tioga Co. N. Y. also townships in Montgomery, Philadelphia and Lycoming Cos. Pa.

Morella, a town of Spain, in Valencia, seated among high mountains, 80 m. S. of Valencia.

Moresville, p.v. Delaware Co. N. Y.

Moret, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne, near the Seine, 12 m. S. S. E. of Melun.

Moreton Hampstead, a town in Devonshire, Eng. with manufactures of woolen cloth and yarn, and a considerable trade. Here are the vestiges of two castles, or forts; and in the vicinity are a Druidical temple, a large rocking stone, and a cromlech. 185 m. W. by S. of London.

Moretown, p.t. Washington Co. Vt. 7 m. W. Montpelier. Pop. 816.

Morotta, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; seated on a small river which runs into the Po, 18 m. S. of Turin.

Morgan, a county of the W. District of Virginia. Pop. 2,692. Berkley Springs is the capital. A county of Georgia. Pop. 12,023. Madison is the capital. A county of Ohio. Pop. 11,796. Mc Connellsville is the capital. A county of E. Tennessee. Pop. 2,582. Montgomery is the capital. A county of Illinois. Pop. 12,709. Jacksonville is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 5,579. Martinsville is the capital.

Co. Va., Burke Co. N. C., Blount Co. Ten., Butler Co. Ken. and Clinton Co. Ohio.

Morges, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Vaud, with a castle. By its canal, goods are sent to other parts from the lake of Geneva, on which the town is seated, 5 m. W. S. W. of Lausanne.

Morhange, a town of France, department of Moselle, 21 m. S. S. E. of Metz.

Moriah, p.t. Essex Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,742.

Moriches, p.t. Suffolk Co. N. Y. on Long Island.

Morigen, a town of Hanover, on the Mohr, 12 m. N. N. W. of Gottingen.

Maritz, St., a town of the Swiss canton of Gribsons, with a famous mineral spring, 25 m. N. N. E. of Chiavenna.

Morlachie, a mountainous country, lying between, and forming part of the provinces of Croatia and Dalmatia. The inhabitants are called Morlachi, or Moro-blasi, and are said, by some to be of Wallachian extraction. They inhabit the pleasant valleys of Koter, along the rivers Kerba, Cettina, Naranta, and among the inland mountains of Dalmatia. The Morlachi are said to be extremely superstitious, and if injured or insulted, implacable; but hospitable, and in a high degree capable of gratitude: the most pleasing trait of character among them is friendship, which they have even made a kind of religious article; for the Slavonian ritual contains a particular benediction for the solemn union of two male, or two female friends, in the presence of the congregation. The male friends, thus united, are called probratimi, and the female posestreme, which mean half-brothers and half-sisters. From these consecrated friendships among the Morlachi, and other nations of the same origin, arose, as it should seem, the sworn brothers, a denomination frequent among the common people in many parts of Europe. Segna is the capital.

Morlaix, a town of France, department of Finisterre, with a castle and a tide harbour. The church of Notre Dame is a singular structure, and the hospital very handsome. It has a considerable trade in linen, hemp, and tobacco, and is seated on a river of the same name, 30 m. E. N. E. of Brest. Long. 3. 45. W., lat. 48. 33. N.

Morocco, an empire of Africa, comprehending a considerable part of the ancient Mauritania, bounded W. by the Atlantic, N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Algiers, and S. by the Sahara. Its greatest length is above 590 m. but it is no where more than 260 broad. The soil though sandy and dry in some places, is fertile in others; and the fruits, as well as the pastures, are excellent but the country is not properly cultivated. The inhabitants are Mahomedans, of tawny complexion, robust, and very skilful in managing a horse and wielding a lance: they are jealous, deceitful, superstitious, and cruel. There are a great number of Christian slaves and some merchants upon the coast, besides a multitude of Jews, who carry on almost all the trade, especially by land, with the negroes, to whom they send large caravans, which travel over vast deserts, almost destitute of water. Besides woolen goods, their commodities are Morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostriches' feathers; in return for which they have silks, muslins, calicoes, coffee, and drugs. In the deserts are lions, leopards, goats and serpents of several kinds. The fruits are dates, figs, almonds, lemons, oranges, pomegranates, and many others. There are also much flax and hemp, but very little timber. The emperor is absolute, his will being a law, and he often exercises great cruelties. His naval force consists chiefly of rovers, who now and then take large prizes. He can bring 100,000 men into the field, half of whom are foot and half horse; but they are poorly armed and know but little of the art of war. The recent capture of Algiers by the French will no doubt entirely change the political character of this despotic government.

Morocco, a city of the foregoing empire, seated in a beautiful valley, formed by a chain of mountains on the N. and those of Atlas on the S. and E. Though not equal to Fez in magnitude and population, it is generally considered the capital, being the most usual residence of the emperor. It has nothing to recommend it but its great extent and the royal palace. It is surrounded by strong walls, 8 m. in circumference. The mosques are very numerous and some of them magnificent. The best houses are enclosed in gardens; but the generality of them serve only to impress the traveller with the idea of a miserable and deserted city. The Jews, who are numerous, have a separate town, walled in, and under the charge of an alcaid, appointed by the emperor. It has 2 gates, which are regularly shut every evening at nine, after which hour no person can enter or depart. Morocco is 90 m. E. of Magador and 400 S. of Gibraltar. Long. 7. 15. W., lat. 30. 57. N.

Moron, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle: near it is a mine of precious stones. It is 30 m. S. E. of Seville.

Morotot, one of the Sandwich Isles, 7 m. W. N. W. of Mowee. Yams are its principal produce; but it has little wood. The coast, on the S. and W. sides forms several bays. Long. 117. 14. W., lat. 21. 10. N.

Morpeth, a borough of Northumberland, Eng. It stands on the N. bank of the Wansbeck, and on the opposite side are the parish church and the ruins of a castle. Here are also a chapel of ease, a Roman Catholic chapel, two meeting-houses, a free grammar school founded by Edward VI., an English free school erected in 1792, a dispensary opened in 1817, and a mechanics' institute commenced in 1825. The other principal buildings are the town-hall, and the new county gaol, house of correction, &c. 15 m. N. of Newcastle and 280 N. by W. of London.

Morris, a county of New Jersey. Pop. 23,580. Morristown is the capital. Also townships in Huntingdon, Greene and Washington Cos. Pa.

Morrison, a township in Jackson Co. Ohio.

Morristown, p. t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,618; p. t. Morris Co. N. J., 19 m. N. W. New York; p. v. Belmont Co. Ohio. 120 m. E. Columbus.

Morrisville, p. v. Madison Co. N. Y., Bucks and Green Cos. Pa., and Fauquier Co. Va.

Morsona, a town of Naples, in the Molise, 14 m. N. E. of Molise.

Mortagne, a town of France, department of Orne, famous for its serges and tanneries. 19 m. E. N. E. of Alençon and 70 W. S. W. of Paris.

Mortagne, a town in the department of Nord, seated at the conflux of the Scarpe and Scheldt, 8 m. S. E. of Tournay.

Mortagne, a town in the department of Lower Charente, on the Gironde, 24 m. S. S. W. of Saintes.

Mortogne, a town in the department of Vendée, where a battle was fought between the royalists and republicans, in 1793, in which the former are said to have lost 20,000 men. It is 36 m. N. of Fontenay le Comte.

Mortain, a town in the department of Manche, on the rivulet Lances, almost surrounded by craggy rocks, 18 m. E. of Avranches.

Mortare, a town of the Sardinian Milanese. 22 m. S. W. of Milan.

Mortay, or Martero, an island in the Eastern Seas, formerly subject to the Sultan of Ternate. It is 80 m. in circumference, and thinly inhabited, but full of sago trees, which are cut by the people of Gilolo. Long. 128. 23. E., lat. 2. 15. N.

Mortlach, a village of Scotland, in Banffshire, where Malcolm II., in memory of a victory gained over the Danes, founded a bishopric, which was translated to Aberdeen by David I.; the ancient cathedral is now used as the parish church. 6 m. S. W. of Keith.

Morriedro, a town of Spain, in Valencia, on the site of the ancient Saguntum, with the ruin of a Roman amphitheatre, &c. It is seated on a river of the same name, 15 m. N. of Valencia.

Mosa, a town of Arabia, in Yemen, 25 m. N. by E. of Mocha.

Mosambique, a straight or channel of the Indian Ocean, between the E. coast of Africa and the island of Madagascar. It is the narrowest in the middle, where it is 240 m. over.

Mosambique, a city and sea-port, the principal settlement of the Portuguese on the E. coast of Africa. It stands on an island of the same name, not more than 3 m. in length and half as much in breadth, and about 2 m. from the continent. The city is handsome, and the buildings well constructed, especially the churches and convents: the fort, or castle, is about a musket shot from the city. The Portuguese have generally a good garrison here, a well stored magazine, and a large hospital for sick sailors. Their ships always call here in going to the E. Indies; and the harbour is so commodious that whole fleets may anchor and provide themselves with all necessaries. Long. 41. 8. E., lat. 15. 5. S.

Mosbach, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden, with a castle, and manufactures of cloth and salt; seated on the Neckar 18 m. E. of Heidelberg.

Mosburg, a town of Bavaria, seated at the conflux of the Amber with the Iser, 24 m. N. E. of Munich.

Moscovy. See Russia.

Moscow, formerly a duchy, but now a government of Russia; bounded on the N. by the government of Tver, E. by that of Great Volodimir, S. by the government of Kaluga and Resan, and W. by those of Tver and Smolensko. It is a fruitful country, and a considerable portion is laid out in gardens and orchards.

Moscow, the capital of the above government, and formerly of the whole empire. Previous to the invasion of the French, it was the largest city in Europe, the circumference within the rampart that enclosed the suburbs being 20 m.; but its population did not correspond with its extent. It contained, within the ramparts, 300,000 souls and was the most populous city in the empire, notwithstanding the residence of the court was at Petersburg. Moscow is rendered memorable in history, for one of the most extraordinary events that ever took place. In June 1812, the French entered Russia with such an immense army that they threatened to sweep every thing before them like a torrent; and it was generally expected that if they once reached this city, which would afford vast resources for their army, as well as comfortable quarters for the winter, the object of the war would have been completed. On the 8th of September the battle of Borodino took place; victory decided in favour of the French, and the Russians retreated off the field, leaving Moscow to its fate. The road being thus left open, the French entered this city, on the 14th of the same month with little opposition. But a sad reverse of fortune now took place, which preserved the Russian empire from ruin, and paved the way to the downfall of the French military power over Europe. The city was set on fire by the Russians, so that the French were compelled to attempt their retreat, at the moment they thought themselves securely entrenched for the winter. Nothing now remained but to offer terms of peace to the Russians, which were rejected; they next proposed an armistice, which was refused; and, on the 19th of October following, they commenced their calamitous retreat from Moscow. The conflagrations destroyed upwards of three parts of the town; and, shocking to relate, more than 30,000 sick and wounded soldiers, who were in the hospitals, perished in the flames. The old city was distributed into 5 divisions, all of which, not excepting the suburbs, have been rebuilt, with wider streets and greater uniformity in the private dwellings, and the population has nearly reached its former magnitude. The divisions are—1. The Kremlin, in the central and highest part of the city, surrounded by high walls of stone and brick, 2 m. in circumference. The division contained the ancient palace of the czars, where Peter the Great was born; also the cathedral with seven towers, besides other churches, the patriarchal palace, and the arsenal. The palace escaped the conflagration of 1812, but was damaged by the French on their leaving Moscow; it has since been rebuilt, with improvements. 2. The Khitagorod, much larger than the Kremlin, contained the university, the printing-house, and many other public buildings, with all the tradesmen's shops. 3. The Bielgorod, or White Town, ran round the two preceding divisions, and took its name from a white wall, by which it was formerly surrounded. 4. The Semlaingorod environed all the other three quarters, and was so denominated from a circular rampart of earth by which it was encompassed. The last two divisions exhibited a grotesque group of churches, convents, palaces, brick and wooden houses, and mean hovels. 5. The Sloboda, or suburbs, formed a vast exterior circle round all the parts already described, and were invested by a low rampart and ditch. These suburbs contained, besides buildings of all kinds, orchards, gardens, corn-fields, much open pasture, and some small lakes, which give rise to the Neglina. The Moskwa, from which the city takes its name, flows through it in a winding channel; but, excepting in spring, is only navigable for rafts. It receives the Yausa in the Semlaingorod, and the Neglina at the western extremity of the Kremlin; but the beds of both these rivulets are nearly dry in summer. Moscow exhibited an astonishing degree of extent and variety, irregularity and contrast; some parts had the appearance of a sequestered desert; others of a populous town; some of a contemptible village; others a great capital. The streets, in general, were very long and broad; some of them paved; others, particularly in the suburbs, were formed with trunks of trees or boarded with planks like the floor of a house.

The places of divine worship, including chapels, amounted to above 1,500: of these 484 were public churches, some built of brick, stuccoed or white-washed, but the greater part were of wood, painted red some had domes of copper, others of tin, gilt or painted green, and many were roofed with wood. They were richly ornamented within; and the pictures of the saints were decorated with gold, silver, and precious stones. Some of their bells were of a stupendous size; they hung in belfries detached from the church, were fixed immoveably to the beams, and rung by a rope tied to the clapper. In the cathedral of St. Michael, the sovereigns of Russia were formerly interred, their bodies being deposited in raised sepulchres, in the shape of coffins, above the pavement. The cathedral of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was the most magnificent in the city, and had long been appropriated to the coronation of the Russian sovereigns. The founding hospital, founded by Catherine II., was an immense pile of building, of a quadrangular shape, and capable of containing 8,000 foundlings. Since the fire, the churches and chapels are less numerous than before, but those which have been rebuilt occupy the former sites. Moscow is the centre of the inland commerce of Russia, particularly connecting the trade between Europe and Siberia. The principal manufactures are those of silk, linen, cotton, paper, leather, and sugar. Moscow suffered severely from the pestilential cholera in 1831. Its present pop. is about 300,000. The navigation to this city is formed by the Moskwa, which flows into the Oeca, near Kolomna, and that river communicates with the Volga and also by a canal to the Don, which river communicates with the sea of Asoph. 425 m. S. E. of Petersburg. Long. 37. 33. E., lat. 55. 46. N.

Moscow, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. Pop. 405; p.t. Livingston Co. N. Y. near Genesee river, 30 m. above Rochester; also a village in Clermont Co. Ohio.

Moselle, a department of France, including part of the former province of Lorraine. It takes its name from a river, which rises in the Vosges, waters Epinal and Toul, receives the Meurthe below Nancy, and, passing by Metz, Thionville, and Treves, enters the Rhine at Coblenz. Metz is the capital.

Mosonia, a town in Persia, in Khusistan, 22 m. S. W. of Suter.

Moskirch, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden, where the Austrians sustained a defeat in 1806. 22 m. N. Stuttgart.

Moskoe, an island on the coast of Norway, separated from the mainland by the Vestfjord. On its coast is the whirlpool of Maelstrom, which see.

Mosquito Shore, a tract of country of the eastern coast of Honduras. It is well watered by navigable rivers and lakes; abounds in fish, game, and provisions of all sorts; furnishes every necessary for raising cattle and stock; and is clothed with woods producing timber for every purpose at land or sea. The soil is superior to that of the W. India Islands, the climate more salubrious and the destructive ravages of hurricanes, and earthquakes are here unknown. It received its name from the immense swarms of moschetoes which are the torment of the inhabitants and compel them to pass a great part of their time in boats upon the rivers. The Mosquito Indians of this coast are governed by aristocratic chiefs, and number about 1,500 warriors.

This country was held by the English for 80 years, but was ceded to Spain in 1786, in consideration of certain cessionson the coast of Yucatan. It is now included in the Guatemalan Republic. See Guatemala.

Moss, a sea-port of Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys, at the mouth of a river of its name, on the E. side of Christiania Bay. Here are many saw-mills and a large iron foundery. 25 m. S. of Christiania. Long. 10. 48. E., lat. 58. 38. N.

Munich, one of the finest towns in Germany, and capital of the kingdom of Bavaria. It contains nearly 60,000 inhabitants. The houses are high, and the streets spacious, with canals in many of them. The palace is a stupendous structure, the interior magnificently adorned; and the cabinet of curiosities, the museum, the library, and the arsenal, merit attention. The cathedral of Notre Dame contains the tomb of one of the emperors, of black marble, adorned with statues of bronze. Institutions for charitable, literary, and scientific purposes are numerous. The large market-place, in which is the town-house, is very beautiful. Manufactures of silk, velvet, woolen cloth, and tapestry, are carried on. Near the city are two other palaces, Nymphenburg and Schlessheim. Munich has often suffered in the wars of Germany, and in 1796 and 1800 it was taken by the French. It is seated on the Isar, 33 m. E. S. E. of Augsburg and 62 S. by W. of Ratisbon. Long. 11. 30. E., lat. 48. 10. N.

Munsingen, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, with a castle, 20 m. W. of Ulm.

Munster, a province of Ireland, 135 m. long and 120 broad; bounded on the N. by Connaught, E. by Leinster, and S. and W. by the Atlantic. It contains the counties of Clare, Tipperary, Waterford, Cork, Limerick, and Kerry. The principal place is Cork.

Munster, a government of the Prussian province of Westphalia. It contains 2,820 sq. m. and is divided into 10 circles or districts—Munster Proper, Tecklenburg, Wahrendorf, Beckum, Ludinghausen, Koesfeld, Recklinghausen, Berken, Ahans, and Steinfurt. The chief rivers are the Ems and Lippe. The country is level, with some agreeable heights, but no mountains; and it has fruitful plains, fine woods, extensive heaths that feed much cattle, and good quarries of stone. This government consists, for the greater part, of the ancient bishopric of its name which on the secularisation of church property, in 1802, was divided between Prussia, the duke of Oldenburg, and several other princes, all of whom became subject to Prussia in 1815.

Munster, the capital of the foregoing government. The cathedral, the library of the chapter, and many antiquities are worthy of notice. In 1535 a tailor, called John of Leyden, king of the anabaptists, made himself master of the city; but it was retaken in 1536 after 14 months' siege, when John and two of his associates were tortured to death with red-hot pincers. The famous treaty, called the treaty of Westphalia, which ended the 30 years' war, was concluded here in 1648. In the war of 1756 this city sustained several sieges and was taken in 1759. In 1806 the French laid the inhabitants under a heavy contribution, and stripped the churches of their plate. Munster is seated on the Aa, 50 m. E. N. E. of Wesel and 52 W. N. W. of Paderborn. Long. 7. 36. E., lat. 51. 58. N.

Murcia, a province of Spain bounded N. by New Castile, E. by Valencia, W. by Andalusia and Granada, and S. by the Mediterranean. It is 90 m. long and 58 broad; and the principal river is the Segura. The soil is dry, and it produces little corn or wine; but oranges, citrons, lemons, olives, almonds, mulberries, rice, pulse, and sugar are plentiful. It has also a great deal of silk. The vale of Murcia is celebrated for the variety and richness of its culture.

Murcia, the capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see. The inhabitants are computed at 60,000. A number of hands are employed in the working of bassweed, and there is also an extensive establishment for twisting silk, and a refinery of salt-petre. There are fine gardens about the city, in which are the best fruits in Spain. It is seated on the Segura, over which is a bridge, 27 m. N. of Cartagena and 212 S. E. of Madrid. Long. 1. 16. W., lat. 37. 53. N.

Murfreesborough, p.t. Rutherford Co. Ten. and formerly the seat of government for the state. 32 m. S. E. Nashville and 160 W. Knoxville. lat. 35. 52. N., long. 86. 35. W. It is situated in a level and fertile country, producing wheat, cotton, and tobacco. Also a p.t. Hertford Co. N. C. on the Meherrin.

Muro, a town of Naples in Basilicata, seated at the foot of the Apennines, 12 m. S. E. of Conza.

Muyden, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, seated on the Zuyder Zee, at the influx of the Vecht, 6 m. E. S. E. of Amsterdam.

Myconi, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 30 m. in circumference. The soil is dry, and the mountains are of great height. Here are plenty of partridges, quails, woodcocks, turtle-doves, rabbits, and wheatears; also excellent grapes and figs. The harbour is open, and deep enough for the largest ships to ride secure from the N. wind. Long. 25. 21. E., lat. 37. 33. N.

Myerstown, p.v. Lebanon Co. Pa., 31 m. E. Harrisburg.

Mysol, one of the Moluccas, of a triangular form, with a bold shore. The villages are built in the water upon posts, and there are forests visited by the birds of paradise, which are caught in great numbers. Long. 130. 0. E., lat. 2. 0. S.

Mysore, an extensive province of Hindoostan, lying between 11. and 15. N. lat., and now surrounded by the British territories of the Madras Presidency, while the existing rajah is also dependent on British protection. The country is in general dry, rugged, mountainous, and barren; but there are several rivers and mountain torrents, which by artificial means serve to water rice-grounds, gardens, &c. In the forests are many elephants, and tigers are common. Oxen, buffaloes, and goats are numerous, and in the N. E. part many sheep are bred; but horses and asses are few. The chief products are rice, cotton, pepper, cocoa, and betel-nut, sugar-cane, butter, and oil. The whole of this country, with some other territories to the N. and E., and the provinces of Coimbatore, Malabar, and Canara, were subdued by Hyder Ali, a Mussulman, who usurped the throne of Mysore in 1759, and made Seringapatam his capital. He was succeeded by Tippoo Sultan, who continued his father's state of warfare. On the termination of a war, in 1792, Tippoo agreed to pay thirty lacks of rupees, and to cede one half of his dominions to the English and their allies, the Mahrattas and the nizam of the Deccan. In 1799, a new war taking place, his capital was taken by the English, on the 4th of May, and himself killed in the assault. A partition of his remaining territories took place, and, on the 30th of June following, Kistna Rajah, then only five years old, was placed by the British on the throne of his forefathers. The dominions of the rajah of Mysore are now divided into three great districts, Patana to the S., Nagara to the N. W., and Chattrakal to the N. E., so called from the three places where the chief offices are situate. The Patana district is by far the largest, and of itself comprises a much greater extent of territory than was ever before subject to the Mysore family.

Mysore, the capital of the foregoing province, was ruined by Tippoo Sultan; but since the English restored the ancient family in 1799, and made it the rajah's seat of government, the town and fortress have been rebuilt, and the population is rapidly increasing. Mysore is 10 m. S. of Seringapatam. Long. 76. 50. E., lat. 12. 15. N.

Mytlene. See Mctelin.

It is divided into 4 parishes and sends one member to parliament alternately with Cromarty. The S. part is mountainous, but towards the N. it is level, and the soil abundantly fertile.

Naksiran, a town of Prussian Armenia, formerly a large city, but ruined by Abbas I., who removed the inhabitants in the interior parts of Persia. Here are now some considerable bazaars, caravenserais, baths, and other public buildings. It is 85 m. S. E. of Erivan and 250 E. of Erzerum. Long. 45. 30. E., lat. 33. 40. N.

Namslau, a town of Prussian Silesia, with a castle. It is situate among morasses on the river Weyda, 20 m. E. S. E. of Breslau.

Namur, a province of the Netherlands, 30 m. long and 20 broad; bounded by the French frontier, and by the Belgic provinces of Hainault, S. Brabant and Liege. It is pretty fertile, and has several forests, marble quarriers, and mines of iron, lead and coal. The rivers Meuse and Sambre divide it into 3 parts, nearly of equal extent. Before the French Revolution of 1789, the greater part of this province belonged to Austria, and the remainder to France. In 1794 the whole was siezed by the French, and constituted for 20 years part of the department of Sambre-et-Meuse. It was finally incorporated with the kingdom of the Netherlands in 1815.

Namur, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see. It has a castle in the middle of the town, on a craggy rock, and several forts. The inhabitants are estimated at 20,000. Firearms, swords, knives, and many other kinds of cutlery, are made here. This city was the scene of a sanguinary conflict between the allies and the French in June 1815, and is noted in history as the scene of many early battles. It is seated between two mountains, at the confluence of the Maese and Sambre, 24 m. W. S. W. of Liege and 32 S. E. of Brussels. Long. 4. 45. E., lat. 50. 29. N.

Nanas, a town of Hungary, 23 m. N. W. Debreezin. Pop. 4,000.

Nanay, a river of Quito, falling into the Amazon.

Nanceville, p.v. Harrison Co. Indiana.

Nancy, a city of France, capital of the department of Meurthe, and a bishop's see. It is divided by a canal into the Old and New Town. The former though irregularly built, is rich and populous, and contains the palace of the ancient dukes of Lorraine; and their tombs are in a rich saloon which adjoins the church of the late Cordeliers. The New Town, whose streets are perfectly straight, was one of the finest in Europe, even before the magnificent works with which Stanislaus I., titular king of Poland, and duke of Lorraine, enriched it. The cathedral is a superb structure, and there are several other elegant churches. It was occupied by the allies in 1814. Nancy is seated in a delightful plain, near the river Meurthe, 30 m. S. of Metz and 230 E. of Paris. Long. 6. 10. E., lat. 48. 42. N.

Nandar, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name in the province of Dowletabad. 132 m. N. N. W. of Hydrabad.

Nandidroog, a strong town of Hindoostan, in Mysore. Since the restoration of the rajah, in 1709, it has been garrisoned by English troops. It is 25 m. N. by E. of Bangalore and 64 E. S. E. of Sera.

Nanfio, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, a little to the E. of Santorin; it is 26 m. in circumference, but has no harbour, nor springs sufficient to water the fields. The inhabitants are all Greeks, and their chief trade is in onions, wax, and honey. The ruins of the temple of Apollo are yet to be seen, and consist chiefly of marble columns. Long. 26. 10. E., lat. 36. 15. N.

Nangasaki, a city of Japan, in the island of Ximo, with a good harbour and the only one in the empire in which foreign ships are permitted to anchor. The inhabitants carry on a great trade with the Chinese and Dutch. Long. 120. 46. E., lat. 32. 32. N.

Nangis, a town of France in the department of Seine-et-Marn, 12 m. W. of Provins.

Nanjewog, p.t. Charles Co. Maryland. 45 m. S. Washington.

Nankang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si, seated on the lake Poyang, 637 m. S. of Pekin. Long. 113. 58. E., lat. 29. 33. N.

Nanking, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiangnan. It is 17 m. in circumference, and about 3 m. distant from the great river Yangtse-Chiang, from which canals are cut, so large that vessels may enter the town. It was formerly the imperial city, whence it is called Nanking, which signifies southern court; but, since the six grand tribunals have been removed to Pekin, it is called Kiangnan in all public acts. The place is greatly fallen from its ancient splendor; for it had a magnificent palace which is quite destroyed, as well as many ancient monuments; and a third part of the city itself is desolate. The streets are narrow, but handsome and well paved, and on each side are shops neatly furnished. The public buildings are mean, except a few temples, the city gates, and a tower of porcelain 200 feet high

The inhabitants were formerly estimated at 2,000, 000, the city being above 30 m. in circumference. The number at present is said to be 1,000,000, without comprehending the garrison of 40,000 men. They have several manufactures in silk and wood. Here the physicians have their principal academy. Nanking is seated on the Siam, 500 m. S. S. E. of Pekin. Long 119. 25. E., lat. 32. 46. N.

Nan-ngan, a city of China of the first rank, in Kiangsi. It stands among plantations of sugarcane, near the source of the Kang-kiang, and the foot of the mountain Me-lin, 200 m. N. E. of Canton. Long. 113. 38. E., lat. 24. 48. N.

Nan-ning, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quang-si, 1,145 m. S. S. W. of Pekin. Long. 107. 45. E., lat. 22. 44. N.

Nansemond, a county of the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 11,784. Suffolk is the capital. Also a river flowing through this county into James River at Hampton Roads.

Nantasket, the Indian name of the peninsula on the S. side of Boston Bay. It contains the town of Hull, and is joined to the mainland by a beach of sand several miles in length. The peninsula has several high hills which command one of the entrances into Boston harbour.

Nantasket Road, the name given to that part of the outer harbour of Boston, between Nantasket and the islands to the N. and N. W. just within the outer light.

Nan-tchang, a city of China, capital of Kiangsi. It has no trade but that of porcelain, which is made in the vicinity of Jaatcheou. The country is so much cultivated that the pastures are barely sufficient for the flocks. It is seated on the Kang-kiang, which flows hence into the lake Poyang, 695 m. S. of Pekin. Long. 115. 30. E., lat. 28. 36. N.

Nantes, a city of France capital of the department of Lower Loire, and a bishop's see, with a university. It was formerly the residence of the dukes of Bretagne, who built a strong castle on the side of the river, which still exists. The cathedral contains the tombs of the ancient dukes; besides which there are a collegiate church and 11 parish churches. The bridges over the Loire, in which are some islands, are almost a league in length. The suburbs exceed the city in extent. A great quantity of salt is made in the territory of Nantes, both at the bay of Bourgneuf and in the salt marshes of Guelande and Croisic. Large vessels can come no higher than Port Laubai, which is 12 m. from Nantes. The inhabitants are computed at nearly 80,000. It was here that Henry IV. promulgated the famous edict in 1598, in favour of the Protestants which was revoked by Louis XIV. in 1685. Nantes is 53 m. S. by E. of Rennes and 217 S. W. of Paris. Long. 1. 33. W., lat. 47. 13. N.

Nanticoke, p.t. Broome Co N. Y. on a creek of the same name falling into the Susquehanna.

Nanticoke, a hundred of Sussex Co. Del. on a river of the same name falling into the Chesapeake.

Nantmill, E. and W., two townships in Chester Co. Pa. 35 m. N. W. Philad.

Nantua, a town of France, department of Ain, with manufactures of gauzes, taffetas, chintzes, &c. situate on a lake of the same name, 18 m. E. of Bourg.

Nantucket, an island of Massachusetts, 20 m. S. of Cape Cod. It is 15 m. long and 7 broad, and contains 29,380 acres. It is a sandy spot with little vegetation, yet affords grass for the pasture of a few cows and sheep, and supports a population of 7,202. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the whale fishery, and their ships penetrate to the most distant seas on the globe. The island constitutes one town and one county. The principal village is on the N. side of the island, and has a tolerable harbour; the houses are of wood. There are many spermaceti works upon the island. The shipping owned here in 1827 amounted to 26,353 tons. S. E. of Nantucket, out of sight of the island are some dangerous shoals.

Nantwich, a town in Cheshire, Eng. The manufacture of salt was formerly considerable, but it is now confined to a single establishment; and the chief trade consists in the manufacture of shoes for the London and Manchester dealers. The principal dairies of Cheshire are about this town, and it has considerable trade in cheese. It is seated on the Weaver, and by the Chester Canal, which here forms a broad basin, 20 m. S. E. of Chester and 164 N. W. of London.

Nan-yang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Ho-nan, seated on a small river, and surrounded by mountains, 160 m. S. of Honan.

Nan-yong, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quantong, seated on the Peikiang, near its source, 170 m. N. N. E. of Canton.

Napaul. See Nepaul.

Naples, or the Two Sicilies, a kingdom comprehending the S. part of Italy, bounded on the N. W. by the Ecclesiastical states, N. E. by the gulf of Venice, and every where else by the Mediterranean. It is 300 m. in length by 100 in breadth, and is divided into 13 provinces: namely, Napolia or Naples, Terra di Lavoro (the ancient Campania Felix), Principato Citra and Ultra, Molise, Basilicata, Calabria Citra and Ultra, Abruzzo Citra and Ultra, Capitanata, Terra di Bari, and Terra d' Otranto; the last three forming the ancient Apulia, now called Puglia, on the E. side of the kingdom.

The climate in general is extremely hot, especially in July, August, and September, and is said to be one of the most inconstant and unfavourable to valetudinarians. In some seasons it rains every day for 6 or 7 weeks together; but the most disagreeable part of the climate is the sirocco, or S. E. wind, which is very common in May, and extremely relaxing. In winter there is seldom any ice or snow, except on the mountains. The country abounds with grain, the finest fruits and vegetables, rice, flax, oil, wine, saffron, and manna; and affords alum, vitrol, sulphur, rock crystal, marble, minerals, and fine wool and silk. Besides the manufactures noticed in the account of the city of Naples, waistcoats, caps, stockings, and gloves are also made of the hair or filaments of a shellfish, which are warmer than those of wool and of a beautiful glossy green. The principal mountains are the Apennines (which traverse this country from N. to S., branching to the two extremities) and the celebrated volcano, Mount Vesuvius. The rivers are numerous, but inconsiderable; the chief are the Garigliano and Volturno. One of the greatest inconveniences to which this kingdom is exposed is earthquakes. The established religion is the Roman Catholic; but Protestants and Jews are allowed to settle here. The inhabitants of this country have at all times borne but an indifferer character among other nations; gluttony is here a predominant vice, while instances of ebriety are comparatively rare. In the female sex, the passion for finery is almost superior to every other; and though chastity is not the characteristic virtue of the country, yet a Neapolitan woman would, for the most part prefer a present to a lover. The breach of the conjugal vow sometimes occasions quarrels and assassinations among people of inferior rank; and in the metropolis, assassinations are often perpetrated from much less cogent motives. That furious jealousy for which the nation was once so remarkable is, however greatly abated. See Italy and Sicily.

Naples, a large and rich trading city of Italy, one of the finest in the world, capital of the above kingdom, with a university. It is situated at the bottom of a bay, and is built in the form of a vast amphitheatre, sloping from the hills to the sea. Although the style of architecture is inferior to what prevails at Rome, and it cannot vie with that city in the number of palaces or in the magnificence of the public buildings, yet the private houses in general are better built, and the streets are broader and better paved. No street in Rome equals in beauty the Strada di Toledo at Naples; nor can any of them be compared with the beautiful streets which lie open to the bay, where the excessive heat of the sun is often tempered with the sea breezes and gales wafting the perfumes of the Campagna Felice. The houses in general are 5 or 6 stories high, and flat at the top, on which are placed numbers of flower vases, or fruit trees in boxes of earth, producing a very gay and agreeable effect. On the mountain St. Elmo, in a most pleasant situation, is a convent of Carthusians, on which much expense has been lavished to render the building, the apartments, and the gardens, equal to the situation. Naples is admirably situated for commerce, and has all the necessaries and luxuries of life in great profusion. The chief articles manufactured here are silk stockings, soap, snuff-boxes of tortoise-shell or of the lava of Mount Vesuvius, tables, and ornamental furniture of marble. They are thought to embroider here better than in France; and their macaroni is preferred to that of any part of Italy. They excel also in liquors and confections; particularly in one kind of confection, called diaboloni, of a very hot and stimulating nature, and which is sold at a very high price.

The number of inhabitants is computed at 350,000, which is very probable; for, though Naples is not one-third of the size of London, yet many of the streets here are more crowded than the Strand, and a great proportion of the poorest sort are obliged to spend the night in them, as well as the day, for want of habitations. There is not a city in the world, perhaps, with the same number of inhabitants, in which so few contribute to the wealth of the community, by useful and productive labour; the number of priests, monks, fiddlers, lawyers, nobility, footmen, and lazzaroni or vagabonds, is immense: the last alone have been computed at above 30,000, but their number has since been somewhat diminished. The nobility are excessively fond of splendour and show, as appears by the brilliancy of their equipages, the number of their attendants, the richness of their dress, and the grandeur of their titles. The king, it is said counts 100 persons with the title of prince and still a greater number with that of duke, among his subjects. Six or seven of these have estates of from £10,000 to £13,000 a-year, and a considerable number have possessions to about half that amount; while the annual revenue of many is not above £1,000 or £2000. The inferior nobility are much poorer, many counts and marquises not having above £300 or £400 a-year, of a paternal estate, many still less, and not a few enjoying the title without any estate whatever. Although the churches and convents of Naples are not to be compared with those of Rome in point of architecture, they surpass them in rich jewels, and in the quantity of silver and golden crucifixes, vessels, and other ornaments. The cathedral is a grand Gothic edifice; and, of all the palaces, that of the king is not only the most magnificent, but in the best style of architecture. The harbour, which is spacious is protected by a mole. The bay of Naples is one of the finest in the world, being almost of a circular figure, about 30 m. in diameter, shut out from the Mediterranean by the island of Capri, and three parts of it sheltered by a circuit of woods and mountains. Naples was taken by the French in January, 1799, but retaken by the British fleet under lord Nelson, in the June following. In 1806 it was again taken possession of by the French under Massena, soon after which Joseph Bonaparte was here crowned king of Naples; but on his removal to Spain, in 1808, the crown was conferred on Murat. In May, 1815, Naples was surrendered to a British squadron, and in the following month king Ferdinand was restored. In 1803 the city suffered much damage by an earthquake. It is 110 m. S. E. of Rome, 104 N. E. of Palermo, and 300 S. by E. of Venice. Long. 14. 20. E., lat. 14. 55. N.

Napoli de Romania, a sea-port of the Morea, and an archbishop's see, seated on a peninsula, at the head of a bay, of the same name. It has a large harbour, with a narrow entrance, defended by a citadel. This town was taken by the Turks in 1715, and remained under the government of the Porte till the recent dismemberment of Greece. It is 20 m. S. W. of Corinth. Long. 22. 44. E., lat. 37. 44. N.

Napoli di Malvasia, a sea-port of the Morea, on the island of Malvasia. It has a fine harbour defended by a good citadel; and a long wooden bridge, which joins it to the mainland. It gives name to that excellent wine called Mahmsey; and was the ancient Epidaurus, famed for the temple of Æsculapius. It is seated on a rock, at the entrance of the bay of Napoli de Romania, 38 m. S. E. of Misitra. Long. 22. 53. E., lat. 36. 53. N.

Nara, a town of Japan, in the island of Niphon, with a magnificent castle, 25 m. N. W. of Meaco.

Narainganje, a town of Bengal, in the district of Dacca, with manufactures of muslin, and a trade in grain, salt, tobacco, &c. It is seated on the Luckia. Long. 90. 35. E., lat. 23. 36. N.

Narasinghapura, a town of Hindoestan, in Mysore, with two considerable temples. It is well built, and stands in a fertile country, on the Caverry, immediately below the influx of Kapina, 30 m. E. S. E. of Mysore.

Narbeth, a town of Wales, in Pembrokeshire, seated on a hill, 12 m. N. E. of Pembroke and 242 W. by N. of London.

Narbonne, a city of France, in the department of Aude. In the time of the Romans it was the capital of that part of Gaul called Gallia Narbonensis; and here the emperor Marcus Aurelius was born. Some Roman inscriptions, in different parts of the city are still visible; and the canal from the river Aude, through the city to the Mediterranean, was cut by the Romans. Narbonne is famous for its honey, and the cathedral is remarkable for its noble choir. It is 5 m. from the Mediterranean and 80 E. S. E. of Toulouse. Long. 3. 0. E., lat. 43. 11. N.

Narborough, an uninhabited island in the S. Pacific, on the coast of Chile, where Sir John Narborough refreshed his men when sent to the South Sea, in the reign of Charles II. Long. 74. 35. W., lat. 45. 0. N.

Nardo, a town of Naples, in Terra d' Otranto, 22 m. W. by N. of Otranto.

Naruzza, a town of Dalmatia, and a bishop's see; seated on a river of the same name, 42 m. N. N. W. of Ragusa.

Narim, a town of Siberia, in the government of Tobolsk, surrounded by pallisades and wooden towers. The environs abound with foxes, ermines, and sables. It is seated at the conflux of the Ket with the Oby, 400 m. E. by N. of Tobolsk. Long. 81. 15. E., lat. 59. 10. N.

Narnalla, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, province of Berar, 33 m. W. N. W. of Ellichpour.

Narni, a town of Italy, in the states of the church. Here are the ruins of a marble bridge, built by Augustus; and also of an aqueduct that brought water from a spring at the distance of 15 m. It is seated on the Nera, 20 m. S. S. W. of Spoleto, and 40 N. of Rome.

Naro, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, on a river of the same name, 11 m. E. of Girgenti.

Narova, a river of Russia, which issues from the lake Peipus, flows to Narva, and enters the gulf of Finland 8 m. below that town. It has two cataracts, pompously described by travellers; but they are far inferior to that of the Rhine at Lauffen.

Narraganset Bay, in Rhode Island State, extends from N. to S. dividing the state into two parts. It is separated into several distinct channels by the islands which it embosoms. The largest are Conanicut and Rhode Island. The length of the bay is about 30 m. and its breadth 15. It affords many excellent harbours and is accessible at all seasons of the year. It receives many rivers, and the cities of Providence and Newport with other small towns lie upon its waters.

Narraguagus, p.v. Washington Co. Me. 37 m. W. Machias, on a river of the same name.

Narsingapatam, a town of Hindoostan, in the territory of Cattack, near the coast of the bay of Bengal, 44 m. S. of Cattack.

Narva, a strong town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg. The houses are built of brick and stuccoed white; and it has more the appearance of a German than of a Russian town. In the suburb called Ivangorod are the stupendous remains of an ancient fortress, built by Ivan Basilowitz the Great, which impend over the steep banks of the Narova. In 1700 Charles XII. of Sweden obtained a victory here over Peter the Great. Five years after, the czar took the town by assault; and, by his own personal exertions, saved it from pillage and massacre. The principal exports are hemp, flax, timber, and corn. It is situate on the Narova, 8 m. from its mouth and 85 W. S. W. of Petersburg. Long. 27. 52. E., lat. 59. 18. N.

Narwar, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a fertile district of the same name, in the province of Agra; seated near the Sinde, 115 m. S. of Agra. Long. 78. 17. E., lat. 25. 40. N.

Nasca, a sea-port of Peru, in the audience of Lima. It has a good harbour, and stands in a territory fertile in wine and sugar, 220 m. S. S. E. of Lima. Long. 75. 10. W., lat. 14. 45. S.

Naseby, a village in Northamptonshire, Eng. famous for the decisive victory gained by the army of the parliament over that of Charles I. in 1645. 12 m. N. N. W. of Northampton.

Nash, a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 8,492. Nashville is the capital.

Nashua, a branch of the Merrimack, rising in Worcester County Mass. and falling into the Merrimack at Dunstable, N. H. It is 40 m. long.

Nashuan, one of the Elizabeth Islands, on the S. side of Buzzard's Bay, in Dukes Co. Mas.

Nashville, p.t. Davidson Co. Tennessee, and the seat of government for the state. It is seated on the S. branch of Cumberland river near some high bluffs. The site is pleasant and healthy and the town is much visited during the hot season by people from the lower country. Here is a branch of the United States Bank. The Cumberland is navigable to this place by steam-boats. The University of Nashville was founded in 1806. It has 4 instructors and 95 students, the libraries have 3,250 vols. It has two vacations of 11 weeks. Pop. 5,566.

Nashville, p.v. Nash Co. N. C. 50 m. N. E. Raleigh.

Nashov, a town of Denmark, in the island of Laaland, with a convenient harbour, seated on a bay of the same name, 15 m. W. by N. of Marieboe.

Nassau, an independent duchy of Germany, formed of the several principalities which formerly bore this name. It is bounded by the Prussian territory on the Lower Rhine and the states of the princes of Hesse. It contains mines of iron, copper, and lead, and the soil is fertile in some places, but the surface is for the most part woody and mountainous. The rearing of cattle and the culture of the vine are the principal occupations of the inhabitants. The duke of Nassau holds the 13th place at the smaller assembly of the German diet and has two votes in the full assembly.

Nassau, a town of Germany, in the above duchy, the only place belonging in common to the duke of Nassau and the king of the Netherlands. Opposite the town, on the other side of the river, and on a high mountain, formerly stood Nassauberg, a place of great antiquity, and the original seat of the Nassau family. Nassau is 32 m. W. N. W. of Frankfort. Long. 7. 52. E., lat. 50. 16. N.

Nassau, p.t. Rensselaer Co. N. Y. 15 m. S. E. Albany. Pop. 3,254.

Nassau, an island in the Indian Ocean, on the W. side of the island of Sumatra, about 120 m. in circumference. It abounds with forests, and presents an enchanting verdure. The inhabitants are dissimilar from their neighbours; for they approach the simplicity of manners and personal appearance of the Otahaitians, while their color is like that of the Malays. Long. 99. 40. E., lat. 2. 50. S.

Nassuck, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Guzerat, 95 m. S. S. W. of Surat. Long. 73. 49. E., lat. 19. 50. N.

Nata, a sea-port of Terra Firma, in the province of Panama, seated in a fertile country, on the bay of Panama, 68 m. S. W. of Panama. Long. 81. 5 W., lat. 8. 36. N.

Natal, a country on the S. E. coast of Africa, lying N. E. of the Cape of Good Hope, inhabited by a tribe of Caffres. It is about 500 m. in length, and near the middle is a river and also a bay of the same name. Long. 31. 30. E., lat. 29. 0. S.

Natchez, p.t. Adams Co. Mississippi, on the eastern branch of the river Mississippi, 156 m. above New Orleans by land, and 322 by the river. It is the only large town in the state, and has a great trade in cotton. Steam-boats and river shipping frequent this place in great numbers, and make it one of the busiest towns upon the river. It is situated upon a bluff 300 feet above the river and is surrounded by a level country. It is often visited by the yellow fever. A branch of the United States Bank is established here. Pop. 2,790.

Natchitoches, a parish of Louisiana. Pop. 7,926. The capital is the following.

Natchitoches, p.t. on Red River, Lou. 35 6 m. N. W. New Orleans. It is the frontier town of the United States toward Mexico, and the centre of communication for the land trade with that country. It was settled above a century ago, and its inhabitants are composed of French, Spanish and Indian descendants intermingled with native and emigrant Americans. Its trade with Mexico consists in the exportation of manufactured goods, spirits and tobacco, for which it receives in return, silver bullion, horses and mules. This town is the resort of many fugitives and desperate characters from the United States, but the stationary population is respectable.

Natick, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 18 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 890.

Natalia, a country formerly called Asia Minor. It is the most western part of the great continent of Asia, bounded N. by the Black Sea, E. by the Euphrates, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by the Archipelago and the Sea of Marmora. It is crossed by a chain of mountains, formerly called Taurus, from W. to E., and watered by a great number of rivers. The soil is generally fertile, producing fruits of various kinds, corn, tobacco, cotton, and silk. The whole country has suffered severely from Turkish oppression.

Nattam, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the district of Dindigal, 45 m. S. S. W. of Trichinopoly.

Nattore, a town of Bengal, seated on the river Attri, 47 m. E. N. E. of Moorsheadabad.

Natural Bridge, p.v. Rockbridge Co. Va. 176 m. W. Richmond. See Rockbridge.

Nauen, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, 18 m. W. N. W. of Berlin.

Naumberg, a town of Germany, in Hesse Cassel, situate on the Eider, 16 m. W. S. W. of Cassel.

Naumburg, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseburg, formerly capital of a duchy of the same name. It has a small citadel, and its cathedral is remarkable for its fine altars, paintings, and subterranean chapels. The chief manufactures are leather, soap, starch, gunpowder, turnery wares, &c.; and its town carries on a brisk trade. It is seated on the Saale, 18 m. W. S. W. of Merseburg. Long. 12. 0. E., lat. 51. 11. N.

Naumburg, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Leignitz, on the river Queis, 11 m. N. W. of Lowenburg.

Nawan, a town of Ireland, in the county of Meath, seated at the conflux of the Blackwater with the Boyne, 7 m. N. E. of Trim and 25 N. W. of Dublin.

Navarino, a sea-port on the W. coast of the Morea, with a large harbour defended by two forts. It is memorable for the destruction of the Turkish and Egyptian fleet, by the English, French, and Russians, in 1827. It is seated on a hill, 10 m. N. by E. of Modon and 88 S. W. of Corinth. Long. 21. 25. E., lat. 37. 5. N.

Navarre, a province of Spain, containing the greater part of the ancient kingdom of Navarre. It is 75 m. long and 60 broad. Though a mountainous country, abounding in game and iron mines, some valleys produce good corn and excellent wine. Pampeluna is the capital.

Navarre, New, a former province of Mexico, now divided into various modern intendancies.

Navarreins, a town of France, department of Lower Pveenes, on the Gave d' Oleron, 26 m. S. E. of Bayonne.

Navigator's Islands, a cluster of ten islands in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Bougainville, and explored by Perouse in 1787. They are called by the natives Opoun, Leone, Fanfoue, Maouna, Oyalava, Calinasse, Pola, Shika, Ossamo, and Ouero. Opoun, the most southerly and easterly of these islands, lies in long. 169. 7. W., lat. 14. 7. S. Maouna, Oyalava, and Pola, may be numbered among the largest and most beautiful islands of the S. Pacific. They combine the advantages of a soil fertile without culture and a climate that renders clothing unnecessary. The inhabitants are a strong and lusty race; scarcely a man is to be seen among them less than six feet high, and the women are in proportion. In disposition they are thievish, treacherous, and ferocious. Their villages are situate on creeks, by the seaside, and have no paths between them; so that they pass from one to another in their canoes, and thus are almost constantly on the water. Their canoes, houses, &c., are well constructed; and they are much more advanced in internal policy than any of the islands in this ocean. See Maouna.

Naxia, or Naros, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, 15 m. in length and 50 in circumference. It is fertile in grain, wine, oil, cotton, and silk; and its plains abound with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, fig, and mulberry trees. It has a great many villages; but the population of the whole island does not exceed 10,000. The highest mountain is Zla, which signifies the mountain of Jupiter: but there are no antiquities, except some small remains of a temple of Bacchus.

Naxia, the capital of the above island, and one of the most beautiful places in the Archipelago. It has two archiepiscopal sees, the one Greek and the other Latin. Here is no harbour, but the trade is considerable in barley, wine, oil, figs, cotton, silk, flax, cheese, salt, oxen, sheep, and mules. It stands on the S. side of the island, and is defended by a castle. Long. 25. 32. E., lat. 37. 8. N.

Nayakanahully, a large square town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a citadel in the centre, both strongly fortified with mud walls. In the town a wide street extends all round, and has short lanes on each side. It has a manufacture of coarse cotton cloth, and in the vicinity are many palm gardens. It is 34 m. S. W. of Sera.

Nazareth, a town of Palestine, celebrated as the residence of Christ, in the early part of his life. It is now a small place, where the monks of St. Francis have a convent. 50 m. N. N. E. of Jerusalem.

Nazareth, Upper and Lower, two townships in Northampton Co. Pa. 7 m. N. W. Easton. The inhabitants are Moravians, and here was their first settlement in the country.

Naze, or Lindeness, the most southern promontory of Norway. Long. 7. 20. E., lat. 57. 30. N.

Neagh, Lough, a lake of Ireland, 20 m. long and 15 broad, lying in the counties of Armagh, Down, Antrim, Londonderry, and Tyrone. The river Bann flows through it.

Neath, a corporate town of Wales, in Glamorganshire. In the neighbourhood are iron forges, smelting works for copper, and coal mines; and on the other side of the river are the extensive remains of an abbey. A great quantity of coal is exported hence in small vessels. It is situate on the river Neath, near the Bristol Channel, 27 m. S. W. of Brecknock and 193 W. of London.

Neath, a river of Wales, which rises in Brecknockshire, and runs through Glamorganshire, by the town of Neath, into the Bristol Channel.

Neb, a river in the Isle of Man, which runs into the Irish Sea at Peel Castle.

Nebio, or Nebbio, a ruined city on the N. side of the island of Corsica, 1 mile from St. Fiorenzo.

Nebra, a town of Prussian Saxony, in Thuringia, on the Unstrut, 12 m. N. N. W. of Naumburg.

Neckar, a river of Germany, which rises in Wurtemberg, flows by Rothwiel, Tubingen, Esslingen, Heilbron, and Heidelberg, and enters the Rhine at Mannheim. This river gives name to three departments of Wurtemberg, Upper, Lower, and Middle, and also to the two following circles.

Neckar, a circle of the grand duchy of Baden, comprehending that part of the Lower Palatinate lying to the E. of the Rhine. Mannheim is the capital.

Neckar, one of the four circles of Wurtemberg, comprehending the W. part of the kingdom, according to the division made in 1818.

Neckargemund, a town of Baden, on the Neckar, 5 m. E. of Heidelberg.

Neckarsulm, a town of Wurtemberg, seated at the conflux of the Neckar and Sulm, 5 m. N. of Heilbron.

Nedroma, a town of Algiers, in the province of Mascara, surrounded with magnificent ruins. It is 50 m. W. S. W. of Oran. Long. 0. 33. W., lat. 35. 40. N.

Nedsjed, an extensive province of Arabia, bounded N. by the desert of Syria, E. by Lachsa, S. by Hadramaut and Yemen, and W. by Hedsjaz. The soil is various, and in many parts very fertile. The Bedouins inhabit a great part of this province; and the remainder is mountainous, and contains a great number of towns, almost every one of which has its own chief.

Needham, a town in Suffolk, Eng. seated on the Orwell, 9 m. N. W. of Ipswich and 74 N. E. of London.

Needham, p.t. Norfolk Co. Mass. 12 m. S.W. Boston. Pop. 1,420. It is seated on the river Charles, and has manufactures of paper.

Needles, a cluster of rocks in the English Channel, at the W. end of the Isle of Wight, so called from their height and sharp extremities. Here is a light-house. Long. 1. 33. W., lat. 50. 44. N.

Necheehow, one of the Sandwich Islands, in the N. Pacific, five leagues W. of Atooi. The E. coast is high, and rises abruptly from the sea; the rest of it consists of low ground, except a round bluff head on the S. E. point. Long. 160. 15. W., lat. 21. 50. N.

Neerwinden, a village of the Netherlands, in N. Brabant, a little N. by W. of Landen. Hence the two celebrated battles of Landen are sometimes called by the name of Neerwinden. See Landen.

Nefta, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, 250 m. S. by W. of Tunis. Long. 9. 25. E., lat. 30. N.

Negapatam, a city of Hindoostan in the district of Tanjore, on the coast of Coromandel. It was first a colony of the Portuguese, but was taken by the Dutch; and the latter were dispossessed of it by the English in 1782. The port is not extraordinary; but most of the different nations in India are here settled, and trade under the protection of the fort. The Wesleyan Methodists have two missionaries here. It is 50 m. E. of Tanjore and 166 S. by W. of Madras. Long. 79. 56. E., lat. 10. 46. N.

Negara, a town of the isle of Borneo, capital of the kingdom of Banjermassing; situate on the E. side of the river Banjer, 60 m. N. of the town of Banjermassing. Long. 114. 0. E., lat. 1. 40. S.

Negombo, a sea-port on the W. coast of the isle of Ceylon, with a fort built by the Portuguese. It was taken in 1640 by the Dutch, who evacuated it to the English in 1796. It is 16 m. N. of Colombo. Long. 79. 55. E., lat. 7. 20. N.

Negrals, an island on the E. side of the bay of Bengal, at the mouth of Basien River, the most western branch of the Irawaddy, with an excellent harbour. Long. 94. 30. E., lat. 16. 0. N.

Negril Point, the most westerly promontory of the island of Jamaica. Long. 75. 23. W., lat. 18. 17. N.

Negro Cape, a promontory of Africa, on the coast of Benguela, being the most southerly country to which the Europeans usually resort to purchase slaves. Long. 11. 40. E., lat. 16. 15. N.

Negroland, or Nigritia, a large country in the interior of Africa, through which the river Niger flows from W. to E. It is called by the Arabs Soudan, a word of similar import to the European appellation, signifying the Land of the Blacks. It extends from long. 10. W. to 27. E., and from lat. 10. to 25. N.; being bounded on the N. by the Zahara and the mountains which separate it from the states of Barbary, on the E. by Nubia and Abyssinia, on the S. by countries unknown and Guinea, and W. by Guinea, Fouli, and Zahara. Of this vast country little is known more than the names of some of the towns and great kingdoms of which it is composed. Some parts, particularly on the river Niger are said to be exceedingly fertile; other parts are represented as sandy and desert. Among the animals of the territory may be noticed the Panther, a fierce insidious and cruel animal who attacks not only beasts, but man, taking the precaution always to approach him from behind. Major Denham saw one killed in this country, above 8 feet in length. The principal territory known is Bornou. The general character of the negroes, who are the inhabitants of this region, is that of levity. They do not appear to want the feelings of humanity, nor are they more destitute of sagacity than other people of an equal degree of education; but as their country supplies them with food by a very slight degree of industry, and there is little occasion for clothing amid the heat of their climate, they have a general habit of seeking present pleasure, and no care for the future. The only necessary of life that appears to be deficient is salt, which is the more wanted among them in consequence of their subsisting chiefly on vegetable food; and it is a proverbial expression of a man's riches to say that he eats salt with his food. This important article they receive from Zahara by caravans of trading Arabs. They also receive arms, hardware, glasses, and trinkets, from the W., by the Europeans, and in the interior, by the caravans of Cairo, Fezzan, and Morocco. For these they give in return gold dust, ivory, and elephants' teeth. The kind of government that exists among the negro nations is by no means uniform. Many districts are governed by a number of independent petty chiefs, who are engaged in frequent wars with each other. In other places, the talents of individual chieftains have been able to reduce considerable tracts of territory under their dominion; and hence some flourishing towns have sprung up. Many of the towns are fortified with ditches and high walls. Domestic slavery prevails in a very great degree among all the negro states. When the tropical rains fall, or are so deficient that the sun burns up the face of the country, it is not uncommon for parents to sell their children, and even themselves, for bread. A free man may also lose his liberty by being taken prisoner in war, or on account of the crimes of murder and sorcery; and also in consequence of insolvency. The knowledge of the negroes, with regard to religion and all speculative subjects, is extremely limited; but they have much superstition, and are implicit believers in witchcraft and magic.

Negropont, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, 100 m. in length and 18 in breadth, anciently called Eubœa. It is near the N. coast of Livadia, and separated from it by the strait of Euripus over which is a bridge. It abounds in corn, wine, oil, and fruits. It forms a part of Independent Greece.

Negropont, a strong city, capital of the above island, and an archbishop's see, with a good harbour. The walls of the city are 2 m. and a half in circumference, but the suburbs are much larger. It is seated on a strait of the same name, 30 m. N. E. of Athens and 260 S. W. of Constantinople. Long. 24. S. E., lat. 38. 30. N.

Nehavend, a town of Irak, in Persia, famous for a battle fought near it between the caliph Omar and Yex Degerd, king of Persia, in 638, when the latter lost his life and kingdom. It is 200 m. N. W. of Ispahan. Long. 48. 10. E., lat. 34. 20. N.

Neidenberg, a town of Prussia, in the government of Königsberg, with a castle on a mountain, 75 m. E. of Culm. Long. 20. 20. E., lat. 53. 22. S.

Neidenstein, a town of Germany, in Hesse Cassel, 9 m. S. S. W. of Cassel.

Neira, one of the Banda Islands, and the seat of their government. It has a spacious harbour, but difficult to be entered; and ships anchor under the cannon of two forts. Long. 129. 30. E., lat. 4. 50. S.

Neisse, a city of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Oppeln. It is a place of great strength, and one of the finest towns in Silesia. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in linens and wine. This place was taken in 1741 by the Prussians, who after the peace, in 1742, built a citadel, to which they gave the name of Prussia. In 1758 it was besieged by the Austrians, but ineffectually; in 1807 it surrendered to the French; and was finally ceded to Prussia in 1814. It is seated on a river of the same name, 48 m. S. by E. of Breslau. Long. 17. 20. E., lat. 50. 24. N.

Neitra, a town of Hungary, and a bishop's see with a castle and a college. It is situated on a river of the same name, 34 m. N. of Gran.

Nelisuram, a town of Hindoostan, on the W. coast, 33 m. N. E. of Mangalore and 40 N. W. of Tellicherry.

Nellenburg, a former landgraviate of Suabia, now belonging to Baden.

Nellenburg, a town of Wurtemberg, formerly the capital of a landgraviate of Suabia, with a citadel on a mountain, 22 m. N. of Constance. Long. 9. 5. E., lat. 47. 57. N.

Nellora, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, near the Pennar, 85 m. N. by W. of Madras. Long. 79. 57. E., lat. 14. 26. N.

Nelson, a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 11,251. Livingston is the capital. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 14,916. Bardstown is the capital.

Nelson, p.t. Cheshire Co. N. H. 33 m. S. W. Concord. Pop. 875; p.t. Madison Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,445; p.v. Portage Co. Ohio. Also townships in Buckingham Co. L. C. and York Co. U. C.

Nelson's River, in North America, forms the outlet of Lake Winnipeg, and flows into Hudson's Bay in lat. 57. 2. N. Taken in connexion with the Saskatchewan, its most distant head stream, its extreme length is 1,500 m.

Nelsonville, p.v. Athens Co. Ohio. 54 m. S. E. Columbus.

Nelson's fort, a British factory at the mouth of Nelson's River.

Nemaa, a village of Greece, in the Morea, 20 m. S. W. of Corinth, anciently celebrated for its games.

Nemours, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne, with an old castle; seated on the Loing, between two hills, 45 m. S. S. E. of Paris.

Nenagh, a town of Ireland, in the county of Tipperary, with a castle, seated on a branch of the Shannon, 19 m. N. E. of Limerick and 23 N. of Cashel.

Neocastro, a town and fort of Romania, on the strait of Constantinople, 12 m. N. of Constantinople.

Neot's, St., a town in Huntingdonshire, Eng and a considerable trade in coal; seated on the Ouse, over which is a strong bridge, 56 m. N. N. W. of London.

Neoundah, a town of Birmah, with manufactures of japanned ware, seated on the Irrawaddy, 4 m. N. N. E. of Paghnam.

Nepaul, a kingdom of Northern Hindoostan, bounded N. by the Himmaleh Mountains, S. by the provinces of Bahar, Cude, and Dehli, E. by Bootan, and the territory of the rajah of Si Kim. The soil is productive and in some places yields two crops in the year. The mountains of Nepaul contain mines of copper and iron; and, although commerce is not encouraged, it sends to Bengal ivory, wax, honey, resin, timber, bastard cinnamon, cardamoms, walnuts, &c.; and takes, in return, muslins and silks of Bengal, carpets, spices, tobacco, and European goods. In 1814, in consequence of the repeated encroachments of the Nepaules, the British invaded their territories, and dictated to them a treaty of peace in 1816. By this treaty Nepaul is limited on the W to the river Gogra; the British have gained possession of the province of Kemaon, and a British envoy constantly resides at Cattamandoo, the capital of Nepal.

Nepean Island, a small island in the S. Pacific, opposite Port Hunter, on the S. coast of Norfolk Island.

Nepi, a town of Italy, in the papal states, remarkable for some Roman ruins, and a fine modern aqueduct; seated on the Triglia, 20 m. N. of Rome.

Neponset, a river of Massachusetts flowing into Boston Bay. It is navigable for vessels of 150 tons to Milton, 4 miles.

Neponset, a village in Norfolk Co. Mass. on the above river, 6 m. S. Boston. It lies within the limits of Dorchester and Milton, and has some manufactures.

Nescopeck, p.t. Luzerne Co. Pa.

Neshamock; a town of Mercer Co. Pa.

Nerac, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, divided by the river Baise into Great and Little Nerac. In the feudal times this was the residence of the lords of Albert, whose stupendous castle is now in ruins. 16 m. W. S. W. of Agen and 67 S. E. of Bordeaux.

Nerbudda, a river of Hindoostan, which issues from a lake on the S. confines of the province of Allahabad, flows W. for 700 m. and enters the gulf of Cambay below Baroach.

Nereheim, a town of Wurtemberg, with a late Benedictine abbey on a mountain, whose abbot was a prelate of the empire. It is 15 m. W. N. W. of Donawert.

Nericia, a province of Sweden bounded by S. bormania, Westmania, Wermland, and W. and E. of Gothland. It is now included in the government of Orebro.

Neronde, a town of France, department of Loire. 24 m. W. of Lyons.

Nerondes, a town in the department of Cher, 19 m. E. S. E. of Bourges.

Nersinsk, a town of Siberia, capital of a province of the same name, in the government of Irkutsk, with a fort. The adjacent country is mountainous, but yields excellent pasture for cattle; and there are some considerable lead and silver mines. It is seated at the confluence of the Nercha with the Shilka, 440 m. E. of Irkutsk.

Nesle, a town of France, department of Somme, on the Lingon, 25 m. E. S. E. of Amiens and 66 N. by E. of Paris.

Ness, Loch, a lake of Scotland, in Invernessshire, 22 m. long and from 1 to 2 broad. The depth is very considerable; and the high hills on each side present a delightful view of wood, pasture, cultivated lands and rugged precipices. It was agitated in an extraordinary manner during the great earthquake at Lisbon in 1755. Its outlet, at the N. extremity, is the river Ness, which runs into Murray Frith, below Inverness.

Nestred, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, 38 m. S. W. of Copenhagen.

Netherlands, or Low Countries, a kingdom of Europe, established in 1814, bounded on the W. and N. by the German Ocean, E. by Hanover and the Prussian territories of the Lower Rhine, and S. by France. It was composed of the former republic of Holland, the 10 provinces constituting the Austrian Netherlands, the grand duchy of Luxemburg, and the former principality or bishopric of Liege; it was divided into the provinces of Holland, E. Flanders, W. Flanders, Hainault, S. Brabant, Liege, Limburg, N. Brabant, Antwerp, Guelderland, Friesland, Namur, Overyssel, Groningen, Zealand, Utrecht, Drenthe, and Luxemburg. The surface of the country, especially the northern provinces, is uncommonly level, and is covered with woods, corn fields, and vast meadows of the freshest verdure. The maritime provinces have undergone great physical revolutions, especially from the retreat and encroachments of the sea, along with the changes in the course of the Rhine. So lately as the 15th century, a great salt-water lake was suddenly formed to the S. E. of Dort, which overwhelmed 72 villages, and 100,000 inhabitants are supposed to have perished. To prevent the recurrence of such dreadful calamities, the Dutch began to secure their coasts, as also the banks of the great rivers, by dikes, or mounds of earth, the erection of which has been justly considered one of the greatest efforts of human industry. The climate in the maritime provinces is humid and variable; in the interior it is more constant. The summers are warmer, and the winters colder than in England. The soil is in general fertile, and agriculture has been long prosecuted with care and success. The principal productions are corn, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, madder, fruit, and a little wine in the S. Cattle are reared in great numbers, and vast quantities of excellent butter and cheese are made for exportation. There are no minerals in the northern provinces. In the S. there are some valuable strata of coal, mines of iron, copper, lead, calamine, and zinc. The principal rivers are the Rhine, with its different branches, the Maese, and the Scheldt. These rivers, and the multitude of canals with which the country is intersected, afford an easy and safe navigation, not only to all parts of the kingdom, but to the W. of Germany, the N. of France, and even to Switzerland. The lakes are comparatively inconsiderable; the principal is that of Haarlem.

During several centuries the Netherlands took the lead of all the neighbouring states, both in trade and manufactures, the linen of Holland, the lace of Brussels, the leather of Liege, the woolens of Leyden and Utrecht, and the silks of Amsterdam and Antwerp, being known several centuries ago throughout Europe. From their situation, at the mouth of so many large rivers, both the Dutch and Flemish had an early and extensive trade. The number of vessels employed by the Dutch in the fisheries, particularly the herring fishery, is said to have exceeded that of all the rest of Europe. At a later date came their acquisitions in the E. and W. Indies, while they also carried on extensive transactions with America and the coast of Guinea. The commerce of this country, however, experienced a great decline after its connexion with France, and though considerably revived since the expulsion of the French in 1814, yet owing to overstrained taxation and the rivalry of England, it will be a long time before the country can recover its former prosperity. The constitution resembled in many respects that of Great Britain; though it also approximates to the federal government of the United States of America, in consequence of the long existence of provincial customs, particularly among the Dutch. The royal power was vested in the family of Nassau-Orange, with the title of king of the Netherlands, prince of Orange, and grand duke of Luxemburg. The parliament was divided into two houses.

The character of the inhabitants in the northern and southern provinces differs considerably. The Dutch have been long distinguished as a labor ous and persevering people, not devoid of enterprise, but led much more rarely than the English and Americans into adventurous speculations of doubtful success. The Belgians have less uniformity in their habits and disposition; on the borders of Holland they are hardly to be distinguished from the Dutch, while in the provinces to the S. the dress and habits of the French are prevalent. Calvinism is the established religion of the northern provinces, the Roman Catholic that of the southern; but there are no political disqualifications on account of religious tenets.

The earliest accounts we have of the history of this country, are from the Romans, by whom all the southern and central part was conquered, and called by them Belgium. After several political changes, the country came into the possession of the house of Burgundy, and by marriage, passed to Maximilian of Austria, father of Charles V. The latter united the 17 provinces into one state: but the bigotry and tyranny of his son Philip II. produced the separation of the 7 United Provinces. The other 10 however, continued under the Spanish crown till 1702, when Louis XIV. obtained possession; but after the battle of Ramillies, in 1706, the Netherlands were brought under the power of the allies, and assigned to the Austrians by the peace of Utrecht. In 1741 the French under marshal Saxe recovered what the preceding generation had lost; but at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle the country was again restored to Austria. In 1792 the French overran the Austrian Netherlands: they were driven out of the country in 1793; but returned in 1794, and subdued every part of it; and in 1795 decreed it, with the territories of Liege and Upper Guelderland, an integral part of the French republic. To this country they gave the name of Belgium, and divided it into 9 departments; but in 1814, agreeably to the treaty of Paris, they evacuated all that part which formerly belonged to Austria and Holland: and the 17 provinces were united and formed into an independent state.

The above comprises the description and history of the kingdom of the Netherlands as organized in 1815 and as it remained for 15 years afterwards. This kingdom no longer exists. The people of Belgium, or the southern part of the kingdom never became cordially reconciled to their union with Holland, and various minor causes of discontent served to augment their dislike to the government. The revolution of the three days at Paris set them the example of resistance. On the 26th of August 1830 the populace of Brussels rose in insurrection and hoisted the ancient flag of Brabant. Conflicts with the Dutch troops attended with terrible carnage followed, and ended with the formal separation of Belgium from Holland. The crown of Belgium has been successively offered to the Duke of Nemours, a son of Louis Philippe, and Prince Leopold, but the affairs of the country remain in so uncertain a condition that nothing satisfactory can be stated as to its present situation or future prospects.

The population of the kingdom of the Netherlands in 1828 was 6,977,500. Belgium comprised about 3 5ths of this number. In 1831 a census of Holland gave 2,445,550.

Neuburg, called also the Younger Palatinate, formerly a duchy of the German empire, but now incorporated in the Bavarian circles of Upper Danube and Rhenen.

Neuburg, a town of Germany, in Bavaria. It stands on a hill, on the Danube, and has two gates, but the fortifications are a chiefly gone to decay. The castle is a large building, and contains a hall of extraordinary size, embellished with portraits. It is 11 m. W. of Ingolstadt and 60 S. W. of Amberg. Long. 11. 13. E., lat. 48. 43. N.

Neuburg, a town of Bavaria, seated on the Schwarza, 19 m. E. S. E. of Amberg.

Neuchateau, a town of France, department of Vosges, seated in a soil fertile in corn and good wine, on the river Meuse, 25 m. S. W. of Nancy.

Neuchateau, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, 16 m. S. W. of Bastogne and 30 W. N. W. of Luxemburg.

Neuchatel, or Neufchatel, a canton of Switzerland, between the lake of Neuchatel and the borders of France. It is a hilly country, and is watered by several lakes and rivers. The soil is not equally fertile; but there are large vineyards that produce white and red wine, of excellent quality. The pastures on the mountains feed a great number of cattle, and there are plenty of deer in the forests. The inhabitants are Protestants, except in the two districts of Landeron and Cressier, where the Catholics are predominant. This district, along with that of Vallengin, was formerly a separate principality. On the death of the duchess of Nemours, in 1707, the sovereignty was claimed by Frederic I. of Prussia, as heir to the prince of Orange, and his right was acknowledged by the states of the country, whose privileges and alliances he confirmed. In 1806 Neuchatel was ceded by the king of Prussia to the French marshal Berthier, and the grant was confirmed by Napoleon. In 1814 it was rescued from this subjection, and the congress of Vienna acknowledged it a Swiss canton, though the nominal sovereignty of Prussia was preserved.

Neuchatel, the capital of the above canton, is situate partly on the plain between the lake of Neuchatel and the Jura, and partly on the side of that mountain. The chief article of exportation is wine, produced from the neighbouring vineyards and much esteemed; and it has manufactures of printed linens and cottons. 25 m. N. E. of Lausanne and 25 W. of Bern. Long. 7. 0. E. lat. 47. 5. N.

Neuchatel, a town of France, department of Lower Seine, noted for excellent cheese. 20 m. S. E. of Dieppe.

Neuchatel, a lake of Switzerland, about 20 m. long and four broad. At the N. E. extremity it has a communication with the lake of Biel by a narrow outlet.

Neuffen, a town of Germany in Wurtemberg, with a fortress called Hoheneuffen, 17 m. S. E. of Stuttgart.

Neuhans, a town of Bohemia, with a castle, 27 m. E. by S. of Bechin.

Neuhans, a town of Hannover, in the duchy of Bremen, near the mouth of the Oste. It was once a place of great trade, but a sand bank arising in the harbour, at the entrance of the Oste into the Elbe, it is now much less frequented. It is 19 m. N. W. of Stade.

Neuhauzel, a town of Hungary, seated in a marshy plain, on the river Neitra. 43 m. E. S. E. of Presburg.

Neukirchen, a town of Germany, in Hesso Cassel, on the river Fulda, 32 m. S. S. E. of Cassel.

Nevern, a village of Wales, in Pembrokeshire, near a river of the same name, 2 m. N. E. of New-port. In the churchyard stands a square stone, 13 feet high and two broad; the top is circular, charged with a cross, and all the sides are carved with knot-work of various patterns.

Nevers, a town of France, capital of the depart-ment of Nievre, and a bishop's see. It is built in the form of an amphitheatre, and contains several fine buildings. The chief manufactures are china, glass, and works of enamel. It is seated on the Loire, at the influx of the Nievre, over which is a handsome bridge of 20 arches. 30 m. N. N. W. of Moulins.

Neவில்ஸ், p.v. Clermont Co. Ohio.

Neris, one of the Leeward Carribee Islands, in the W. Indies, divided from the E. end of St. Christopher by a narrow channel. It has but one mountain, which is in the middle, very high, and covered with large trees up to the top. Here is a hot bath, much of the same nature as those of Bath, in England. It is a small island, but very fruitful, and subject to the English. Charleston is the capital, on the S. W. side, defended by a fort. Long. 62. 50. W., lat 16. 10. N.

Nerisink, p.t. Sullivan Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,258.

Nerisink Hills, a few low eminences on the coast of New Jersey, a little to the South of Sandy Hook, which are distinguishable on account of the flatness of the country around them.

Nerbyn, or Nerwin, a town of Wales, in Caernar-vonshire. Here Edward I., in 1284, held his triumph on the conquest of Wales. It is seated on St. George's Channel, 21 m. S. by W. of Caernarvon and 249 W. N. W. of London.

New Forest, a forest in Hampshire, Eng. between Southampton water and the river Avon. It is 20 m. in length, and 15 in breadth. It was afforested by William the Conqueror, and was then 10 m. longer than it is now. His son William Rufus was killed in this forest by an arrow, shot by Walter Tyrrel, that accidentally glanced against a tree, the site of which is now pointed out by a triangular stone. Several considerable towns and villages are now included in the forest.

New River, an artificial river of England, originally brought from Amwell, in Hertfordshire, to Islington, for the supply of the metropolis with water. It was finished in 1613, by Sir Hugh Middleton, a citizen of London, who expended his whole fortune in the undertaking. It has since been carried up to a spring near Hertford, called Chadwell, where the stream is also increased by a cut from the river Lea. The river, with all its windings, is 42 m. in length, and is under the management of a corporation called the New River Company.

New Year Harbour, a good harbour on the N. coast of Staten Land. Long. 64. 11. W., lat. 54. 49. S.

New Year Islands, small islands in the S. Pacific, near New Year Harbour, the resort of vast numbers of stions, seals, and a species of vulture.

New Albany, p.t. Floyd Co. Indiana, on the Ohio. 4 m. below Louisville. Also a village in Bradford Co. Pa.

New Alexandria, p.v. Westmoreland Co. Pa. and a town of Columbiana Co. Ohio.

New Amsterdam, a town of South America, in Guiana, the capital of Berbice. It stands on the river Berbice near its mouth.

New Antrim, p.t. Orange Co. N. Y. 34 m. N. W. New York

Newark, a borough in Nottinghamshire Eng. with a good trade in malt, corn, and coals, manufactures of coarse linens and lace, iron and brass founderies, extensive roperies, &c. Gypsum of a superior quality is found in the neighbourhood. It is seated on the Trent, over which is a bridge, 120 m. N. by W. of London.

Newark, a town of Upper Canada, on the W. side of the river Niagara, at its entrance into Lake Ontario, and opposite the town and fort of Niagara, 27 m. N. by E. of Fort Erie.

Newark, p.t. Essex Co. N. J. on the Passaic, 9 m. W. New York. Pop. 10,953. This town is regularly and handsomely built, and has considerable manufactures. The river is navigable to the sea for vessels of 80 tons. The neighbourhood produces excellent cider. Also a p.t. Tioga Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,029; p.v. Ontario Co. N. Y.; p.t. Newcastle Co. Del. 14 m. S. W. Wilmington; p.v. Worcester Co. Maryland; p.v. Louisa Co. Va. 25 m. N. W. Richmond; p.t. Licking Co. Ohio. Pop. 1,912.

Newark Bay, lies N. of Staten Island and communicates with Newark harbour on the E. and the ocean on the S.

New Ashford, t. Berkshire Co. Mass. 20 m. N. Lenox. Pop. 255.

New Athens, p.t. Harrison Co. Ohio. Here is a seminary called Franklin College, founded in 1824. It has 3 instructors and 40 students. Also a p.t. Bradford Co. Pa.

New Baltimore, p.t. Green Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, 18 m. below Albany. Pop. 2,370. Also a p.v. Fauquier Co. Va.

New Barbadoes, a township of Bergen Co. N. J.

New Bedford, p.t. Bristol Co. Mass. with a good harbour on Buzzards Bay. It enjoys an active commerce and is largely engaged in the whale fishery, in which it employs 40,000 tons of shipping, with 20,000 additional in other fisheries and coasting. Here are 10 churches, 3 banks, 3 insurance offices, and 7 manufactories of spermacetti candles. In the neighbourhood are large salt works which make annually above 500,000 bushels. Pop. 7,592.

New Bedford, p.v. Mercer Co. Pa. 15 m. S. W. Mercer; p.t. Coshocton Co. Ohio. 60 m. N. E. Columbus.

New Berlin, p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,643; p.v. Union Co. Pa.

Newbern, p.t. Craven Co. N. C. is the largest town in North Carolina. It is seated upon the Neuse, 30 m. above its entrance into Pamlico Sound. The river is navigable to this place, and secures it a considerable commerce in the exportation of flour, naval stores and lumber. It was once the seat of government for the state. Pop. 3,776.

Newbern, p.v. Montgomery Co. Va.

Newbernville, p.v. Oneida Co. N. Y.

Newberry, a District of S. Carolina. Pop. 17, 441. Also a p.t. capital of this district, 40 m. N. W. Columbia; p.v. Burlington Co. N. J.; p.v. Locoming Co. Pa. and a village in Christian Co. Ken.

Newbiggen, a fishing town in Northumberland, Eng. situate on the N. side of a bay to which it give name. 7 m. E. of Morpeth.

Newborough, or Gorey, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, 25 m. N. by E. of Wexford.

New Boston, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H. 17 m. S. Concord. Pop. 1,680; p.v. Madison Co. N. Y.

New Bourbon, a village in St. Genevieve Co. Missouri.

New Braintree, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 18 m. N. W. Worcester. Pop. 825.

New Britain, a township of Bucks Co. Pa.

New Brownsville, a town in Wayne Co. Ohio.

New Brunswick, p.t. Middlesex Co. N. J. on the Raritan, 30 m. N. E. Trenton and 36 S. W. New York. It stands at the head of sloop navigation with a considerable trade in flour and grain. Pop. 7,831. Rutgers College at this place was founded in 1770. It has 5 instructors and 70 students.

New Brunswick. See Brunswick.

Newburg, p.t. Orange Co. N. Y. on the Hudson 84 m. S. Albany, and 70 N. New York. Pop. 6,424. It is finely situated on the side of a hill close to the river, and has considerable trade.

Newburgh, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with a good harbour on the frith of Tay. Here the large vessels belonging to Perth unload their goods into lighters. The principal manufacture is linen. 10 m. S. E. of Perth.

Newburgh, a town of Wales, in the isle of Anglesey, 250 m. N. W. of London.

Newbury, a town in Berkshire, Eng. its manufactures of druggets, shalloons, and broad cloths, formerly very extensive, are greatly declined; but a considerable trade is carried on by means of the Kennet and Avon Canal. Here are 65 almshouses. Two battles were fought near this town between Charles I. and the parliament in 1643 and 1644. It is seated on the Kennet, 26 m. S. of Oxford and 56 W. of London.

Newbury, a township in Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 626; p.t. Cuyahoga Co. Ohio. Pop. 869.

New Burlington, p.v. Hamilton Co. Ohio.

Newbury, p.t. Orange Co. Vt. on the Connecticut, 30 m. S. E. Montpelier. Pop. 2,252; p.t. Essex Co. Mass. at the mouth of the Merrimack, 32 m. N. E. Boston. Pop. 3,803; towns in York Co. Pa., Geauga and Miami Cos. Ohio.

Newburyport, p.t. Essex Co. Mass. on the Mer rimack near its mouth. It is one of the handsomest towns in the United States, and is built on a sloping bank of the river, with regular streets and handsome houses. It extends a m. along the river, and has 7 churches, 2 banks, 2 insurance offices, and 2 newspapers. An elegant chain bridge crosses the river from the centre of the town. It had formerly a very active commerce, but it is now much declined. A fire in 1811 destroyed between two and three hundred buildings in the most compact part of the town, and the spot still remains in ruins. Ship building is carried on here, with some West India and coasting trade and fisheries. Here is also a manufacture of hosiery. The tomb of Whitefield the celebrated preacher may be seen in the Federal street church in this town, where he died in 1760. Newburyport is 32 m. N. E. Boston, 24 N. Salem, 24 S. W. Portsmouth. Lat. 42. 49. N., long. 70. 47. W. Pop. 6,388.

New Canaan, p.t. Fairfield Co. Conn. 77 m. S. W. Hartford. Pop. 1,826.

New Canton, p.v. Buckingham Co. Va. and Hawkins Co. Ten.

Newcastle, a town of Wales, in Caermarthen-shire. It had a fine castle, now in ruins; and is seated on the Tivy, 220 m. W. N. W. of London.

Newcastle, a town of Ireland, in the county of Dublin, 10 m. W. S. W. of Dublin.

Newcastle under Lyme, a borough in Staffordshire, Eng. with a considerable manufacture of hats. The throwing of silk is a very considerable branch of trade, and here are also a cotton mill, tanneries, malt concerns, &c., and in the neighbourhood are some iron works. The villages around are entirely occupied with the manufactures of porcelain, stone-ware, &c. The principal streets are broad, well paved, and lighted with gas, and the general aspect of the town is much improved of late years. It stands on a branch of the Trent, 15 m. N. by W. of Stafford and 149 N. N. W. of London.

Newcastle upon Tyne, a borough and sea-port in Northumberland, Eng. It is situate among steep hills on the Tyne, which is here a fine and deep river, so that ships of 300 and 400 tons burden may safely come up to the town, though the large colliers are stationed at Shields. The haven is so secure that vessels, when they have passed Tynemouth Bar are in no danger either from storms or shallows. The town rises on the N. bank of the river, where the streets upon the ascent are exceedingly steep. Many of the houses are built of stone; but some of timber, and the rest of brick. Through this town went part of the wall which extended from sea to sea, and was built by the Romans to defend the Britons against the incursions of the Picts, after all their trained youth had been drawn from the kingdom to recruit the armies of their conquerors. The castle, which is old and ruinous overlooks the whole town. The exchange, churches, and other public buildings, are elegant; and the quay for landing goods is long and large. Here are a surgeon's hall; a large hospital, built by the contribution of the keelmen, for the maintenance of the poor of their fraternity; and several charitable foundations. Newcastle is situated in the centre of the collieries, which have for centuries supplied London, all the eastern, and most of the midland and southern parts of the kingdom with coal. This trade has been the source of great opulence to Newcastle, which, besides, exports large quantities of lead, salt, salmon, butter, tallow, and grindstones; and imports wine and fruit from the S. of Europe, and timber, iron hemp, &c., from the Baltic and Norway. Ships are sent hence to the Greenland fishery. It also possesses manufactures of steel, iron, and woollen cloth; and in the town and vicinity are several glass-houses. The first charter which was granted to the townsmen for digging coal was by Henry III., in 1239; but, in 1306, the use of coal for fuel was prohibited in London, by royal proclamation, chiefly because it injured the sale of wood for fuel, great quantities of which were then growing about that city, but this interdiction did not long continue, and we may consider coal as having been dug and exported from this place for more than 400 years. A handsome stone bridge of nine arches connects this town with the ancient borough of Gateshead. It was erected in 1781, in place of the old one which was carried away by an extraordinary flood in 1771. Newcastle was visited by the pestilential cholera in 1831. It is 27 1/2 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 14. W., lat. 54. 57. N.

Newcastle, a county of Delaware. Pop. 29,710, the capital is

Newcastle, formerly the seat of government of Delaware. It is seated upon the Delaware, 34 m S. of Philadelphia. It has some trade in flour.

Newdigate, a village of Eng. in Surrey, 5 m. S. E. of Dorking. In the E. part of this village is a medicinal spring, of the same nature as that of Epsom.

New Echota, the capital of the Cherokee Indians. It is seated on the Coosa, in the northwestern part of Georgia. Here is a newspaper published in English and Cherokee.

New England, the name applied to the northeastern parts of the American Union, comprising the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. This territory extends from 41. to 47. 20. N. lat. and from 66. 49. to 73. 45. W. long. and is bounded N. W. and N. by Canada, E. by New Brunswick and the Ocean; S. by the Ocean, and W. by New York. It contains about 63,000 sq. m. The surface of the country is infinitely varied, and presents the greatest diversity of beautiful scenery. It is traversed by several extensive mountain ranges which may be considered as extensions or branches of the great Apalachian chain: these are the White, Green and Tagkannuc Mountains which see. Rivers and small streams are abundant, and few countries in the world are better watered; the largest are the Connecticut, Penobscot, Merrimack, Kennebec, Androscoggin, and Saco. The climate exhibits great extremes of heat and cold. In most parts the ground is covered with snow for several months in winter, and all the rivers are frozen. Abundance of rain falls in spring, summer and autumn, and droughts are very rare. There is every variety of soil; the river alluvions are very rich, but most of the other soils are stony, and on the whole the country cannot generally be called fertile. Notwithstanding this, no part of the United States is so well cultivated, and the skill and industry of the New England farmers have made the country like a garden. The various articles of cultivation will be found enumerated under the heads of the several states. Cattle are raised in great numbers no part of the country offers finer grazing lands. Grass and maize are the staple productions in all parts.

New England is the most densely peopled section of the United States, and has been the chief nursery from which the western states were peopled. The greater portion of the commerce of the Union, and nearly all the fisheries, are carried on by the shipping of New England. A spirit of adventure, activity, zeal and foresight are characteristic of the people. They are ingenious, inquisitive, shrewd, calculating, persevering and industrious. The population is homogeneous and almost entirely of English descent. The settlement of the Puritans at Plymouth in Massachusetts was the foundation of all the New England States.

Newenham, Cape, a rocky point of considerable height, on the W. coast of N. America, forming the N. extremity of a vast bay called Bristol Bay of which the promontory of Alaska is the S. boundary. It was discovered by Cook in 1778. Long 162. 24. W., lat. 58. 42. N.

Nevecut, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng., seated on a branch of the Severn, 8 m. N. W. of Gloucester and 112 W. N. W. of London.

Newfoundland, an island on the E. coast of N. America, between 47. and 52. N. lat. It was discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1496; and after many disputes with the French it was ceded to the English in 1713. Its form is triangular; the N. point is separated from Labrador by the strait of Bellisle, and from this apex it is 350 m. in length to the base, which is 300 in breadth. It is a mountainous, woody country, and very cold, being covered with snow five months in the year. The settlements of the British are chiefly confined to the harbours, the country near Placentia, and along the bays E. towards Cape Raze and hence to Cape Buena Vista. In the fishing season, which begins in May and ends in September it is resorted to by at least 100,000 people, on account of the great fishing-banks to the S. E. of the island; for here they cure the cod, which is carried not only to England, but to the Mediterranean and the W. Indies. Within a few years Newfoundland has rapidly increased in population and industry. In 1789 the number of inhabitants was 25,900; it is now estimated at 75,000. The cutting down of wood still furnishes a large portion of employment during the winter: the smallest kind used for fuel, is drawn by their large dogs trained up and harnessed for that purpose. There is great plenty of game, fish and fowl, but very little corn, fruit, or cattle.

New Hampshire, one of the New England

States, bounded N. by Lower Canada; E. by Maine, S. by Massachusetts and W. by Vermont. It extends from 42. 41. to 45. 11. N. lat. and from 70. 40. to 72. 25. W. long., 168 m. in length from N. to S. and 90 in breadth; containing 9,491 sq. miles. This state is inland with the exception of 18 miles of sea-coast on the east. It is traversed from N. to S. by a chain of mountains called the White Mountain range. The name of the White Mountains is more strictly applied to the elevations in the northern part of the state, which are the highest mountains in the United States, east of the Mississippi. See White Mountains. Farther south, this range presents some high eminences, as Monadnock, Kearsarge and Mooseluck. This is the most mountainous state in the union and for its great variety of beautiful scenery has been called the Switzerland of America. Hardly any of the surface is even except a small tract upon the coast. The streams which water this state are numerous. The Connecticut washes the whole western boundary: the Merrimack rises here and has the greater part of its course within the state. The Saco rises in this state and passes into Maine. The Piscataqua is the only considerable stream which belongs wholly to New Hampshire. Many beautiful lakes are scattered about in different parts and supply the numerous rivers with their water. The largest is Winnipisogee which flows into the Merrimack; it is above 20 miles long and 10 wide, and exhibits some of the most delightful scenery in the world. See Winnipisogee. The others are Squam, Sunapee and Ossipee lakes, which See.

The climate of New Hampshire is salubrious but the winters are severe; deep snows occur in winter, and furious winds prevail among the mountains; in the northern part, the snow lies till May. The summer and autumn are pleasant, and throughout the year the fair days are to the cloudy as three to one. A great part of the state is covered with forests which furnish abundant supplies of timber such as oak, maple, beech, hemlock, walnut, white pine, fir, elm, cherry, ash, poplar, hornbeam, birch, locust, &c. The sugar maple is one of the most valuable trees in the world. It grows here sometimes to the diameter of 5 or 6 feet. In the spring the trunk is tapped a few feet from the ground and the sap drawn out; this is practised only for a season of 4 or 5 weeks, when the trees are frozen at night and thawed in the day: at no other time will the sap run freely. When the buds swell, the sap ceases to flow. The liquor is then simply boiled down and poured into pans where the sugar crystallizes.

The larger trees will yield 5 gallons of sap in a day and 15 pounds of sugar in a season. In this state and the adjoining parts of Vermont the manufacture of this sugar is carried on to a considerable extent.

The mineral products are iron, copper, plumbago, manganese, soapstone, and limestone. The soil is generally susceptible of cultivation, and on the borders of the rivers it is very rich. The mountainous tracts afford good pasturage. The articles of culture are maize, wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, potatoes and pulse. Hay is produced abundantly. Cattle, and the products of the dairy form important articles of exportation. Domestic manufactures are common in all parts, and there are large manufacturing establishments at Dover and Somersworth. Most of the export trade goes to the States of Maine and Massachusetts. The foreign imports in 1823 amounted to 299,849 dollars; the exports of domestic produce to 115,947 dollars; the shipping amounted to 26,253 tons. The fisheries employ 60 or 70 sail, and take about 40,000 quintals of cod and pollock, and 6,000 barrels of mackerel yearly. Portsmouth is the only sea-port, except a few small coves for fishing craft. The Isles of Shoals, which See, lie upon this coast.

New Hampshire is divided into 8 counties, and 220 towns. The capital is Concord. The other principal towns are Portsmouth, Exeter, Dover, Amherst, Haverhill, Hanover, Keene and Charlestown. The population of the state is 269,533. The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Representatives, the members of which are chosen yearly as well as the Governor and executive council. Elections are popular and suffrage is universal. Perfect toleration is allowed in religion; no citizen is taxed but by his own consent, for the support of any religious society. The Calvinistic Congregationalists have 125 ministers; the Unitarians 11; the Presbyterians 8; the Episcopalians 8; the Calvinistic Baptists 70; the Freewill Baptists 51; the Christians 17; the Methodists 71; the Quakers 15; the Universalists 20; the Shakers 2 and the Sandemanians 1. Education receives great care; common schools are supported by law. The larger Seminaries are Dartmouth College at Hanover and Phillips Academy at Exeter. New Hampshire was first settled at Dover and Portsmouth in 1623. It was for a time a part of Massachusetts, but has been a distinct government since 1741. The present constitution was established in 1792.

New Hampton, t. Strafford Co. N. H. on the Merrimack, 30 m. above Concord. Pop. 1,904; p.t. Hunterdon Co. N. J. 40 m. N. W. New Brunswick.

New Hanover, a county of North Carolina. Pop. 10,759. Wilmington is the capital. Also a township of Montgomery Co. Pa.

New Harmony, or Harmony, a town in Posey Co. in the south-western corner of Indiana, on the Wabash, formerly the seat of the Harmonists, under the German Rapp, and more recently, of the co-operatives under Owen of Lanark. The former establishment was removed to Economy, which see, and the latter has been abandoned.

New Hartford, p.t. Litchfield Co. Conn. 22 m. N. W. Hartford. Pop. 1,766; also a village in Oncida Co. N. Y. 4 m. W. Utica; it is neatly built, and surrounded with many handsome country seats.

New Haven, a town in Sussex, Eng. near the mouth of the Ouse, with a small harbour, 57 m. from London, also a small town in Scotland, on the Frith of Forth, 1 m. W. Leith.

New Haven, p.t. Addison Co. Vt. on Otter creek Pop. 1,834; p.t. Oswego Co. N. Y. on Lake Ontario. Pop. 1,410; p.t. Huron Co. Ohio; p.v. Hamilton Co. Ohio; p.v. Gallatin Co. Illinois.

New Haven, a county of Connecticut. Pop. 43,848. New Haven is the capital.

New Haven, city, the capital of the above coun ty and jointly with Hartford, the seat of government for Connecticut, stands on a bay opening into Long Island Sound. It occupies a low situation, surrounded by hills, and is regularly and handsomely built. The streets are wide and commodious, and the general aspect of the town is neat and elegant. In the centre is a large square planted with trees and fronted by the State House, the college buildings, several churches and other fine structures, constituting one of the finest public places in the country. The State House is one of the handsomest buildings in the United States.

Yale College, at this place, was founded in 1701. It has 15 instructors and 346 students. The libraries have 17,500 volumes, and the collection of minerals is the best in the country. The buildings are 4 for the dwellings of the students, a chapel, a laboratory and an observatory on the model of the Tower of the Winds at Athens. A law school is connected with the college. There are 3 vacations in January, May and September, of 12 weeks. Commencement is in September.

New Haven has considerable commerce, and its trade with the interior is assisted by the Farmington Canal, which extends from this place northward into Massachusetts. It is in lat. 41. 18. N., long. 72. 56. W., 76 m. N. E. New York, 34 S. W. Hartford, 134 S. W. Boston. Pop. 10,678.

Newington, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H. 5 m. N. W. Portsmouth. Pop. 549.

New Ipswich, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H. 18 m. S. W. Amherst. Pop. 1,673

New Jersey, one of the United States, bounded N. by New York, E. by the ocean, S. by Delaware Bay and W. by Pennsylvania. It extends from 39. to 41. 24. N. lat. and from 74. to 75. 29. W. long. It is 163 m. long from N. to S. and 59 m. in average breadth, and contains 8,300 sq. miles. A small portion in the North is mountainous, but the greater part of the state is level, and the southern portion is a flat sandy alluvion, in some parts marshy, but in general barren or producing only shrub oaks and pines. The Delaware washes the whole western limit of the state, and a part of the eastern boundary lies upon the Hudson. The other rivers are the Raritan, Passaic, Hackensack and Great Egg Harbour. The climate is milder than in the adjoining states of New York and Pennsylvania, and nearly the whole state lies open to the sea air. The soil of the northern part is good, both for agriculture and grazing. Fruit is abundant; the apple orchards are very numerous and produce great quantities of excellent cider. Wheat, rye, maize, buckwheat and garden stuffs are the chief articles of cultivation; considerable numbers of cattle are raised for exportation. The foreign commerce is carried on principally through the ports of New York and Philadelphia. The imports directly into the state amounted in 1829 to 786,217 dollars; the exports of domestic produce to 8,022 dollars; the shipping in 1828 amounted to 45,772 tons. The shad fishery is very productive, and constitutes a source of income to the state: there are also considerable oyster beds which are productive. There are some mines of copper and iron, but the state is not rich in minerals. Flourishing manufactures are carried on at Trenton, New York, Patterson and the neighbourhood: they consist of cotton, woolen, iron, copper, brass, nails, duck, hats, shoes, leather, &c.

The state is divided into 13 counties and 130 townships; the population is 320,769; of whom 3,446 are slaves. The capital is Trenton. The other principal towns are Trenton, Burlington, Bordentown, Princeton, New Brunswick, Newark, Elizabethtown and Amboy. The legislature, consists of a council and a House of Assembly, the members of which are chosen yearly. The governor is chosen yearly by the legislature. Voters must be resident one year and possess a property of 50 pounds. The most numerous religious sect are the Presbyterians, who have 85 churches; the Reformed Dutch have 28, the Baptist 34, and the Episcopalians 20 ministers. The state has a school fund yielding a yearly revenue of 22,000 dollars. There are colleges at Princeton and New Brunswick. This state is traversed by several canals and railroads. The Morris Canal extends from the Hudson at Powles-Hook opposite New York to Easton on the Delaware, 94 m.: it has a rise and fall of 890 feet by means of locks and inclined planes, at which the boats are drawn up by machinery. It passes by the towns of Newark, Paterson, and Dover, and crosses Passaic and Pompton rivers by aqueducts. The Delaware and Raritan Canal will extend from the Delaware at Lambertton below Trenton, to New Brunswick on the Raritan, 38 m.: it is 75 feet wide at the surface, and 7 feet deep and will probably be finished in 1833. The Camden and Amboy Railroad, is nearly completed and will extend from Camden on the Delaware, to Amboy, 61 m. The Paterson and Hudson River Railroad, will pass from Paterson to Jersey city, on the Hudson, 14 m. Two other railroads are projected, the West Jersey and the Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroads.

New Jersey was first settled by the Danes at Bergen, opposite New York, in 1624; the Dutch afterwards made settlements in the same neighbourhood. The Swedes settled on the Delaware in 1626 and the English in 1640. The whole coun ly reduced by the English in 1664. Elizabeth-town was founded by them in 1665. The government underwent various mutations, and the state was for a time divided into East and West Jersey. At the revolution a single government was established which has continued to the present day. The constitution was formed in 1776.

New Kent, a county of the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 6,457.

New Lebanon, p.v. Columbia Co. N. Y. 24 m. S. E. Albany, near the Massachusetts line. It is inhabited by the Shakers, and has a mineral spring. New Orleans, a Parish of Louisiana. Pop. 46,310, the capital is the following.

New Orleans, city, the capital of Louisiana, stands on the Mississippi, 105 m. from its mouth by the windings of the stream and 90 in a direct line. The river here makes a considerable bend to the N. E. and the city occupies the north-western bank, although its situation is east of the general course of the stream. The site is low and marshy, which makes the place insalubrious, and in the summer most of the inhabitants remove from the city. It is regularly built and is composed of three divisions, the city proper and the faubourgs or suburbs of St. Marie and Marigny. In the city the houses are built in the French and Spanish style, and covered with white and yellow stucco. The faubourg St. Marie is built after the American fashion, and does not differ in appearance from one of the Atlantic cities. Here are a large catholic cathedral, a handsome presbyterian church, a French and English theatre, a college, a convent of Ursuline nuns, an orphan asylum, and many charitable institutions. The commerce of the city is very great, as it is the outlet of all the states lying on the Mississippi and its waters. Here are sometimes 1,500 flat boats from the upper country loaded with all sorts of agricultural produce; 50 steamboats, are often counted at a time in the river. The foreign exports consist of all the various productions of the southern and western states, but the most important articles are sugar and cotton. The Canal Carondelet extends from the Mississippi at this place to Lake Pontchartrain 2 m. and affords a navigation for small vessels to the ocean. A railroad 4 1-2 m. in length also passes between the same places and joins the lake at an artificial harbour. Both these communications are perfectly straight and the variation of level on the railroad is only 16 inches.

The population of New Orleans is of a very miscellaneous character. Dissipation prevails to a high degree. Half the inhabitants are blacks or mulattoes, and there are more French than Americans. The neighbourhood is a swamp, and the soil on which the city is built is so spongy that water rises at a few feet below the surface, and the buildings have no cellars. With all these disadvantages added to the unhealthiness of the spot, it continues rapidly to increase, and will doubtless soon become one of the most important commercial cities in the world. It was founded by the French in 1717. The British landed an army for the purpose of attacking it in 1814 but were totally defeated by General Jackson, a few miles below the city on the 8th of January 1815.

New Orleans is in lat. 29. 57. N., long. 90. S. W., 322 m. by the river below Natchez; 1,189 below St. Louis; 991 below the mouth of the Ohio; and 1,933 below Pittsburg. It is 1,260 m. S. W. Washington. Pop. 46,310.

Newport, p.t. one of the chief towns in Rhode Island. It stands near the southern extremity of the island which gives its name to the state, upon a harbour formed by the entrance of the main channel of Narraganset Bay. This is one of the finest harbours in the world, lying close to the sea, and always accessible; the entrance is defended by several strong forts. Newport formerly enjoyed a very active commerce, but this has greatly declined, and the town has a decayed look. The legislature of the state sit here occasionally, and many people resort hither in summer for the purity and mildness of the air. Here are 11 churches, and some manufactures of cotton and lace. Pop. 8,910.

New Shetland, or New South Shetland, a cluster of Islands in the Antarctic Ocean, lying to the S. E. of Cape Horn, in about lat. 65. S. Their existence was first made known to the world in 1820, although it is said the American South Sea whalers had been accustomed to visit them for some years previous. They are but little known, yet have been found to extend 200 m. from E. N. E. to W. S. W. The land exhibits marks of volcanic action and consists of lofty summits, crowned with snow and ice. Seals are abundant in this neighbourhood.

New Year's Islands, a number of small islands near the N. coast of Staten Land, in lat. 54. 41. S., long. 64. 28. W.

New York, one of the United States, bounded N. by Lake Ontario and Lower Canada, E. by Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut, S. by Pennsylvania and N. Jersey, S. W. and N. W. by Lakes Erie, and Ontario, and Canada. It extends from 40. 30. to 45. N. lat. and from 73. to 79. 55. W. long. It is 340 m. in length from E. to W. and 304 in breadth, and contains, including Long Island, 45,085 sq. m. This state is mountainous in the eastern part, where it is traversed by a branch of the Apalachian chain, called the Shawangunk ridge, different portions of which are known by the name of the Highlands, and Catskill Mountains. See Catskill. In the north-eastern part are the Peruvian Mountains, which lie around the sources of the Hudson, and separate the waters of Lake Champlain from those of the St. Lawrence.

The most of the western part is level, but on the borders of Pennsylvania are some hilly tracts. Parallel with Lake Ontario there runs an elevation called the Ridge, about 70 m. in length; it is not more than 30 feet above the surrounding country, and 100 feet in width, and extends from Niagara river to the Genesee. The mountains exhibit granite, gneiss, limestone and mica slate; the western and central districts are secondary, and the southern mostly transition. Iron, tin, lead, and plumbago are found in the mountainous parts; coal, gypsum and slate occur along the Hudson, with some native silver. Antimony and arsenic have also been discovered.

The eastern part is watered by the Hudson, which rises on the western side of Lake Champlain, and flows southerly to the sea at New York; the Mohawk, from the west, is its chief branch. The Genesee crosses the state from Pennsylvania and runs into L. Ontario. Black river and the Oswegatchie, water the northern parts; the Onondaga receives the waters of a number of small lakes toward the west, and discharges them into Lake Ontario; the head streams of the Susquehanna have their source in this state. A great extent of the north western limit is washed by Lakes Erie and Ontario; on the north-eastern border lies Lake Champlain, dividing it from Vermont, and in the same quarter is Lake George. In the west are the smaller lakes of Oneida, Skeneateles, Owasco, Cayuga, Seneca, Crooked, Canandaigua and Chataouque, many of which are adorned with beautiful scenery.

The soil in a great part of the state is excellent; on the Mohawk are alluvial tracts of remarkable fertility: in the west are the Genesee flats which are no less rich. In the north it is clayey; about Albany are some tracts of sandy plain interspersed with marshes. The valleys have a rich black mould; along the Hudson in the southern part, the soil is gravelly with rich alluvial tracts. About one fourth of the land is under cultivation; wheat is the chief article of culture; maize, rye, barley, oats, flax, buckwheat, hemp, &c. are also raised. The climate of this great state is more diversified than perhaps that of any other in the union. The northern part feels the severity of a Canadian winter; the south has a climate comparatively mild. About Albany the winter begins toward the middle of December and ends early in March. Hay is cut early in July, and the maize ripens in September and October. The Hudson is frozen in winter.

This state abounds in mineral springs, the most celebrated of which are in the neighbourhood of Saratoga, which See. There are in the western part, many which discharge inflammable air. See Burning Springs. Salt springs are also common, and salt is manufactured in great abundance at various places. See Salina. The internal trade of the state is facilitated by many canals, the largest of which unites the Hudson with Lake Erie. See Erie Canal. The Northern canal connects Lake Champlain with the Hudson, and is 63 m. in length. The Delaware and Hudson canal extends from Port Jervis, on the Delaware to the Hudson; it has a further extension to Honesdale, in Pennsylvania, and its whole length is 108 m. There are also canals which open a communication between the Mohawk and Lake Ontario through Oneida Lake. Four railroads are in a process of construction. The Mohawk and Hudson Railroad, between the Hudson at Albany and the Mohawk at Schenectady 15 miles—the Canajoharie and Catskill Railroad from Canajoharie on the Erie canal to Catskill on the Hudson 74 m.;—the Hudson and Delaware Railroad, from Newburgh on the Hudson to the Delaware;—the Troy and Bennington Railroad, from Troy on the Hudson to Bennington in Vermont. These improvements with the admirable position of the great outport of the state at the mouth of the Hudson, have given the trade of New York an unexampled activity, and it has already become one of the most flourishing states in the Union. The commerce is chiefly transacted through the single sea-port of New York; but there is also much trade by the way of the lakes. The imports into the state in 1825 were valued at 32,719,644 dollars; the exports of domestic produce at 13,920,627 dollars; total exports 23,834,137 dollars. The shipping in the same year amounted to 354,771 tons. Thus in amount of foreign trade New York surpasses every state in the Union, although in tonnage of shipping Massachusetts is superior.

The manufactures consists of cotton, woolen, cloths, iron, salt, paper, glass, leather, &c. The chief establishments are at the following places. At Columbiaville near Hudson, are 11 factories producing yearly 16,240,000 yards of calico, with carpeting and flannels;—at Matteawan near Fishkill are manufactured broadcloths unsurpassed for fineness in the country;—at Catskill carpeting and paper;—at Walden are produced yearly 140,000 yards of flannel; 360,000 of sheeting and 30,000 of broadcloth;—at Schenectady are made yearly 400,000 yards of cotton cloth, 30,000 lbs. of yarn, with carpeting, satin and paper. There are also manufactures of cotton, iron, &c. at Rainapo, Albany, Troy, and many other places. The yearly value of the manufactures without reckoning domestic fabrics is estimated as follows, cotton 3,000,000 dollars; woolen 3,000,000; iron 4,000,000; paper 500,000; hats 3,000,000; boots and shoes 5,000,000; leather 3,000,000; window glass 200,000. The domestic manufactures in 1825 amounted to nearly 5,000,000 dollars.

The state is divided into 8 districts and 56 counties. The towns and cities are 762. The population is 1,913,508 of whom 46 are slaves. There are also about 5,000 Indians in the western parts. The capital is Albany. The other large towns are New York, Brooklyn, Troy, Hudson, Poughkeepsie, Newburgh, Rochester and Buffalo. The legislature consists of a Senate and an Assembly; the senators are chosen for 4 years, one fourth of the numbers being renewed annually, and the members of the Assembly for one year. The Governor and Lt. Governor are chosen for 2 years and are elected by the highest number of votes given, although less than a majority. The clergy are excluded from office. Elections are popular and suffrage is universal. The most numerous religious sect are the Presbyterians, who have 587 churches; the Baptists have 539; the Episcopalians 120 ministers; the Lutherans 27, and the Reformed Dutch 54 churches. Education is provided for by a Literary Fund producing yearly 6,000 dollars, which sum is divided among the incorporated academies. There is also a common school fund; and 200,000 dollars raised from this source and from taxes, are annually appropriated for the support of public schools. There are in the state 36 incorporated academies and 8,000 common schools which afford instruction to 400,000 children. There are 4 colleges in the state, at New York, Schenectady, Clinton, and Geneva.

New York was first settled by the Dutch, who established themselves at Albany, and on the island of Manhattan, where the city of New York now stands, about 1612. The English, disputed their claim to the country, and Charles II. made a grant of it to his brother the Duke of York. A strong force was sent against the colony, and the Dutch unable to offer resistance, peaceably submitted. The name of the colony was changed from New Netherlands to that of New York. It passed again into the hands of the Dutch for a short period, but finally became established under the English government. It was the theatre of some of the most important military operations during the American revolution, and the territory was not wholly abandoned by the British till the conclusion of peace. The present constitution of the state was established in 1787.

New York, city, in the above state, the chief city in the western world for population, wealth and commerce, is situated in the south-western extremity of the state, upon a wide harbour at the mouth of the Hudson, communicating with Long Island Sound and the ocean by two entrances. The city stands on the southern point of the island of Manhattan which is washed on one side by the Hudson, and on the other by the strait called East River, which separates it from Long Island, and affords a navigable communication between New York harbour and Long Island Sound. The harbour extends 9 m. S. of the city to the sea. The first settlement was made at the southern extremity, consequently that portion of the city is composed of narrow, crooked, inconvenient streets, and unsightly old buildings; but the more modern parts, and especially those which have grown up within 20 years, are regular and commodious. The finest street is Broadway, which traverses the whole city in a straight line from N. to S. being 3 m. in length and 80 feet in breadth; it is occupied chiefly by shops and elegant public buildings, and few streets in the world equal it for the splendor, bustle and fashion it exhibits. The Battery is an enclosed promenade on the shore at the southern extremity of the city; it is planted with trees, and though not extensive, is pleasant, much frequented, and offers a delightful view of the harbour.

The Park is a triangular enclosure of 11 acres in the centre of the city; upon one side of this stands the City Hall, an elegant structure with a front of white marble; it is 216 feet long and 105 broad, and is one of the finest buildings in the country. The Merchants' Exchange in Wall street is handsomely built of white marble. The United States Branch Bank is also a fine marble structure. St. Paul's Chapel is esteemed one of the finest buildings in the city; its spire is 234 feet high. St. John's Chapel has a spire 240 feet in height, and is the most costly church in the city, having been built at the expense of 200,000 dollars. St. Patrick's Cathedral, a Roman Catholic edifice, is the largest of all the churches, and is of stone, 120 feet long and 80 wide. There are more than 100 additional churches, some of them very costly. Trinity Church is a Gothic edifice of stone, and belongs to the oldest and richest episcopal establishment in America, possessing a property to the amount of several millions of dollars.

Columbia College at New York, was founded in 1757, and till the Revolution, was called King's College. It has a President and 5 professors. The libraries contain 14,000 volumes. The students are 124. This institution is well endowed. Commencement is in August; there is but one vacation of about two months immediately afterward. The college building is of stone, stuccoed, and contains lodgings for the professors, with a chapel, library, museum, lecture rooms, &c. but the students do not reside in it. The grounds attached to the college are extensive.

The New York Institution comprises a large edifice, 260 feet in length, in the rear of the City Hall, and occupied by the Literary and Philosophical Society, the Historical Society, the Academy of fine Arts, the Lyceum of Natural History, the Museum, and the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. The Historical Society have a library of 10,000 volumes. The New York Society Library in Nassau street has 20,000. The State Prison is on the eastern bank of the Hudson, in the upper part of the city, and is a large stone building, enclosed by a spacious yard. The almshouse is at Bellevue, on East river, and comprises three stone buildings, the largest of which is 320 feet in length. The Hospital is a large and well regulated establishment, and has a library of 4,000 volumes.

The city rises with a moderate ascent from both rivers. The view in approaching it by the Narrows from the sea is particularly fine. The bay contains many small islands, with forts and castles upon them, and the lofty spires of the city are visible at a great distance. The water is everywhere deep and the current rapid; it has not been frozen over for 50 years. The commerce of the city is very great, as may be gathered from the following items. During the year 1830, there arrived 1,489 vessels from foreign ports; sailed for foreign ports 1,138; entered coastwise 1,332; cleared coastwise 3,474; total arrived and departed 7,433. The revenue collected at the custom house in 1829 was 13,052,676 dollars; being more than half the whole revenue of the United States from foreign commerce. The city expenditure by the municipal government in 1830, was 1,033,419 dollars. The population by the census of 1830, was 207,621 in the city and county which take in the whole island of New York. Brooklyn, on the Long Island shore of East river, is properly a suburb of the city, and contains a population of 15,396.

Packets sail from New York, to Liverpool and London every week; to Havre every 10 days; and to Hull, Greenwich, Belfast, Vera Cruz, Carthage, and all the chief ports of the United States at different times. Fifty steam-boats constantly pass between New-York and the towns on the Hudson, Long Island Sound and other waters in the neighbourhood. There are 61 banks in the city, 25 insurance companies; 463 schools; 40 bookstores; 450 lawyers; 98 clergymen; 50 auctioneers; 300 oyster shops; 56 lottery offices.

3,000 licensed groceries and taverns; 2,380 licensed cartmen and porters; 2,110 paupers in the almshouse. The real estate of the city is valued at $7,603,389, dollars, the personal estate at 37,684,938 dollars; total, 127,288,518.

Most of the periodicals are newspapers; the whole number is 48, eleven of which are daily. The bookselling trade is thriving, and there are some establishments, in which the republication of English works is carried on upon a very large scale. One of these has issued between 4 and 500,000 volumes in a year. The number of public schools does not exceed a dozen; their annual expense to the city is 25,995 dollars. This deficiency however, in the means of common education, is in some degree made up by a large number of charity schools. The Lyceum of Natural History, and the New York Athenæum, are respectable associations for the promotion of science and literature. The Chamber of Commerce is an incorporated body of merchants, who devote themselves to the study of mercantile affairs. Many other institutions for various objects we can only mention by name, as the institution for the Deaf and Dumb; the Horticultural Society; the National Academy of the arts of Design; the Asylum for the Insane, and many charitable institutions. The government of the city is composed of a Mayor, 10 Aldermen, and 10 Assistants.

The rapid increase in population and trade which New York has experienced within a few years, and its commanding position for a commercial mart, added to the increasing facilities for internal navigation, and the growing prosperity of the back country, must secure it a permanent superiority over all other cities in the United States. Its population exhibits a great diversity of character. The ancient Dutch settlers have left traces of their national manners among their descendants, and the number of foreigners constantly residing here is very great. The most numerous are the Irish, who are estimated at 20,000. The French and Spanish are next in number. The city was founded by the Dutch in 1614, and was by them called New Amsterdam. It was taken by the English in 1664, and received the name of New York. It is in lat. 40. 42. 40. N. long. 74. 0. 45. W., 210 m. S. W. Boston, 90 N. E. Philad., 227 N. E. Washington, 140 S. Albany, and 390 S. Montreal.

New York, p.t. Albemarle Co. Va. 23 m. W. Charlotte; a village in Champaign Co. Ohio; p. v. Montgomery Co. Ten. 110 m. N. W. Murfreesborough.

New Zealand. See Zealand.

Neyland, a town in Suffolk, Eng. 57 m. N. E. of London. It has some manufactures.

Neytracht, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county, 40 m. N. E. Presburg.

Nezpique, a river of Louisiana flowing into the Mermentau.

Nyan King Fou, a city of China, capital of the western part of the province of Kiang Nan.

Nyan lo Fou, a large city of China in the province of Hou Quang. 420 m. W. by S. of Nankin.

Niagara, a river of North America, connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario. It is 35 m. in length and flows northerly; about midway between the two lakes it separates into two channels forming Grand Island. A short distance below the union of these channels are the celebrated falls of Niagara universally allowed to be the grandest cataract in the world. Half a mile above the falls, the river is a furious rapid which sweeps away to certain destruction every thing involved in it; the river is here three quarters of a mile broad, and from this point it rushes down with increased velocity to the fall where it leaps in one immense mass down a perpendicular precipice 160 feet in depth, with a roar that may be heard 40 miles. The cataract forms an irregular semicircle, the deepest hollow of which is called the Horse Shoe Fall, and is on the Canada side. At the brink of the fall stands a small island, called Goat Island, which breaks the great sheet of water as it rushes over the precipice, but the waters unite again before they reach the bottom. A bridge is thrown across the falls from the American side to the island. On the British side a few yards below is a projection called Table Rock, commanding a magnificent view of the falls. From this rock a spiral staircase leads down to the foot of the cataract where visitors may pass under the fall between the sheet of water and the rock. The path leads far under the excavated bank of the river, which in some places forms a roof overhanging 40 feet. The fall of such an immense mass of water, produces violent whirls in the air, and the spray is driven out with such force that no one can approach the edge of the cataract without being drenched to the skin. It is difficult even to draw a breath here, and in entering this tremendous cavern there is danger of being blinded by the strong driving showers of spray; the greatest distance to which it is possible to penetrate with in the sheet of water is 150 feet. The banks of the river for several miles below the falls are perpendicular precipices of rock, and there is reason to believe that the cataract was formerly much farther down the river, the rock having gradually worn away to the present spot. A cloud of spray is continually rising from the foam of waters and exhibiting in the sunshine a brilliant rainbow. The island upon the summit is about a mile in circumference, and is covered with trees. In summer crowds of visitors are continually resorting hither from all parts of the world; and there are many public houses in the neighbourhood for their accommodation.

Nias, a small island, near the W. coast of the island of Sumatra. Long. 97. 0. E., lat. 0. 40. N.

Nibe, a town of Denmark, in N. Jutland, 9 m. W. S. W. of Alburg.

Nibiano, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma, 16 m. S. W. of Piacenza.

Nicaragua, a province of Guatemala, bounded on the N. by Honduras, E. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. E. by Costa Rica, and S. W. by the Pacific Ocean. It is 400 m. from E. to W. and 120 from N. to S. It is well watered by lakes and rivers, and produces plenty of sugar, cochineal, and fine chocolate. Leon de Nicaragua is the capital.

Nicaragua, a lake in the foregoing province

350 m. in circumference. It is interspersed with islands, and abounds in fishes, but is infested with crocodiles. The S. W. extremity is only a few leagues from the Pacific Ocean, and the S. E. end communicates with the Atlantic Ocean by the river St. Juan.

Nicaragua, a city of the foregoing province, situate at some distance S. W. of the lake, and near the mouth of a river, on the Pacific Ocean, 120 m. S. E. of Leon de Nicaragua. Long. 86. 10. W., lat. 11. 15. N.

Nicaria, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, between Samos and Tina, anciently called Icaria. It is 50 m. in circumference, and full of rocks. Long. 26. 30. E., lat. 37. 40. N.

Nicastro, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, with an ancient castle, 17 m. S. S. E. of Cosenza.

Nice, a county of Sardinia, bounded by the Var, the Maritime Alps, the territories of Genoa, and the Mediterranean. It was anciently an appendage of Provence in France, but afterwards passed to the king of Sardinia. It is 36 m. long, and 13 broad; and contains about 100 000 inhabitants.

Nice, an ancient, handsome, and considerable town, on the confines of France and Italy, capital of the foregoing province. It has a strong citadel built on a rock, and on the W. it is fortified with a wall and ditch. On the E. side of the rock is the harbour, called Limpia, from a small river that runs into it. The inhabitants export oil, silk, wine, cordials, rice, oranges, lemons, and all sorts of dried fruits. It was taken by the French in 1792, retaken by the Austrians in 1800, but evacuated in a week afterwards. It is very agreeably situated, 4 m. from the mouth of the Var, 83 S. by W. of Turin, and 83 E. of Aix.

Nice, a city of Natolia. See Isnic.

Nisaburg, a town of Persia, famous for a mine of turquoise stone in its neighbourhood. It is 37 m. S. of Mesched.

Nicholas, a county of the W. district of Virginia. Pop. 3,349. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 8,832. Carlisle is the capital.

Nicholasville, p.t. Jessamine Co. Ken. 30 m. S. E. of Frankfort.

Nicholas, St., one of the largest and most pleasant of the Cape Verde Islands, between St. Lucia and St. Jago. It is 75 m. in length; and is the residence of the bishop of the isles. Long. 14. 10. W., lat. 16. 32. N.

Nicholas, St., a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, with a handsome church, to which pilgrims formerly resorted. It is seated on the Meurthe, 7 m. S. E. of Nancy.

Nicholas, St., Mole, a town, harbour, and cape, at the N. W. extremity of St. Domingo, commanding the strait called the Windward Passage. The harbour is strongly fortified by nature and art; and ships of any burden may ride at anchor in the basin, even during a hurricane. It was taken by the English aided by the French royalists, in 1793, but evacuated in 1798. Long. 73. 30. W., lat. 19. 49. N.

Nicholas Island, a small island on the N. coast of the island of Cuba. Long. 79. 40. W., lat. 33. 50. N.

Nicobar Islands, a group of 19 islands on the E. side of the bay of Bengal. They are almost entirely uncultivated; but the cocoa-nut, the meliori or lernum (a kind of bread-fruit), and other tropical fruits grow spontaneously; there are also yams and sweet potatoes, and the edible birds' nests so much esteemed in China. Dogs and hogs are the principal animals. The inhabitants are tall and well proportioned, with black eyes, black lank hair, and dark copper-coloured skins. They live in little huts, having no towns, and go quite naked, except a cloth about the waist with a small string hanging down behind. These islands extend northward, from the N. point of Sumatra. The largest, which gives name to the rest, is 25 m. long and 10 broad. Its extremity is in long. 94. 3. E., lat. 6. 39. N.

Nicojack Cave, in Georgia, is situated in an eminence called Raccoon Mountain. Its mouth is 50 feet high and 160 feet wide. It is many miles in depth and the floor is covered with a stream of water throughout its whole length. Three miles within is a cataract, beyond which visitors have not penetrated. The rock is limestone.

Nicolaef, a city of Russia, in the government of Catharimenslaf, founded by Catherine II., on the S. side of the Ingul, at its conflux with the Bog. The public buildings and a number of private houses are constructed of a white calcareous stone, but the rest of the houses are of wood. This place, being of easier access by water for vessels than Cherson, is now the capital of the naval establishment of the Black Sea. The admiralty, with a long line of magazines, workshops, wet and dry docks, and every necessary department for shipping are placed along the bark of the Ingul. It is 30 m. N. N. E. of Oczakow and 45 N. W. of Cherson. Long. 30. 46. E., lat. 46. 58. N.

Nicola, St., the most considerable of the isles of Tremeti, in the gulf of Venice. It has a harbour, defended by a fortress, in which is an abbey with a church. Long. 15. 37. E., lat. 42. 10. N.

Nicolsburg, a town of Moravia, with a castle on a mountain, 12 m. E. N. E. of Laab.

Nicopoli, a town of Bulgaria, famous for the first battle fought between the Turks and the Christians in 1396, when the emperor Sigismund was defeated, and had 20,000 men killed. It is seated on the Danube, at the influx of the Osma, 60 m. S. S. W. of Bucharest and 150 N. N. W. of Adrianople. Long. 25. 43. E., lat. 44. 16. N.

Nicopoli, or Glanish, a town of Turkish Armenia, built by Pompey in memory of a victory gained over Mithridates. It is 15 m. S. of Erzerum.

Nicosia, the capital of Cyprus, seated near the mountain Olympus. From the time of Constantine the Great till 1567, it was 9 m. in circumference; but the Venetians, finding it too extensive, reduced it to 3, and fortified it with 11 bastions and 3 gates; all the rest they razed to the foundation, demolishing temples, palaces, and the most beautiful monuments. In 1570, it was besieged 45 days by the Turks, and then taken by a general assault. The church of St. Sophia is a fine old Gothic structure. The bazaar is extensive, well supplied with provisions, and remarkably clean. Lon. 33. 26. E., lat. 35. 14. N.

Nicosia, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona, 12 m. S. of Cofalu.

Nicotera, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, near the coast of the Mediterranean, 35 m. N. N. E. of Reggio, and 135 S. E. of Naples. Long. 16. 30. E., lat. 38. 34. N.

Nicoya, a town of Guatemala, in Costa Rica, situate on a small river, which runs into the bay of Salinas, where there is a pearl fishery. It is 98 m. W. N. W. of Cartago. Long. 85. 49. W., lat. 10. 40. N.

Nicsara, a town of Turkey, in Caramania, and an archbishop's see, 10 m. N. of Tocat. Long. 36. 9. E., lat. 39. 25. N.

Nidau, a town of Switzerland in the canton of Bern, with a castle; situate on the lake of Biel, 15 m. N. W. of Bern.

Nidda, a town of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt, seated on a river of the same name, 20 m. N. E. of Frankfort.

Niebla, a town of Spain, in Seville, near which is a considerable copper mine; seated on the Tinto, 11 m. N. N. W. of Moguer and 40 W. of Seville.

Niemceck, a town of Brandenburg, on the river Ada, 16 m. N. of Wurtemberg.

Niemecz, a strong town of Moldavia, situate on a mountain, on a river of the same name, 76 m. W. S. W. of Jassy. Long. 26. 10. E., lat. 46. 58. N.

Nemen, a river which rises in Lithuania, and passes by Bielica and Grodno; it then runs through part of Samogitia and E. Prussia, and enters the Curisch Haff by several mouths, of which the principal and most northern is called the Russ.

Nienburg, a strong town of Hanover, capital of the county of Hoya, with a considerable trade in corn and wool; seated on the Weser, 37 m. S. S. E. of Bremen. Long. 9. 25. E., lat. 52. 39. N.

Nienburg, a town of Prussia, in the government of Munster, seated on the Dinkel, 33 m. N. W. of Munster.

Nienburg, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Anhalt-Kothen, seated in the Saale, 8 m. N. W. of Kothen.

Nienhaus, a town of Hanover, in the district of Paderborn, with a castle, formerly the residence of the prince: seated on the Lippe, 2 m. N. N. E. of Paderborn.

Nieper. See Dnieper.

Nicster. See Dniester.

Nieuport, a sea-port of the Netherlands, in W. Flanders, at the mouth of the Yperlee. Here are sluices, by which the country can be laid under water. The inhabitants principally subsist by the herring fishery, and by making nets and ropes. 9 m. S. W. of Ostend. Long. 2. 45. E., lat. 51. 8. N.

Nieuport, a town of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, seated on the river Lech, 15 m. E. of Rotterdam.

Nierre, a department of France, including the greater part of the province of Nivernois. Its takes its name from a small river, which rises near Champigny, and runs into the Loire, at Nevers, the chief town of the department.

Niger, a celebrated river of Africa, rising near Mount Lamba in the country of the Soulimas, on the northern declivities of the Kong Mountains. No geographical problem ever presented a more fruitful subject for conjecture, doubt, hypothesis, and research, both critical and experimental, than the course and termination of this mysterious river. Until the travels of Mungo Park in 1796 it was even disputed whether it flowed East or West. This traveller although he established the fact of its easterly direction, and proceeded some distance along its banks, yet was unable to make any further discovery respecting its termination. Attempts made by other travellers were followed by no better success, and Park in his second journey into the country lost his life. Many authors were of opinion that the river flowed into a great central lake, and had no communication with the sea; others sought for arguments to show that its waters were swallowed up by the sands of the desert; at one time the belief was very prevalent that it flowed a great distance south and ran into the ocean by the river Zaire or Congo; the British government even despatched an expedition under Captain Tuckey to proceed up the Congo and make discoveries, but nothing satisfactory was the result. The travels of Laing, Denham, and Clapperton failed to settle the long disputed point, and an impenetrable cloud of mystery continued to hang over the subject till 1830 when the grand discovery was effected by Richard and John Lander, the former of whom had been the servant of Clapperton in his African travels, and who attended him on the expedition in which he lost his life.

These travellers in March 1830 penetrated into the country till they reached the Niger, and proceeded down the stream till they arrived at the Bight of Benin, a termination which had been fixed upon many years before by a German theorist named Reichard, although his reasoning was grounded upon false data. The Niger, or Quorra, or Joliba, for it is called by all these names, is thus ascertained to flow into the Atlantic ocean in about 5. N. lat. It discharges its waters by several channels, forming a great delta like the Nile, Ganges and Mississippi; the channel by which the Landers arrived at the ocean, has been hitherto known as the river Nun, and the delta is 240 m. in extent along the coast, from the river Benin to that of Old Calabar; the inland extent of the delta is about the same, and the whole territory is intersected by various arms of the river, such as are called bayous on the lower course of the Mississippi. The banks of these streams are generally overflowed, and the land is covered with mangrove trees growing in the water; the whole surface is low, flat and swampy.

For the first half of its course the Niger flows in a N. E. course; between 15. and 16. N. lat. it turns to the E. and afterwards pursues a southerly direction to the sea. It flows by the cities of Sego, Jenne, Tombuctoo, Bousa, Yaoori, Nyfie, Rabba, Egga, and Kisnee, at which last place the delta commences. It receives from the N. E. a branch called the Tshadda, which the Landers saw in a state of inundation 2 or 3 miles in width. It is now very evident that neither Herodotus, Pliny or Ptolemy ever had any knowledge of this river, and that the name of Niger ought no longer to be applied to it. Its most common name in Africa is the Quorra.

Nigono, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena, 22 m. S. W. of Modena.

Nigritia. See Negroland.

Nile, a great river of Africa, which, according to the most authentic accounts, rises in the mountains of the Moon. It runs through the lake Dembea, then makes a circuit towards its source, which it leaves 25 m. to the E., and enters into Nubia, through which country it takes a circuitous course, and forms some considerable cataracts. It then flows almost directly S. through Egypt, till it arrives at Cairo; and a little below that city it divides into two great branches, which with the Mediterranean Sea, forms the island called Delta. The ancients reckoned eleven mouths of the Nile, of which seven were considerable; but at present there are only two that are at all times navigable, and those are at Rosetta and Damietta. The fertility of Egypt depends upon the overflowing of the Nile, which takes place regularly every year, from the 15th of June to the 17th of September, when it begins to decrease. It is caused by the periodical rains that fall between the tropics, and more particularly in Abyssinia, which is full of high mountains. In Cairo there is a za nal called Khalis, which is opened when the water is high enough; thence it is conveyed into reservoirs and cisterns, and is afterwards distributed into the fields and gardens, as occasion requires.

Nile, a township of Scioto Co. Ohio.

Nimeguen, a town of the Netherlands, in Guelderland, with a citadel, an ancient palace, and several forts. The churches are in general handsome structures; and the town-house is remarkable for its beauty and magnificence. The inhabitants subsist chiefly by brewing ale, and their trade with Germany. The city is celebrated in history on account of several treaties of peace concluded here, particularly in 1678. It was taken by the French in 1794. It stands on the Waal, 35 m. E. S. E. of Utrecht. Long. 5. 51. E., lat. 51. 52. N.

Nimishillen, a township of Stark Co. Ohio.

Nimptsch, a town of Prussian Silesia, which gives name to a circle in the principality of Brieg. It has a castle on an eminence and is seated on the Loch, 26 m. S. W. of Breslau.

Nineveh, p.v. Frederick Co. Va.

Ning-koue, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan, noted for its manufactures of paper, made of a species of reed. Its district is very hilly, but pleasant; and the surrounding mountains, covered with woods, produce excellent medicinal plants. It is seated on a river, which runs into the Kiang-hu, 537 m. S. by E. of Pekin. Long. 118. 25. E., lat. 31. 2. N.

Ning-po, called by Europeans Liampo, an excellent sea-port of China, and a city of the first rank in the province of Tehe-kiang. The silks manufactured here are much esteemed in foreign countries especially in Japan, where they are exchanged by the Chinese for copper, gold, and silver. It is seated on the E. coast, opposite Japan, 660 m. S. S. E. of Pekin. Long. 120. 18. E., lat. 29. 58. N.

Ninguta, a city of Eastern Tartary, in the province of Kirin, with considerable trade, particularly in the valuable plant ginseng, which abounds in the neighbourhood. It is seated on the Hurha, 110 m. N. E. of Kirin. Long. 124. 40. E., lat. 44. 30. N.

Ninian, St. a town of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, with manufactures of leather, cotton cloth, and nails. 2 m. S. E. of Stirling.

Ninove, a town of the Netherlands, in E. Flanders, on the Dender, 13 m. W. of Brussels.

Nio, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the S. of Naxia, anciently called Nos. It is 35 m. in circumference, and fertile in corn, but has very little wood or oil. The regular manners of the inhabitants, who are all Greeks, revives an idea of the simplicity of the primitive ages; and their kind treatment of strangers appears to be the genuine remains of ancient hospitality.

Nion, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, with a manufacture of beautiful porcelain. 12 m. N. by E. of Geneva.

Nions, a town of France, department of Drome, with a mineral spring called Pontias, and some manufactures of soap and woolen cloth. It is seated at the foot of a chain of mountains, on the river Aigues, 21 m. E. S. E. of Montelimart.

Niort, a town of France, capital of the department of Deux Sevres, with manufactures of druggets, serges, and other coarse woolen goods. It is seated on the Sevre Niortoise, 31 m. E. N. E. of Rochelle and 46 W. S. W. of Poitiers. Long. 0. 33. W., lat. 46. 20. N.

Nippon, the largest island of Japan, 750 m. long and from 150 to 300 broad, containing 55 provinces.

It was discovered in 1542, by the Portuguese, who were cast ashore by a tempest. The chief town is Jedo.

Nipissing, a lake of Upper Canada lying N. E. of Lake Huron, and flowing into it.

Nisknei-Novogorod. See Novogorod.

Nisibin, or Nisbin, a town and fortress of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbeck, now greatly decayed. It is seated in a vast plain, 78 m. S. E. of Diarbekir.

Nisida, a small island in the gulf of Naples, very fertile, and laid out in slopes and terraces like a large garden. It has a harbour, called Porto Pavone, 5 m. W. S. W. of Naples.

Niskajuna, a village in Schenectady Co. N. Y. 12 m. N. W. Albany, on the Mohawk, inhabited by the Shakers. It is built with great neatness and beauty upon a level spot of about 2,000 acres, divided into 4 farms. The fields are fenced in right lines, and everything displays the utmost order and regularity. The inhabitants dress in the usual Quaker drab, and cultivate garden stuffs, seeds, &c. They have also manufactures of various household wares which are executed with great skill and excellence. All their property is held in common. Pop. 446.

Nismes, a city of France, capital of the department of Gard, and a bishop's see. Here are numerous monuments of antiquity, of which the amphitheatre, built by the Romans, is the principal. There are likewise the ruins of a temple of Diana, and a grand tower. The Maison Quarree, or the Square House, is one of the finest pieces of architecture of the Corinthian order in the world. Here are manufactures of silk, stuffs, stockings, cloth, leather, &c., and a considerable trade in silk, corn, dried fruits, oil, and wine. It is seated in a plain, abounding in wine and oil, 75 m. N. E. of Narbonne. Long. 4. 19. E., lat. 43. 50. N.

Noirmoutier, an island of France, in the bay of Biscay, S. of the mouth of the river Loire. It is 12 m. long and 3 broad, and has good pastures. The principal town, of the same name, is defended by a fort. Long. 2. 10. W., lat. 47. 0. N.

Nola, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, once a rich Roman colony, and still a handsome place. The silk spun in its neighbourhood is much esteemed. It is 14 m. E. N. E. of Naples.

Nolensville, p.v. Williams Co. Ten.

Noli, a town of Sardinia, with a fort and a good harbour, 30 m. S. W. of Genoa. Long. 8. 41. E., lat. 44. 18. N.

Nombre de Dios, a town of Terra Firma, in the province of Darien, 30 m. E. of Porto Bello, to which its once flourishing trade is now transferred.

Nombre de Dios, a town of Mexico, the most populous in the province of Zacatecas. 170 m. N. of Guadalaxara. Long. 104. 15. W., lat. 24. 0. N.

Nomeny, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, on the Seille, 15 m. N. of Nancy

Nou, Cape, a promontory of the kingdom of Fez, opposite the Canary Islands. The Portuguese, in their first attempts to explore the W. coast of Africa, long considered this promontory as an impassable boundary. This its name imports; but they doubled it, at last, in 1412. Long. 11. 50. W., lat. 28. 38. N.

Nona, a sea-port of Dalmatia, and a bishop's see It was once a splendid city, but is now a mean place, and its harbour not capable of receiving large vessels. It is almost surrounded by the sea. 7 m. N. by W. of Zara.

Nontron, a town of France department of Dordogne, 21 m. N. of Perigueux.

Noopour, a town of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, 55 m. E. of Surat. Long. 73. 50. E., lat. 21. 11. N.

Norberg, a town of Sweden, in Westmanland near which are the best iron mines in the province. It is 34 m. N. of Stroemsholm. Long. 16. 12. E., lat. 60. 2. N.

Norcia, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto, seated among mountains, on the river Fredara, 20 m. S. E. of Spoleto.

Nord, a department of France, so named from its situation. It includes the greater part of the former divisions of Hainault, French Flanders, and Cambresis.

Nordburg, a town of Denmark, at the N. extremity of the isle of Alsen, with a castle 9 m. N. N. W. of Sunderburg.

Norden, a sea-port of Hanover, in Friesland, with a good harbour. It is 4 m. from the German Ocean and 14 N. of Emden.

Nordhausen, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Erfurt, with 7 Lutheran churches and a well-built orphan-house. It has a considerable trade in corn, brandy, and rape and lintseed oil, and manufactures of marble and alabaster. It was ceded to Prussia in 1802: and is seated on the Zorge, 35 m. N. N. E. of Erfurt. Long. 10. 56. E., lat. 51. 30. N.

Nordheim, a town of Hanover, situate on the Rhume, at its conflux with the Leina, 10 m. N. of Gottingen.

Nordkiöping, a sea-port of Sweden, in Gothland It is 10 m. in circumference, but the houses are scattered, and the inhabitants do not exceed 12,000 The river Motala flows through the town, forms a series of cataracts, and is divided into four principal streams, which encircle several rocky islands covered with buildings; but at the extremity of the town it is navigable for large vessels. Here are manufactures of woolen cloth, paper, and firearms, some sugar-houses, and a brass foundry. Corn is exported hence in great quantities; and a salmon fishery gives employment and riches to many of the inhabitants. It is 110 m. S. W. of Stockholm. Long. 15. 50. E., lat. 58. 35. N.

Nordland, one of the ancient divisions of Sweden, bounded on the N. by Lapland, E. by the Gulf of Bothnia, S. by Sweden Proper, and W. by the same and Norway. It contains six provinces.

Nordland, a province of Norway, having the North Sea, on the W. and Swedish Lapland on the E.

Nordlingen, a town of Bavaria, fortified in the ancient manner. Here the league of the five western circles of the empire was concluded in 1702. In 1796 it was taken by the French. It is a commercial place, seated on the Eger, 38 m. N. W. of Augsburg. Long. 10. 34. E., lat. 48 50. N.

Nordmaling, a town of Sweden, in Angermannia, near a bay of the gulf of Bothnia, 24 m. S. W. of Uma, and 70 N. E. of Hermosand.

Nordstrand, an island of Denmark, on the W. coast of S. Jutland, 12 m. long and 5 broad. It has a town called Ham, 28 m. W. of Sleswick. Long. 0. 4. E., lat. 54. 40. N.

Nore, a noted part of the river Thames, situated off Sheerness, at the point of a sand bank which runs eastward from the Isle of Grain. It is the well known limit of the Cockneys' summer voyage. Long. 0. 44. E., lat. 51. 27. N.

Norfolk, a county of England, 77 m. long and 45 broad; bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean, S. E. and S. by Suffolk, and W. by Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire. It contains 1,094,400 acres, is divided into 33 hundreds and 600 parishes, has one city and 32 market towns, and sends 12 members to parliament. The products vary according to the soil and situation. The lighter arable lands produce barley in great plenty; wheat is cultivated in the strongest soils; and turnips are grown here in great quantities; buck-wheat is also grown on the light soils, and used for feeding swine and poultry. The fenny parts yield great quantities of butter, which is sent to London under the name of Cambridge butter. The sheep are a hardy small breed, much valued for their mutton. Poultry of all kinds are very plentiful, and the turkeys are reared here to a larger size than elsewhere; rabbits are extremely numerous on the sandy heaths; and there is abundance of game, especially of pheasants. The principal manufactures of the county are silks, bombazines, crapes, camlets, &c. It is watered by the Great Ouse, Nen, Little Ouse, Waveney, Yare, Bure, and some smaller streams. Norwich is the capital.

Norfolk, a county of Massachusetts lying on Boston Bay. Pop. 41,901. Dedham is the capital; a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 14,993. Portsmouth is the capital.

Norfolk, p.t. Norfolk Co. Va., the chief commercial town of Virginia. It stands on a good harbour at the mouth of James river. The situation is low and the neighbourhood is marshy. The buildings are not remarkable for elegance, but some of the churches are neat. The streets are irregular. Here are 6 churches, 3 banks, a marine hospital, and a theatre. The harbour is strongly defended. On the opposite side is a Navy Yard of the United States with a dry dock situated within the limits of the town of Gosport. Pop. 9,816.

Norfolk, p.v. Litchfield Co. Conn. 34 m. N. W. Hartford. Pop. 1,485; p.v. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,039.

Norfolk Island, an island in the S. Pacific, lying E. of New S. Wales, and settled by a colony of convicts, subordinate to that government. It was discovered in 1774 by captain Cook, who found it uninhabited, except by birds. It is very hilly, but some of the valleys are tolerably large. Mount Pitt, the only remarkable hill, is 12,000 feet high. The whole island is covered by a thick forest, but has not much underwood; and the principal timber tree is the pine, which is very useful in buildings, and seems to be durable. The island is supplied with many streams of good water, which abounds with many fine eels. The cliffs round the coast are 240 feet high, quite perpendicular; and anchorage is safe all round the island, on taking the lee side; but there is no harbour, and from the heavy seas which constantly beat upon the shore, there is great difficulty in approaching it, in consequence of which the settlers are encouraged to remove to Port Dalrymple or the Derwent River, in New Holland, where the greater part of the military and convicts were removed in 1805. Long. 168. 12. E., lat. 29. 5. S.

Norham, a village in Durham, Eng. Its castle, on the edge of a rock above the Tweed, has been many times taken and destroyed by the Scotch, and as often rebuilt by the English. 6 m. S. W. of Berwick.

Normandy, a former province of France, now forming the departments of Calvados, Eure, Manche, Orne, and Lower Seine. The Normans, a people of Denmark and Norway, having entered France under Rollo, Charles the Simple ceded this country to them in 912, which from that time was called Normandy. Rollo, the first duke held it as a fief of the crown of France, as did several of his successors after him. In 1066, William the 7th duke having conquered England, it became a province of that country, till it was lost in the reign of king John, and re-united to the crown of France. It is one of the most fertile provinces in France, and abounds in all things except wine, which defect is supplied by cider and perry. It contains iron, copper, and a great number of rivers and harbours.

Norridgecock, p.t. Somerset Co. Me., on the Kennebec. Pop. 1,710.

Norristown, p.t. Montgomery Co. Pa., on the Schuylkill, 17 m. above Philadelphia.

Nortelga, or Nor Telge, a sea-port of Sweden, in the Baltic. It suffered much from ravages committed by the Russians in 1719. Near it is a forge for making fire arms. 30 m. N. E. of Stockholm. Long. 10. 32. E., lat. 50. 44. N.

North Allerton, a borough in N. Yorkshire, Eng. Near this place was fought the celebrated battle between the English and Scots called the Battle of the Standard, in 1138. It is seated in a delightful valley 222 m. N. by W. of London.

North Cape, an enormous rock at the N. end of the island Mageroe, on the coast of Norway, and the most northern promontory of Europe. Long. 25. 57. E., lat. 71. 10. N.

North Sea. See German Ocean.

Northampton, a borough and the capital of Northamptonshire, Eng. It was formerly surrounded by a wall, and had a castle, of which there are still some remains. In 1675 it was almost entirely destroyed by fire, but was soon rebuilt. The houses are uniformly built of freestone and chiefly slated; the streets are regular, and the town is lighted with gas. It has 4 churches, 8 dissenting meeting houses, a capacious market-place, a good free school, a general infirmary, and a county gaol on the principles of Mr. Howard. The principal manufacture consists of boots and shoes, chiefly for exportation. In the meadows below the town a battle was fought in 1460 between Henry VI. and the Yorkists in which the former was defeated and made prisoner. Two miles to the S. is a fine ancient Gothic structure called Queen's Cross, erected by Edward I., in memory of his queen Eleanor. Northampton is seated on the Nen, 30 m. S. E. of Coventry and 66 N. W. of London.

Northamptonshire, a county of England, 65 m long and 24 where broadest; bounded S. by Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire. In the N. E. part, near Peterborough, commences a fenny tract, extending to the Lincolnshire Wash. With this single exception, Northamptonshire is said to contain less waste ground, and more seats of the nobility and gentry, than any other county. Its greatest defect is a scarcity of fuel, which is but scantily supplied by its woods; and, though coal is brought by the river Nen, it is at a very dear rate. This county, however, possesses some considerable remains of its old forests, particularly those of Rockingham on the N. W.; and of Salcey and Whittlebury on the S. Its products are, in general, the same with those of other farming counties; but it is peculiarly celebrated for grazing land. Woad for the dyers is cultivated here, but the country is not distinguished for manufactures.

Northfleet, a village in Kent, Eng. seated on the Thames, 2 m. W. of Gravesend. The church contains fragments of monuments as ancient as the 14th century. Vast quantities of lime are made here, and great numbers of extraneous fossils have been dug up.

Northleach, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. seated near the source of the Lech, 25 m. E. of Gloucester and 81 W. by N. of London.

Northop, a village of Wales, in Flintshire, 3 m. S. E. of Flint; noted for its manufactures of coarse earthenware, firebricks, &c.

Northumberland, the most northern county of England. In the Saxon heptarchy it was a part of the kingdom of the Northumbrians, which contained also the counties of York, Lancaster, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, and received its name from being situate N. of the Humber. It is of a triangular form, 64 m. in extreme length and 50 in extreme breadth; bounded on the E. by the German Ocean. The soil is various; the E. part is fruitful in most sorts of corn, with rich meadows on the banks of the rivers; but the W. part is mostly heathy and mountainous. The S. E. part abounds with thick seams of coal; and the S. W. angle has rich lead mines. Limestone and iron ore abound in various parts. Alnwick is the capital; but the largest town is Newcastle.

Northumberland Islands, a chain of islands in the S. Pacific, near the N. E. coast of New Holland. Long. 150. E., lat. 22. S.

Northumberland Strait, the S. part of the gulf of St. Lawrence, between the island of St. John and the coast of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Northwich, a town in Cheshire, Eng. with a cotton manufacture, and considerable salt-works; seated on the Dan, at its junction with the Weaver, 20 m. N. E. of Chester and 174 N. W. of London.

Norton Sound, an inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of N. America, discovered by Cook in his last voyage. The entrance is between Cape Denbigh on the E. and Cape Danby on the W., about 70 m. distant, both lying in lat. 64. 30. N., and the latter in long. 162. 55. W.

North, a township of Harrison Co. Ohio. Pop. 1,215.

North Amenia, p.v. Dutchess, Co. N. Y.

Northampton, a town of England, the capital of Northamptonshire, with some manufactures. It stands on the Nen, 66 m. N. W. London.

Northamptonshire, a county of England containing 1,017 sq. m. Pop. 162,483.

Northampton, p.t. Hampshire Co. Mass. on the Connecticut, 95 m. W. Boston. Pop. 3,613. It is handsomely built, and very pleasantly situated in the neighbourhood of Mount Holyoke, which see. Here are woolen manufactures. The Farmington Canal is designed to extend from New Haven to this place.

Northampton, a township of Montgomery Co. N. Y. 60 m. N. W. Albany. Pop. 1,392; a township in Bucks Co. Pa. and Burlington Co. N. J.; p.t. Lehigh Co. Pa. 55 m. N. W. Philad.; p.v. Postage Co. Ohio; p.v. Northampton Co. N. C.

Northampton, a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 8,644. Eastville is the capital; a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 13,103.

North Bridgewater, p.t. Plymouth Co. Mass. 22 m. S. Boston. Pop. 1,953.

North Bend, p.v. Hamilton Co. Ohio. on the Ohio, in the S. W. corner of the state.

North Carolina, one of the United States, bounded N. by Virginia, E. by the ocean, S. by the ocean and S. Carolina and W. by Tennessee. It extends from 33. 50. to 36. 30. N. lat. and from 75. 45. to 84. W. long. 435 m. in length from E. to W. and 180 in breadth. It contains 43,800 sq. m. Nearly all the state is level: in the west the Blue Ridge of mountains crosses the country from Virginia to S. Carolina. It is watered by the Chowan and Roanoke rivers which rise in Virginia and flows through this state into Albermarle Sound; by the Pamlico and Cape Fear rivers which flow to the sea in the eastern and southern parts, and the Yadkin which passes into S. Carolina. A number of low sandy islands are scattered along the coast and inclose several large sounds, as Pamlico, Albermarle and Currituck; yet the entrances to these, and the mouths of the rivers are obstructed with shoals, and there is not a good harbour in the state. The soil is to a great extent sandy and poor, with extensive swampy tracts; there are however, fertile districts here and there, and the banks of the rivers are generally productive. In the western parts the soil is much the best. The Great Dismal Swamp lies between this state and Virginia and covers a space of 150,000 acres. In its neighbourhood is another called the Little Dismal Swamp.

The mineral region of this state has lately attracted great attention. Mines of gold have been discovered which have already proved highly productive: these mines are not confined to the limits of North Carolina but extend into the adjoining states of Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama. They are computed to cover more than 1,000 sq. m. of surface. The mines in this state are very active and employ about 20,000 men. They are not sunk very deep but are wrought extensively in a horizontal direction. The gold is also found on the surface, in grains among the sand and gravel, and is obtained by washing the earth. The particles seldom exceed in size the head of a pin, although occasionally larger pieces are found, and in one instance a lump weighing 28 pounds was discovered. There are a great number of mills in this state for grinding the ore, which are driven by water or steam. The greater part of the gold is sent to Europe. The quantity afforded by all the mines is not known with any accuracy, although many exaggerated statements have been made respecting it, some of which state the amount as high as 5,000,000 dollars annually.

A great part of the country is covered with forests of pitch pine. In the plains of the low country, this tree is almost exclusively the natural growth of the soil. It much exceeds in height, the pitch pine of the Northern States. The tar, turpentine and lumber, afforded by this valuable tree, constitute one half the exports of the state. The moisture of the air, in the swampy regions, loads the trees with long, spongy moss, which hangs in clusters from the limbs, and gives the forest a singular appearance. The mistletoe is often found upon the trees of the interior. This state also produces several valuable medicinal roots, as ginseng, Virginia, and Seneca snakeroot, &c. The rich intervals are overgrown with canes, the leaves of which continue green through the winter, and afford good fodder for cattle.

The most common articles of culture are maize and wheat, to which the nature of the soil seems well adapted. Some attention is paid to cotton and rice. Tobacco is raised in the uplands, as well as most of the productions of the Middle States. Agricultural societies exist in different parts of the state, and sums of money are annually paid by the government for their assistance. Agriculture, however, is in a backward condition.

The produce of the interior is generally carried to the trading towns in Virginia and South Carolina for a market. Timber and plank, grain, flour and naval stores are the chief exports. The shipping of the state amounted in 1828, to 54,094 tons. The imports for the same period, were 283,347 dollars; the exports of domestic produce, 564,506 dollars.

In the mountainous parts of the west, the climate is temperate, and the air salubrious; this region is one of the most healthy in the country, and though the days in summer are hot, the nights are refreshed by cool breezes. In all the eastern parts, the climate is unhealthy, and intermittent fevers are common in summer and autumn. The inhabitants have a pale, yellowish, and bilious complexion. The winters are very mild. The wheat harvest takes place in the beginning of June; and the maize harvest early in September.

North Carolina is divided into 62 counties. The population is 738,470, of whom 246,462 are slaves. Raleigh is the capital. The other large towns are Newbern, Wilmington and Fayetteville. The legislature is styled the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and a House of Commons. Each county chooses one senator and two representatives. The governor is chosen annually by the legislature, and is ineligible three years out of six. Voters for senators must be freeholders. The clergy are excluded from the legislature. The Baptists are the most numerous religious sect; they have 272 churches; the Presbyterians 126; the Lutherans 45; the Episcopalians 11; and the United Brethren 4. The Methodists have 32 preachers, and there are a number of societies of Quakers. The state has a university at Chapel Hill, and a small literary fund, but which is not yet available for the purpose of education.

The first permanent settlements in North Carolina were made by fugitives and seceders from Virginia, between 1640 and 1650. The constitution was the work of the celebrated John Locke. The chief magistrate was called the Palatine, and there was an hereditary nobility, with the titles of Landgrave and Cazique. The legislature was called a parliament. This constitution was found upon trial to be ill adapted to the character of the people, and it was abolished in 1693. This colony had been connected with that of South Carolina, till 1729, when they were separated, and the government of both was assumed by the king. This continued till the present constitution was established in 1776.

Norway, a country in the N. of Europe, belonging to Sweden, the most westerly part of the ancient Scandinavia. It is bounded on the W. and N. by the Northern Ocean, E. by Swedish Lapland and Sweden, and S. by the Catteगत extending from the Naze in lat. 57. 30., to the N. Cape in lat. 71. 10. Its breadth, which is very unequal, is from 40 to 280 m. It is naturally formed into two divisions, namely, Northern and Southern or Proper Norway, separated from each other by the small Swedish province of Herndahl. It is divided into the four governments of Aggerhuys, Christiania or Christiansand, Bergen, and Drontheim. From its rocky soil, and northern position, Norway is not populous in proportion to its extent. The number of inhabitants is calculated at 1,000,000, who like the Swiss mountaineers, are exceedingly attached to their country. In Norway, they have a particular code, called the Norway Law, compiled by Greffelfeld, at the command of Christian V., the great legislator of this country. By this law,—the palladium of Norway, the peasants are free-born. They possess much spirit and fire in their manner; are frank, open and undaunted, yet not insolent; never fawning, yet paying proper respect. Their principal mode of salute is by offering their hand; and, when they are given or paid any trifle, the peasants, instead of returning thanks by words, or by a bow, shake hands with great frankness and cordiality. The same causes which affect the population of Norway operate likewise on the state of tillage; for, although in some places vegetation is so quick that the corn is sown and cut in six or seven weeks, yet the country does not produce sufficient corn for its own consumption. It is, however, exceedingly rich in pasture, and consequently produces much cattle. The horses are small, but strong, very active, and hardy. The fisheries, particularly on the W. coast, find employment and wealth for the natives, and supply the finest sailors for the Danish fleet. The principal fish are salmon, cod, ling, and whiting; their livers also yield train-oil; and the smallest are given as winter fodder to the cattle. The extensive forests of oak and pine produce timber, spars, beams, and planks, besides charcoal, turpentine, bark, fuel, and even manure; and the birch (the bark of which is used as a covering for the roofs of houses) not only supplies fuel, but also a kind of wine. The general exports are tallow, butter, dried fish, timber, planks, horses, horned cattle, silver, cobalt, alum, Prussian blue, copper, and iron. It abounds in lakes and rivers; the former so large that they appear like inlets of the sea; but the rivers are in general of a short course, except the Glommen. The mountains are numerous, and generally clothed with pines and firs; the grand Scandinavian chain, which runs from S. to N., is known by distinct appellations; the chief are the ridges of Langfial, Dofrafial, Kolen, and Severnoi. The wild animals are the bear, lynx, wolf, fox, and hare; but the most singular creature is the lemming, or Norwegian mouse, of a reddish colour, and about five inches long. These animals proceed in vast numbers from the ridge of Kolen to the sea, devouring every product of the soil in their course, and at last seem to devour each other.

Norway was formerly governed by its own hereditary sovereigns. On the demise of Hasen V., in 1319, without male issue, his grandson in the female line, Magnus Smek, united in his person the kingdoms of Swedish and Norway. Magnus was succeeded in the kingdom of Norway by his son Haagen VI., husband of the celebrated Margaret, and at his decease, in 1380, Norway was united to Denmark by their son Olof V., who dying, without issue, Margaret herself was raised to the throne by the unanimous voice of the nation. On her death it descended with Denmark and Sweden to her nephew Eric. Sweden was afterwards separated from Denmark by the valour and address of Gustavus Vasa. By the treaty of Kiel, in January, 1814, Norway was ceded by the king of Denmark to Sweden; but the people, not approving of the cession, had recourse to arms, in order to resist the entrance of the Swedish troops into their country; and the diet elected Prince Christian, the king of Denmark's son, who was then governor, to the throne. However, on the conclusion of the war with France, the allied powers, who had previously promised this country to Sweden, if she would take an active part in the coalition against the French empire, now did all in their power to enforce the cession. For this purpose a considerable body of their troops was marched into the Danish territories on the continent, to watch that power, and all the ports of Norway were blockaded by the Swedish and English fleets by sea, while the Swedish army, under the crown prince, entered Norway by land. Amidst such united efforts, it was not to be expected that the brave Norwegians could hold out long. After the capture of Frederickstadt, and the passage of the Glommen by the Swedes, Prince Christian proposed to resign his crown into the hands of the Diet: and on the 20th of October, 1814, that assembly came to the resolution that Norway should be governed by the king of Sweden, but as an integral state, preserving its constitution and laws, to which Sweden assented. Christiania is the capital.

Norwich, a city and county of England, the capital of Norfolk, and a bishop's see. It was formerly surrounded by a strong wall, of which some ruins still remain. Many of the streets are still narrow and ill-disposed, though during the last 10 years considerable improvements have been effected. Besides the cathedral, which is one of the most spacious and elegant in the kingdom, here are 32 parish churches, two churches for the Flemings, a number of dissenting meeting-houses, and two Roman Catholic chapels. On a hill, commanding an extensive view of the city, is the castle, an ancient and stately edifice. Near this city, on Mousehold Heath, are the ruins of the castle of Kett, the tanner, by whose rebellion, in the reign of Edward VI., the city was reduced to a ruinous state. Norwich has extensive manufactures of crapes, bombazines, and stuffs of various kinds and a considerable trade. It is seated on the river Yare, 22 m. W. of Yarmouth and 110 N. E. of London. Long. 1. 20. E., lat. 52. 40. N.

Pop. 5,169, this township comprises 3 villages, the largest of which is Chelsea Landing. Here are large manufactures of cotton, flannel, carpeting, paper, iron, linseed oil, &c. Here is an ancient aboriginal cemetery called the Burying Ground of the Uncas. Also a p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,374, and a township of Franklin Co. Ohio, on the Scioto, 8 m. above Columbus.

Nossen, a town of Saxony, on the Muldau, 18 m. W. of Dresden.

Notburg, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, seated on an island in the lake Ladoga, at the place where the Neva issues. It has a good citadel, and was capital of Ingria, before Petersburg was built. It is 25 m. E. of Petersburg. Long. 31. 9. E., lat. 59. 56. N.

Noto, a town of Sicily, capital of Val di Noto. It was ruined by an earthquake in 1693, and near it another town was built called Noto Nuovo. It is 22 m. S. W. of Syracuse. Long. 15. 19. E., lat. 36. 50. N.

Nottingham, a borough and the capital of Nottinghamshire, Eng. It is situate on the side and summit of a rock, into which are cut some small habitations, and numerous vaults or cellars. To the W. of the town, on a rocky eminence, is the castle, a magnificent modern structure, belonging to the duke of Newcastle, built on the site of an ancient fortress, celebrated in English history. It is a handsome town, distinguished by its spacious market-place, and noted for its excellent ale. It is one of the principal seats of the silk and cotton stocking manufacture; the lace manufacture is also very extensive. At this town Charles I. set up his standard, at the commencement of the civil war which terminated in his destruction. Nottingham is seated on a river, which communicates with the Trent, 1 m. to the S. It is 16 m. E. of Derby and 124 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 9. W., lat. 52. 58. N.

Nottoaway, a river of Virginia flowing into the Meherrin.

Nottinghamshire, a county of England, 48 m. long and 25 broad; bounded N. by Yorkshire. It enjoys such a temperature of soil and climate as to render it one of the most fertile and healthful counties in England. Almost the whole of the middle and western parts of the county were formerly occupied by the extensive forest of Sherwood, the only royal forest N. of the Trent; but the greater part is now enclosed and covered with thriving towns, cheerful villages, and extensive parks. The chief products of this county are coal, of which there is great plenty, gypsum, lead, grain of all sorts, cattle, malt, hops, wool, liquorice, and woad. The manufactures chiefly consists of hosiery, bobbin-net and net-lace, glass, and earthenware.

Nottoaway, a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 10,141.

Nova Scotia, a British province of N. America, which formerly, till 1784, included the province of New Brunswick. It is bounded on the S. and S. E. by the Atlantic, E. by the gut of Canzo, N.

by Northumberland Strait, and N. W. by New Brunswick and the bay of Fundy. Its length is 235 m. from Cape Sable on the S. W. to Cape Canso on the N. E. Its extreme breadth is 88 m. but the mean of the peninsular part is not more than 45. It has several lakes and a vast number of small rivers. It is a peninsula, lying S. E. of New Brunswick, and joined to it by a narrow isthmus, at the N. E. extremity of the bay of Fundy. The French settled here before they made any establishment in Canada, and called it Acadia. The first grant of lands was made to Sir William Alexander, by James I. of England, from whom it received the name of Nova Scotia. Since its first settlement it has more than once changed rulers and proprietors, nor was it confirmed to England till the peace of Utrecht in 1713. The inhabitants consists of English, Scotch, Irish, and a few Germans: recent accounts state them at 150,000, and they are rapidly increasing in number and prosperity. The soil is in many parts thin and sterile, but there are some tracts not inferior to the best lands in New England. Halifax is the capital.

Nova Zembla, an island in the Arctic Ocean separated from the continent of Russia by the strait of Waigatz. It is 540 m. in length and from 100 to 240 in breadth. This country was discovered by the English in 1553, and it has since been visited by ships attempting to discover a N. E. passage. In 1595, a Dutch vessel being cast away on the coast, the crew were obliged to winter here, and with great difficulty preserved their lives. The country is extremely desolate, producing no trees, nor any vegetables but moss and some few arctic plants. It is inhabited by wild beasts, particularly white bears, white foxes, elks, reindeer, and rabbits. The hunters from Archangel now generally winter here, and return home in summer with their cargoes of skins and furs. Long. 52. to 78. E., lat. 70. to 78. N.

Noralle, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Trevisano, 10 m. S. W. of Treviso.

Novara, a town of Italy, capital of a province of its name in the Sardinian Milanese. It contains 17 churches, besides the cathedral, and is seated on an eminence, 25 m. W. by S. of Milan.

Novellara, a town of Italy, in the Modenese, with a castle, 17 m. E. by N. of Parma and 18 m. N. N. W. of Modena.

Novi, a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, with a strong castle on a mountain. It is the principal deposit for goods coming from the Levant, which pass into Austrian Italy, and thence into the S. of Germany. Near this place, in 1799, the Austrians and Russians defeated the French, who lost their general (Joubert), and nearly 10,000 men. 25 m. N. by W. of Genoa.

Novi, a fortified town of Croatia, taken by the Austrians in 1789. It is seated on the right bank of the Unna, 52 m. S. E. of Carlstadt. Long. 16. 53. E., lat. 45. 8. N.

Novigrad, a town of Austrian Dalmatia, with a castle, seated on a lake of the same name, near the gulf of Venice, 17 m. E. of Nona and 25 N. W. of Zaro.

Novogorod, a city of Russia, capital of a govern ment of the same name, and formerly called Great Novogorod, to distinguish it from other towns of the same appellation. It was for a long time governed by its own dukes, and was in fact a republic, under the jurisdiction of a nominal sovereign. It was the great mart of trade between Russia and the Hanseatic cities, and made the most rapid advances in opulence and population. Its power was so great, and its situation so impregnable, as to give rise to a proverb: 'Who can resist the gods and Great Novogorod?' But in the 15th century this independent republic was obliged to submit to Ivan Basilowitz I., grand duke of Russia. It continued, nevertheless, the largest and most commercial city in Russia, and contained at least 400,000 inhabitants. It was first desolated by the cruelties of Ivan Basilowitz II.; but its splendor was not totally eclipsed until Peter the Great built Petersburg, to which he transferred all the commerce of the Baltic that had before centered here. It now contains scarcely 8,000 souls; and a vast number of churches and convents stand as melancholy monuments of its former magnificence. The town stretches on both sides of the Volkoff, a river of considerable depth and rapidity, which separates it into two divisions, namely the trading part and the quarter of St. Sophia; in the latter are the ruins of the cathedral, in which several princes of the ducal family of Russia are interred. Novogorod is situate near the N. end of the lake Ilmen, 120 m. S. S. E. of Petersburg. Long. 31. 45. E., lat. 53. 25. N.

Novogorod, Niznei, a city of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, and an archbishop's see. It has a castle, surrounded by stone walls, and two cathedrals, 28 parish churches, and five convents. The trade is considerable, and the shops richly furnished with all kinds of foreign and home goods. It is seated at the conflux of the Occa with the Volga, 250 m. E. by N. of Moscow.

Novogorod, Severskoi, a town of Russia, government of Czernigov, seated on the Desna, 80 m. E. N. E. of Czernigov.

Novogrodok, a town of Russian Lithuania, government of Grodno, seated on a hill in a vast plain, 80 m. S. by E. of Wilna. Long. 26. 8. E., lat. 53. 25. N.

Novomirgorod, a town of Russia, in the government of Catharineslaf, 160 m. N. N. W. of Cherson. Long. 31. 44. E., lat. 48. 40. N.

Nutra, a town of Austrian Poland, near which are mines of gold and silver. 30 m. S. of Cracow.

Noya, a town of Spain, in Galicia. The chief trade is in ship-building. It stands at the mouth of the Tambo, 15 m. W. of Compostella.

Noyers, a town of France, department of Yonne, with a castle; seated on the Serin, 19 m. E. S. E. of Auxerre.

Noyon, a town of the department of Oise, the birth-place of the celebrated Calvin. It is an episcopal see, and is seated near the Oise, 25 m. N. W. of Soissons and 70 N. by E. of Paris.

Noranton, a village in Newcastle Co. Del. 22 m. S. W. Wilmington.

Noceroy, a town in the department of Jura, with a castle on a mountain, 20 m. S. E. of Salins.

Nubia, a country of Africa, bounded on the N. by Egypt, E. by the Red Sea, S. by Abyssinia and Darfoor, and W. by Bornou. It is about 600 m. in length and 450 in breadth. The Nile runs through it, on the banks of which it is fruitful, but in other places barren, sandy, and destitute of water. The inhabitants make their bread and drink of a small round seed called doca, or seff, which is a kind of millet. Their houses have mud walls, are very low, and covered with reeds. The dress of the better sort is a vest without sleeves, and they have no coverings for their heads, legs, or feet. The common people wrap a piece of linen cloth about them, and the children go quite naked. They are described as a stupid and debauched people, but profess to be Mahometans. The productions of the country are gold, elephants' teeth, civit, and sandal wood; and a great many slaves are sent into Egypt.

Nuez, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon, on the borders of Portugal, 15 m. E. of Braganza and 48 W. of Zamora.

Nuits, a town of France, department of Cote d'Or, famous for its excellent wines. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, 15 m. S. S. W. of Dijon.

Nun, or Nled de Nun, an extensive country of Africa, of which the emperor of Morocco arrogates to himself the sovereignty, but his real authority is extremely feeble. It is inhabited by different tribes of Arabs, whose camps are scattered over such interior parts of the country as are capable of cultivation.

Nun, a river of Africa running into the Bight of Benin, now ascertained to be one of the mouths of the great river Quorra or Niger. See Niger.

Nunda, p.t. Alleghany Co. N. Y. 256 m. W. Albany. Pop. 1,291.

Nundydroog, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in Mysore. It is built on the summit of a mountain, 1,700 feet in height, the greater part inaccessible; but was besieged and taken by the English, under lord Cornwallis, in 1792. It is 70 m. N. of Seringapatam.

Nunetou, a town in Warwickshire, Eng. with manufactures of woolen cloth and ribands. It was formerly noted for its nunery, and is seated on the river Anker, 9 m. N. by E. of Coventry and 98 N. W. of London.

Nunjagodu, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a ruinous fort, and a large square temple. It is situate in the fork formed by the junction of Kaundini with the Kapini, 12 m. S. by E. of Mysore.

Nunny, a village in Somersetshire, Eng. 3 m. S. W. of Frome. Here are the ruins of a strong castle, the shell of which still remains nearly perfect. It was burnt by the parliament forces in 1645.

Nurenberg, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Rezat. It is surrounded by an old wall and ditch, more than 3 m. in circumference, formerly flanked with 365 towers; and through the middle of the town flows the river Pegnitz, over which are six stone bridges and several of wood. The inhabitants are very industrious, and their maps and prints, as well as their musical and mathematical instruments are in high esteem; nor are they less curious in clock-work, and in the several manufactures of iron, steel, ivory, wood, and alabaster. The toys commonly known in England by the name of Dutch toys are also made here. Among the public institutions are a famous academy for painting, an anatomical theatre, and a public library. The ancient castle or palace is still standing at the extremity of the city, and the arsenal is one of the best in Germany. The houses are built of freestone, and are four or five stories high. Nu renberg was given to Bavaria by the treaty of Tilsit in 1807. It is 95 m. N. by W. of Munich and 250 W. N. W. of Vienna. Long. 11. 4. E., lat.

49. 27. N.

Nurtingen, a town of Wurtemberg with an hospital, founded in 1481, said to be the richest foundation in the kingdom. It is situate on the Neckar, 14 m. S. E. of Stuttgart.

Nusserpour, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Sindy.
It is situate on the Sinde, 53 m. N. E. of Tatta. Long. 69. 10. E., lat. 25. 25. N.

Nyborg, a sea-port of Denmark, on the E. coast of the isle of Funen. The remains of the old palace, in which Christian II. was born, now serve for a magazine and arsenal. It is seated on a bay of the Great Belt, 10 m. E. of Odensee. Long.
10. 40. E., lat. 55. 30. N.

Nyland, a province of European Russia, in Finland, lying on the gulf of Finland, to the W. of Carelia. It is 120 m. long and from 30 to 60 broad; and is a fertile pleasant country, being better peopled and cultivated than the neighbouring provinces. The inhabitants (about 115,000) carry on some trade in corn, cattle, planks, linen, and dried fish.

Nyström, a town of Russia, in the government of Wiburg, on the lake Saima. The castle, which stands on a rock in a river, near the town, is strongly fortified by nature and art. It was taken by the Russians in 1714, restored to the Swedes at the peace of Nyström, but finally given up to the Russians by the treaty of Abo in 1743. 50

Oceanica, a name introduced by Malte Brun, to designate a fifth grand division of the globe, comprising the islands of the Indian Seas and the Pacific Ocean, with the continent of New Holland, and all the Antarctic regions. The limits and general character of this division of the earth are described by this celebrated geographer in the following words.

The Chinese Sea separates Asia from the great ocean, as the Mediterranean separates Africa from Europe. To the west we continue the boundary line through the strait of Malacca, and then turning round the north point of Sumatra, we proceed to the point where the 92d meridian east from London crosses the equator. Through the whole southern hemisphere, that meridian will form a convenient division between the seas of New Holland and those of Madagascar and Africa. The islands of Amsterdam and St. Paul will, on this principle, remain connected with the Archipelago of the Indian Ocean. When we leave the Chinese Sea to the north, the channel between Formosa and the Philippines being the broadest, marks the natural boundary. From this we draw a line which, following that part of the waters which in most of islands, separates the Japanese seas to a distance of 300 or 450 m., and reaches the point of intersection of the 40th parallel of north latitude with the 152d meridian. The 40th parallel will continue to bound the new division of the world, till we come to the point where it is crossed by the 15th western meridian from London. Taking our departure from this point, we separate the North American seas from those of the Oceanic Archipelago by the shortest line that can be drawn from this to the point of intersection of the 10th western meridian and the equator. This meridian will be our boundary through the southern hemisphere.

The fifth part of the world thus determined is found to be situated in the Great Ocean, that which, of all others, is THE OCEAN, by way of eminence. This essential character is not common to it with any other division of the globe: it is a character which impresses a special physiognomy on its geography, as well as on its natural and its civil history. It is therefore worthy of being made the foundation of its name. It will be called OCEANICA, and its inhabitants Oceanians; names which will supersede the unmeaning or inaccurate designations of Anstralia, Notasia, Austral India, and Australia. New Holland has not one Asiatic feature. Extending the principle of the nomenclature which is in present use, we ought to call Africa "Occidental Asia." This designation would be equally correct with those others. There is no occasion for perpetuating the memory of the pretended Terra Australis, in the name of a part of the world which is not exclusively situated on the Austral (or southern) hemisphere. The happier term of Polynesia will be preserved for that subdivision of Oceanica to which it has been specially applied.

The great countries of Oceanica are exposed to the influence of a vertical sun. It is probable that New Holland, unless it contains inland seas, has a climate as hot and arid as Africa. The marshy shores of some islands in the north-west of Oceanica, exposed to an intense heat, generate a pestiferous air, which may be corrected by human cultivation. Notwithstanding these local inconveniences, Oceanica presents to the industrious, the healthy, and the temperate, a greater diversity of delightful climates than any other part of the world. Such islands as are small and elevated resemble so many paradises. By selecting localities with the proper elevations, the Englishman may find his fresh lawns and his moss-covered trees, the Italian his orange-groves, and the West Indian planter his fields of sugar cane. The small extent of these islands procures for them the temperature of the ocean. The heat never becomes insupportable, even for northern Europeans. The air is continually renewed by the light sea and land breezes, dividing the empire of day and night. Their perpetual spring is rarely disturbed by hurricanes or earthquakes. None of the great races of quadrupeds, either of Asia or New Holland, has extended to the small islands of Polynesia. The pig is the only one found everywhere domesticated, and is the same species as in India and China. Dogs, cats, and rats, formed the whole quadruped class in these islands before Captain Cook supplied them with goats and cattle. Ornithology offers, through the whole of Oceanica, a little more variety, along with many features of mutual resemblance.

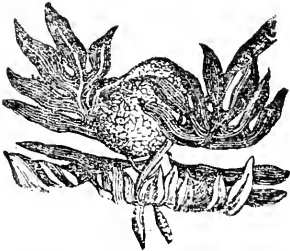

The vegetable kingdom of Oceanica presents to us all the riches of India in new splendour, and accompanied by new pleasures unknown to Asia. In the Sunda islands, the Philippines, and the Moluccas, rice occupies the place of wheat; and the culture of it is probably extended over New Guinea. Further to the east, in the islands of Polynesia, there are four exceedingly useful esculent plants, which grow either spontaneously, or under the influence of culture; the potato, the yam, and two species of arum, from which, by culture and boiling, a sweet farinaceous substance is obtained.

Two orders of trees are spread over all the middle and small islands of Oceanica, which delight both the eye and the taste. The numerous family of the palms is extended over the most remote and smallest islands. Between the tropics there is scarcely a rock or a sand-bank on which these trees do not display their astonishing vegetation. The palms have, in the interior structure of their trunks, no analogy with other trees. In habit and in structure they resemble the ferns, in their blossom the grasses, and the asparagi in their mode of fructification. But no trees are so portly and magnificent as the palms. They present a straight column, perfectly cylindrical, crowned at the summit with a vast load of sprightly leaves, arranged in circles over one another, and put forth from their common receptacle large panicles, partially inclosed in ample sheaths, and loaded with flowers and with fruit. But their majestic appearance is their least merit. Their beauty is surpassed by their usefulness. The external layers of the trunk furnish a hard and heavy wood, which may be formed into planks and stakes. The sheaths which contain the clusters of fruit acquire such thickness and consistence that they are often used as vessels. The large leaves are employed for roofing wigwams and cottages. Materials for wadding, flock, and cordage, are furnished by the fibrous pericarp of the cocoa-tree, by the leaf stalks of several other species, and by the filamentous tissue which, in all of them, covers the trunk. Of these are made ropes, cables, and even sail-cloth, and they are used as oakum in caulking vessels. The leaves of the Macaw tree (latinier) serve for fans to the Indian fair ones; those of the Borassus flabelliformis furnish parasols which can cover ten people at a time. The leaves of some palms are used for writing on: the shell of the cocoa-nut supplies us with a natural cup. This order of trees furnishes a number of excellent dishes. The sweet and pulpy substance surrounding the shells of some is eaten and pressed in a variety of forms: such are the Areca catechu and the Phoenix dactylifera. In some, as the cocoa-nut, the perisperm or cotyledonous matter, while in others, as the cabbage palm, or Areca olivacea, the terminal leaf-bud is used as a pot-herb. The milky liquid contained in the large cavity of the cocoa-nut is capable of being converted into wine, vinegar, and alcohol. From the same fruit a good oil is procured.

Another family of nutritious trees enjoyed by the Oceanian nations is that of the Artocarpus or bread-fruit trees. This valuable genus rises to a height of forty feet. Its trunk acquires the thickness of the human body. The fruit is as large as as a child's head. Gathered before it is fully ripe, and baked among ashes, it becomes a wholesome bread, resembling fresh wheaten bread in taste. For a period of eight months, this tree yields its fruit in such profusion, that three of them will support a man for a year. The inner bark of the same tree is manufactured into a kind of cloth. Its wood is well adapted for building cottages and canoes. Its leaves are used as napkins; its glutinous and milky juice furnishes good cement and glue.

The inhabitants of Oceanica seem to be referable to two stocks, totally distinct both in physiognomy and in language; the Malays, or Ye'low Oceanians, and the Oceanian Negroes.

The Malays are no longer considered by the learned as having originally come from the peninsula of Malacca: it is now understood that it was not till a comparatively recent period that they became inhabitants of that country. Their national historians trace their origin to the island of Sumatra; they also describe them as connected with the Javanese; but we find them at present extending over numerous countries. Not only are all the inhabitants of the maritime parts of Borneo, Celebes, Luzon, and the Moluccas, of the Malay race; but the innumerable tribes of Polynesia, or eastern Oceanica, seem to have the same origin. Although the Marians are 5,500 m. from Easter Island, and though Owyhee is at nearly an equal distance from New Zealand, we have a collection of facts, authenticated by the concurring testimony of numerous observers, which force us to regard the families disseminated over this wide region as having a common origin.

The islanders have tawny complexions, varying a little in the different tribes, independently of any ascertainable circumstances in their habits of life or their climate. The fairest are generally in the most westerly regions; some of them, as the Battas of Sumatra, are directly under the equator. The hair of the head is long, lank, rough, and always black. The hair of the beard, and in general of every part except the head, is scanty. They are in the practice of plucking out that of the beard in their youth. The Mahometan priests, affecting to wear long beards, cultivate them to the best of their power, but not with so much success as to escape ridicule. Their persons are short, squat, and robust; their lower limbs somewhat large, but not ill-formed. The busts of the females are much inferior in symmetry to those of the women of Indostan. The face is round, the mouth wide, the teeth remarkably good, the chin square, the cheek bones high, the cheeks rather hollow. The nose is short and small, never prominent, but never flat; the eyes are small, and like those of other Orientals, always black. They are an ill-looking people compared to the Arabs, Birmanians, and Siamese. They are less handsomely formed than the Chinese, but have much better features.

Differences in colour and in the appearance of the hair have been observed between the great and the common people in Otaheite, which led Forster to believe that a Malay colony had subdued in these islands some prior negro tribes, of the race which inhabits New Guinea and New Holland. But others may, with some probability, ascribe this difference to habit and diet, as the great live on the flesh of quadrupeds, and the common people chiefly on fish.

The similarity of the languages, as exhibited in the very imperfect vocabularies given by Forster, Father Gobien, Marsden, and others, is strongly marked. The inhabitants of eastern Oceanica speak the same language in different dialects, and this presents a singular analogy to that of the Malays, particularly that spoken in Sumatra.

Ochsenfurt, a town of Bavarian Franconia, seated on the Maine, 10 m. S. E. of Wurtzburg.

Ochsenhausen, a town of Wurtemberg, capital of a petty principality (formerly the territory of a rich abbey), which was given to prince Metternich in 1803. 14 m. S. of Ulm.

Ocracoke Inlet, the entrance to Pamlico Sound, in N. Carolina, 7 leagues S. W. of Cape Hatteras. Lat. 34. 55. N. It is 14 feet deep at low water.

Ocirida. See Lochrida.

Oczakow, or Otkahof, a decayed sea-port and fortress of Russia, in the government of Catharinen-slaf. It has been frequently an object of contest between the Turks and Russians, many thousands of whom, on both sides, have fallen in its different sieges. The Russians took it by storm in 1788, and it was confirmed to them by the subsequent peace. This important place is the key to both the Bog and the Dnieper, rivers of great consequence to this part of the empire. It is seated near the Black Sea, on the N. side of the estuary of the Dnieper, opposite Kibunr, 50 m. W. of Cherson and 190 N. E. of Constantinople. Long. 30. 30. E., lat. 46. 35. N.

Odenbach, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Deux Ponts; seated on the Glan, 34 m. W. of Mentz.

Odensee, a town of Denmark, capital of the isle of Funen, and a bishop's see. It supplies the greatest part of the army with all their leather accoutrements, and is particularly famous for gloves. Here are also manufactures of cloth, sugar, and soap; it is situate on a river, 6 m. from the bay of Stegestrand and 90 W. by S. of Copenhagen. Long. 10. 25. E., lat. 55. 30. N.

Oder, a river of the Austrian empire, which rises in the mountains of Moravia, and flows through Brandenburg and Pomerania. Below Stettin it forms a large lake or bay, called Gross Haff, and then enters the Baltic Sea by three channels, called Peene, Swin, and Diwenow; between which lie the islands of Usedom and Wollin.

Oderberg, a town of Moravia, on the confines of Silesia, with a castle, seated on the Oder, at the influx of the Elsa, 18 m. N. N. W. of Teschen.

Oderberg, a town of the Prussian province of Brandenburg, situate on the Oder, 25 m. N. W. of Custrin.

Odernheim, a town of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt, on the Seltz, 14 m. S. of Mentz.

Odernheim, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Deux Ponts; seated on the Glan, near its conflux with the Nahe, 28 m. S. W. of Mentz.

Odessa, a fortified sea-port of Russia, in the government of Catharinen-slaf. The town is well built, and is rapidly increasing in size and importance. The population is estimated at nearly 40,000 who carry on a good trade and have manufactures of woollens, silks, gunpowder, soap, &c. It is seated on a gulf of the Black Sea, 44 m. W. by S. of Oczakow and 99 E. of Cherson.

Odeypore. See Oudipore.

Odeypore, a town of Hindoostan, capital of Jushpour, in the province of Orissa. It is 60 m. N. E. of Rutenpour and 220 N. W. of Cuttack. Long. 83. 22. E., lat. 22. 37. N.

Odiham, a town in Hampshire, Eng. Here are the remains of an ancient castle, and of a royal palace, barns, &c. It is seated on the Basingstoke Canal, 24 m. N. E. of Winchester and 42 W. by S. of London.

Ochsfeld, a town of Prussian Saxony, seated on the Aller, 22 m. N. E. of Brunswick.

Ocksran, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, situate near the Flohe, 9 m. E. N. E. of Chemnitz.

Oelan, an island of Sweden, in the Baltic, separated from the coast of Gothland by a strait 12 m. broad in the narrowest part. It is 80 m. long, but not more than 9 broad. The N. part has fine forests, and quarries of excellent freestone the S. is more level, and very fertile. Both parts abound in alum mines. Bornholm, the chief town, is seated on the strait, 22 m. E. N. E. of Calmar. Long. 16 50. E., lat. 56. 48. N.

Oels, a town of Prussian Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, which now forms part of the government of Breslau, belonging to the duke of Brunswick. The town stands on a river of the same name, is surrounded with walls, and has a palace, formerly occupied by the prince. 17 m. E. N. E. of Breslau. Long. 17. 31. E., lat. 51. 12. N.

Oelsnitz, a town of Saxony, on the Elster, 6 m. S. by E. of Plauen.

Oepen, or Eupen, a town of the Netherlands, in Limburg, with considerable manufactures of cloth; situate on the Weze, 4 m. E. N. E. of Limburg.

Oesel, an island in the Baltic, on the coast of Livonia, at the entrance of the Gulf of Riga. It is 74 m. long and 50 broad, defended by two forts, and belongs to Russia. Arensburg is the capital.

Oetting, a town of Bavaria, seated on the Inn, 8 m. N. W. of Burcklausen.

Oetting, a town of Bavaria, with a well-endowed college. It is seated on the Wurnitz, 28 m. S of Anspach and 60 N. N. W. of Munich. Long. 10. 40. E., lat. 48. 56. N.

Offa's Dike, an entrenchment of England cast up by Offa, a Saxon king, to defend England from the incursions of the Welsh. It extends through Herefordshire, Shropshire, Montgomeryshire, Denbighshire, and Flintshire, from the Wye to the Dee.

Offanto, a river of Naples, which rises in the Apennines, passes by Conza and Monte Verde, separates Capitanata from Basilicata and Terra di Bari, and enters the gulf of Venice near Barletta. It is the ancient Aufidus.

Offen. See Buda.

Offenbach, a town of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt, and the principal manufacturing town in the duchy, seated on the S. side of the Maine, 5 m. E. of Frankfurt.

Offenburg, a town of Baden, seated on the Kintzig, 10 m. S. E. of Strasburg.

Offida, a town of Italy, in Ancona, 26 m. S. of Loreto.

Offutt's, p.v. Hampshire Co. Va.

Ogden, p.t. Monroe Co. N. Y. 10 m. N. W. Rochester. Pop. 2,401; p.v. Scott Co. Missouri.

Ogdensburg, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. on the river St. Lawrence, at the mouth of the Oswegatchie. It is the lowest point of ship navigation on the St. Lawrence from Lake Ontario; below, the river is obstructed by rapids. It is 120 m. above Montreal.

Ogeechee, a river of Georgia, flowing into the Atlantic, 20 m. S. Savannah.

Ogersheim, a town of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, 12 m. N. of Spire.

Oglethorpe, a county of Georgia. Pop. 13,558. Lexington is the capital.

Oglio, a river which rises in the principality of Trent, enters Italy, and flows between the provinces of Begamasco and Bresciano, through the lake of Isero, to the borders of the Milanese, and turning S. E. enters the Mantuan, where it joins the Po, above Borgoforte.

Ogmo, a town of the kingdom of Siam, seated at the N. E. point of the gulf of Siam, 56 m. S. E. of Siam. Long. 101. 28. E., lat. 13. 33. N.

Oheteron, an island in the S. Pacific, 13 m. in circuit. It has no harbour, and is neither so populous nor fertile as the islands to the N. of it; but its manufactures are of a superior kind, the cloth is of a better dye, and the spears and clubs are better carved and polished. The people are lusty and well made, and rather browner than those of Tahiti. Long. 150. 47. W., lat. 22. 27. S.

Ohio, a river of the United States flowing into the Mississippi, from the N. E. It is formed by the junction of the Allegany and Monongahela which rise in Pennsylvania and Virginia, and unite at Pittsburg in the former state. Its general course to the Mississippi is S. W. but it has innumerable sinuosities; its length in a straight line from Pittsburg to the Mississippi is 614 m. and by its windings 908. In the lower part of its course its width is about a mile. There is no obstruction to the navigation except the falls at Louisville, which are avoided by a canal. See Louisville. In winter and spring it is 50 feet deeper than at the end of summer, when it may be forded at the falls. The rains at the end of the year raise the water sometimes 12 feet in a day. Their highest elevation is in March. For half its length in the upper part, it is frozen in the winter, and the breaking up of the ice in March often occasions immense damage. In the spring of 1832 an uncommon flood of the river inundated a great part of Cincinnati, overflowed many other towns upon the banks, and destroyed a vast amount of property.

The Ohio is a very beautiful river, and the interval lands upon its borders are highly fertile. It embosoms more than 100 islands, and the scenery along its course is diversified with abrupt eminences, and extensive alluvial tracts covered with thick forests of sycamore, dogwood, and other beautiful trees. It is of great importance in the navigation of the western states and is connected with Lake Erie by a canal. See the following article.

Ohio Canal, unites the Ohio with Lake Erie. Beginning at Cleveland, on the lake, it proceeds southerly along the Cuyahoga, to the portage between this stream and the Tuscarawas; here it strikes the latter stream, and passes along its valley southwesterly. It then passes off to the Scioto and descends the valley of that river to the Ohio at Portsmouth. It is 306 m. in length, besides a lateral cut to Columbus of 11 m., and the Dresden-cut with slack water navigation of 17 m. It has 11,155 ft. of lockage. This canal was projected by the state of Ohio. It was begun in 1825, and is now nearly finished. It has cost less than 10,000 dollars a mile. Another canal joins the Ohio with the Miami. It leaves the Ohio at Cincinnati and extends northerly to Dayton on the Miami. It is 70 m. in length. A further communication is projected from this point to Lake Erie and the Ohio canal by rail-roads.

Ohio, one of the United States; bounded N. by Michigan Territory and Lake Erie, E. by Pennsylvania and Virginia, S. by Virginia and Kentucky and W. by Indiana. It extends from 38. 30. to 42. N. lat., and from 80. 35. to 84. 47. W. long. 220 m. in length and breadth, and containing 40, 000 sq. m. It is washed on the whole southern limit by the Ohio, and is intersected by its tributaries the Muskingum, Scioto and Great and Little Miami. The Maumee, Sandusky and Cuyahoga flow into Lake Erie. In this part, the state has 150 m. of coast, containing several harbours, the chief of which are those of Sandusky, Cleveland and Ashtabula. There are no mountains in the state, and hardly any hills. Most of the soil is susceptible of cultivation. In the north it is somewhat marshy; the banks of the rivers are highly fertile: in the interior are extensive plains of excellent soil, and the state altogether may be pronounced equal in fertility to almost any region of the earth. The forests consist of walnut, various species of oaks, hickory, sugar maple, and other sorts; beech, birch, poplar, ash, sycamore, paw-paw, buckeye, cherry, dogwood, elm, hornbeam, &c. With the exception of a few cypress trees, this state produces hardly any evergreens. Many sorts of medicinal roots are found here, as ginseng, valerian, columbo, snakeroot, and bloodroot. Coal is abundant in the eastern parts, as also iron, but there are few mines. Marble is plentiful, and salt springs furnish water nearly as strong as that of the sea. Near the falls of the Little Miami, are the Yellow Springs, the waters of which are a strong chalybeate, and in considerable esteem for their medicinal qualities.

The agricultural products are maize, wheat, rye, barley, oats, spelt and buckwheat. Fruits are abundant, and the soil is thought to be the best for garden vegetables of any in the western country. Tobacco has been lately introduced. Hemp is cultivated in some parts.

Ohio enjoys the most active commerce of all the western states. The northern and eastern counties export to Montreal and New York by the lake, great quantities of agricultural produce. But the chief of the exports are to New Orleans. The articles are flour, grain, pork, bacon, lard, whiskey, horses, and cattle.

The domestic manufactures are considerable, and there are some large manufactories of woolen, cotton, and paper, at Cincinnati, Zanesville, Steubenville, Dayton, and other places. The manufacture of steam machinery, and other articles from iron, is considerable. To these may be added linseed and castor oil, whiskey, cabinet furniture and salt.

The number of counties in Ohio is 73. The Pop. 937,637. Slavery is prohibited. The legislature is called the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are chosen for two years and the representatives for one. The Governor is chosen for two years. Suffrage is universal and elections are popular. Columbus is the seat of government and Cincinnati the largest city. The other towns of importance are Zanesville, Steubenville, Chillicothe, Dayton, Marietta and Circleville. There are 4 tribes of Indians in the state; the Wyandots, Shawnees, Delawares, and Ottawas. The Senecas have recently removed west of the Mississippi. The four tribes number about 1,500 souls, and own 336,341 acres of land, which is secured to them by treaty. Considerable annuities are paid them by the United States government

The most numerous religious sect are the Presbyterians; they have 203 ministers; the Baptists 140; the Methodists 91; the Lutherans 37; the Associate Presbyterians 20; the German Reformed 82; the Episcopalians 16; the Swedenborgians 4; there are also some Catholics, Unitarians, Universalists, Quakers and Shakers. Two universities enjoy endowments from the state; they are established at Athens and Oxford. There are also colleges at New Athens, Hudson and Gambier, and about 20 incorporated academies in different places.

The first settlement in Ohio was made at Marietta in 1783. A territorial government was established the next year. In 1802 it was admitted as a state into the Union. The fertility of the soil, and happy local position of the state for trade, have made it one of the most desirable regions of the western country for emigrants, and its increase in population and wealth has been almost unparalleled.

Ohlau, a town of Prussian Silesia, with a fine castle. Great quantities of tobacco are produced in the neighbourhood. It is situated on the Ohla, 16 m. S. E. of Breslau.

Ohdruf, a town of Saxony, in Saxe-Gotha, with a castle and numerous manufactures. 8 m. S. S. E. of Gotha.

Ohringen, a town of Wurtemberg, capital of the district of Hohenlohe, with an academy. In the vicinity of the town many Roman antiquities have been found since 1741. It stands on the river Ohrn, which divides it into the Old and New Town, 28 m. S. S. W. Mergentheim. Long. 9. 42. E., lat. 49. 11. N.

Oich, Loch, a lake of Scotland, in Invernesshire, extending 4 m. from E. to W., and containing some little wooded islands: its outlet at the N. end is the river Oich, which flows by Fort Augustus into the S. extremity of Loch Ness.

Oil Creek, p.t. Crawford Co. Pa., on a creek of the same name, falling into the Allegany.

Oiro, a town of Naples, in Terra d' Otranto, with an old castle, seated at the foot of the Apennines, 20 m. N. E. of Tarento.

Oise, a department of France, including part of the former provinces of the Isles of France and Picardy. It takes its name from the river Oise, which has its source in the Ardennes, and joins the Seine below Pontoise. Beauvais is the capital.

Okefonoko Swamp, in Georgia and Florida is a sort of marshy lake 180 m. in circumference giving rise to the rivers St. Mary and Suwany. During the wet season it has the appearance of an inland sea with numerous islands. It is inhabited by immense numbers of alligators, snakes, frogs, and all sorts of reptiles that are engendered in miry regions. Vast swarms of moschetoës infest the air in summer, and the poisonous vapours which the heat of the sun raises from its waters in that season render the neighbourhood uninhabitable for any human being.

Ockleconce, a river rising in Georgia, and flowing through Florida into Ockleconce Bay, 40 m. E. of the mouth of the Apalachicola.

Okotsk, a town of Siberia, capital of a province of the same name, in the government of Irkutsk. It is seated at the mouth of the Okota, in a bay of the Pacific Ocean, called the Sea of Okotsk, 490 m. E. S. of Yakutsk. Long. 143. 12. E., lat. 59. 20. N.

Oldenburg, a grand duchy of Germany, consisting of several scattered portions. Oldenburg Proper was formerly a county, united with Delmenhorst, and when the line of its counts became extinct, in 1667, it devolved to the royal family of Denmark. In 1773 it was exchanged by Denmark with the grand duke of Russia for the district of Kiel in Holstein; and, in 1777, the emperor of Germany raised it to the rank of a duchy. The reigning duke was expelled by Napoleon in 1810, but was restored in 1813, and at the congress of Vienna received the title of grand duke. He now possesses, besides Oldenburg Proper (including Delmenhorst and the lordships of Varel, Jever, and Kniphausen), the principality of Eutin (formerly the bishopric of Lubec) in Holstein and the lordship of Birkenfeld, ceded by Prussia out of the territory on the Rhine. The inhabitants are of the Lutheran religion.

Oldenburg, a fortified town of Germany, capital of the foregoing duchy, and the residence of the grand duke. The church of St. Lambert contains the tombs of the last counts of Oldenburg, which are very curious. It is seated on the Hunte, 22 m. W. of Bremen and 76 S. S. W. of Hamburg.

Oldenburg, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein, seated near the Baltic, 28 m. N. of Lubec.

Oldensael, a town of the Netherlands, in Overryssel, 30 m. E. of Deventer.

Oldeslohe, a town of Denmark, in Holstein, with extensive salt-works, seated on the Trave, 17 m. W. of Lubec.

Old Fort, p.v. Centre Co. Pa.; p.v. Burke Co. N. C.

Oldham, a town in Lancashire, Eng. built on high ground, on a branch of the Medlock, and near the Irk, whose streams give motion to the machinery, &c., of numerous manufactures, 7 m. N. of Manchester.

Oldham, a county of Kentucky on the Ohio. Pop. 9,563. Westport is the capital.

Old Point Comfort, a cape on the North entrance of James river, Va.

Old Town, or Indian Old Town, a settlement of Penobscot Indians on an island on Penobscot river, Maine, 12 m. above Bangor. They are about 300 in number, and have a Catholic priest and a school.

Old Town, p.t. Allegany Co. Md.; p.v. Ross Co. Ohio.

Occan, p.t. Cattaraugus Co. N. Y. Pop. 561.

Oleron, a populous and fertile island of France, 5 m. from the W. coast, opposite the mouth of the Charente. It is 20 m. long and 5 broad, and belongs to the department of Lower Charente. This island was formerly in the possession of the crown of England; and here Richard I. compiled the code of maritime laws called the Laws of Oleron, which are received by all nations in Europe as the ground and substruction of all their marine constitutions.

Oleron, a town of France, department of Lower Charente, with a castle; seated on the E. side of the island of Oleron, 13 m. W. S. W. of Rochefort. Long. 1. 15. W., lat. 45. 48. N.

Oleron, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, on the Gave, 10 m. S. W. of Pau.

Olika, a town of Poland, in Volhinia, with a citadel, 20 m. E. of Lucko.

Olinda. See Pernambuco.

Olita, a town of Spain, in Navarre, formerly the residence of the king of Navarre, but now much reduced. It is seated in a fertile country, 20 m. N. of Tudela.

Oliwa, a sea-port of W. Prussia, where a peace was concluded, in 1660, between the emperor of Germany and the kings of Sweden and Poland. It is situate on a bay of the gulf of Dantzic, 10 m. W. N. W. of Dantzic. Long. 18. 32. E., lat. 54. 24. N.

Oley, a township of Bucks Co. Pa.

Olive, townships in Morgan and Meigs Cos. Ohio.

Olivenca, a town and fortress of Spain, in Estremadura, which, with its territory, formerly belonged to Portugal, but was ceded to Spain in 1801. It is 16 m. S. S. W. of Badajoz.

Ollorton, a town of Nottinghamshire, Eng. seated on the river Maun, and surrounded by hop plantations, which contribute greatly to its prosperity. 14 m. N. W. of Newark and 137 N. by W. of London.

Olmedo, a decayed town of Spain, in Leon, seated near the Adaja, 25 m. S. of Valladolid.

Olmütz, a district or circle of the Austrian province of Moravia, containing 2,000 sq. m. with 347, 300 inhabitants. The N. part is mountainous, but the S. level and fertile.

Olmütz, the capital of the above district, and formerly of Moravia, is an archbishop's see, and has a famous university. It is fortified, well built, and almost surrounded by the river Morau. In 1741 it was taken by the king of Prussia who attempted it again in 1758, but was obliged to raise the siege. The emperors of Russia and Austria met here in 1805, previously to the battle of Austerlitz. It is 80 m. N. by E. of Vienna, and 97 S. of Breslau. Long. 17. 15. E., lat. 49. 33. N.

Olney, a town in Buckinghamshire, Eng. with a manufacture of bonelace; seated on the Ouse, 12 m. S. E. of Northampton and 55 N. N. W. of London.

Olonez, a government of Russia, formerly included in the government of Novogorod. In this district are mines of copper and iron. The capital is Petrozavodsk.

Olonez, a town of the foregoing government near which are a mineral spring and an iron forge. It is situate on the river Olonzo, near its entrance into the lake of Ladoga, 100 m. across the lake, N. E. of Petersburg.

Olonez Mountains, a chain of mountains in the N. W. part of Russia, which runs in a direction almost due N. for the space of 1,000 m. forming part of the boundary between this country and Sweden.

Olonne, a town of France, department of Vendee, 35 m. W. of Fontenay le Comte.

Olphen, a town of Prussian Westphalia, 17 m. S. S. W. of Munster.

Olsen, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Soleure; seated on the Aar, 17 m. E. N. E. of Soleure.

Olympion Springs, in Bath Co. Ken., near the source of Licking river; they are considerably frequented by invalids. The water contains iron, sulphur, and carbonic acid.

Olympus, a celebrated mountain of Natolia. The ancients supposed its top reached the heavens, and from that circumstance placed the residence of the gods there, and made it the court of Jupiter. It is 10 m. S. E. of Bursa. Also a mountain in Thessaly, separated from Ossa by the celebrated vale of Tempe; it is 6,000 feet in height. There is beside a mountain in the island of Candia with this name.

Omagh, a town of Ireland, in the county of Tyrone, 14 m. S. of Strabane.

Oman, a province of Arabia, bounded on the N. W. by the Persian Gulf, N. E. and S. E. by the ocean, and S. W. by extensive deserts. It is possessed by a number of petty sovereigns, the most considerable of whom is the imam of Rostak. The chief town is Mascat.

Ombo, a town of Egypt, on the right bank of the Nile, 26 m. N. of Esne.

Ombro, a town of Tuscany, in the Siennese, at the mouth of the river Ombrone, 5 m. S. of Grossetto.

Omegna, a town of the Sardinian states, province of Novara, on the N. E. side of Lake Orta, 25 m. N. N. W. of Novara.

Omer, St., a fortified town of France, department of Pas de Calais. It owes its name and importance to a saint, who built a grand monastery here in the 7th century. The cathedral and the church of St. Bertin are magnificent structures. About a league from the town is a great morass, in which are some floating islands. St. Omer is seated on the Aa, on the side of a hill, 8 m. N. W. of Aire and 135 N. of Paris. Long 2. 15. E., lat. 50. 44. N.

Ommen, a town of the Netherlands, in Overijssel, seated on the Vecht, 17 m. N. E. of Deventer.

Ommirabik. See Morbeys.

Omoa, a town of Honduras. It is seated on the bay of Honduras, 80 m. N. N. W. of Valladolid.

Omsk, a town and fortress of Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, situate at the conflux of the Om with the Irtysh, 350 m. S. E. of Tobolsk. Long. 74. 54. E., lat. 54. 14. N.

Onecote, a village in Staffordshire, Eng. 8 m. N. by E. of Cheadle, noted for the rich copper mines in its vicinity.

Onechow, one of the Sandwich Islands, in the N. Pacific, 5 leagues W. of Atooi. Its eastern coast is high, and rises abruptly from the sea, but the other parts consist of low ground, except a round bluff head on the S. E. point. It produces plenty of yams, and a sweet root called tee. Long. 161. 0. W., lat. 21. 50. N.

Oneg, a town of Russia, in the government of Archangel, on the river Onega, near the White Sea, 80 m. S. S. W. of Archangel. Long. 37. 54. E., lat. 63. 53. N.

Onega, a river and lake of Russia, in the government of Olonez. The lake is 100 m. long and 40 broad, and has a communication with the lake Ladoga. The river gives its name to a country full of woods, and flows into the White Sea.

Onglia, a province of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, surrounded by the territory of Genoa and the sea. It abounds in olive-oil, fruits, and wine.

Onglia, or Oneilla, a sea-port of Piedmont capital of the above province. In 1792, the French took it by storm, and set it on fire in several places. It is seated at the mouth of the Imperiale, 55 m. S. W. of Genoa. Long. 7. 57. E., lat. 43. 58. N.

Oneida, a lake of New York discharging its water into L. Ontario. It has a canal communication with the Mohawk. It is 20 m. long and 4 broad.

Oneida, a county of New York lying upon the above lake. Pop. 41,326. Utica is the capital.

Oneida Castle, p.v. Oneida Co. N. Y.

One Leg, a township in Tuscarawas Co. Ohio, 114 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 1,645. The genius that invented this name must have been a limping concern.

Oneskoë, a lake of Russia, in the government of Olonetz, 120 m. long and 40 broad. It contains several islands.

Ongar, or Chipping Ongar, a town in Essex, Eng. 21 m. E. N. E. of London.

Ongolt, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, capital of a district of its name belonging to Britain. It is 78 m. S. S. W. of Condapilly and 166 N. by W. of Madras. Long. 79. 56. E., lat. 15. 23. N.

Onion, one of the principal rivers of Vermont, which flows through a fertile country, and after a course of 70 m. falls into Lake Champlain.

Onondaga, a lake of New York communicating with lake Ontario. It is 6 m. long and 1 broad.

Onondaga, a county of New York on the above lake. Pop. 58,974. Syracuse is the capital.

Onondaga, p.t. in the above county 50 m. W. Utica. Pop. 5,668. Here are very large salt works. See Salina.

Onrust, a small island near the coast of Java, at the mouth of the harbour of Batavia. Here the Dutch formerly repaired their ships, and had large warehouses, which were destroyed by the British.

Onslow, a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 7,814.

Ontario, a lake of N. America, situate between 75. and 79. W. long., and 43. and 44. N. lat. Its length is 180 m. and 50 its medium breadth. On its S. W. part it receives the waters of lake Erie by the river Niagara, and near the S. E. the Onondago River; and on the N. E. is its outlet the river Iroquois, or St. Lawrence. It is 500 m. in circumference, and abounds with fish, among which are the Oswego bass, weighing three or four pounds. The islands are principally at the eastern end. The chief harbours are York and Kingston, belonging to the British, and Sackets' Harbour belonging to the Americans.

Ontario, a county of New York. Pop. 40,167. Canandaigua is the capital; also a county in Upper Canada.

Ontario, p.t. Wayne Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,587.

Oodamally a town of Hindoostan, in Coimbatore, 30 m. S. S. E. of Coimbatore.

Oomalashka, one of the islands of the Northern Archipelago, visited by Cook in his last voyage. The natives are described as very peaceable. Fish and other-sea animals, birds, roots, berries, and even sea weed, compose their food. They dry quantities of fish during the summer, which they lay up in small huts for their use in winter. Their clothing is chiefly composed of skins. The upper garment, made like a wagoner's frock, reach down to the knees. Besides this, they wear a waistcoat or two, a pair of breeches, a fur cap, and boots. They manufacture mats and baskets of grass, which are both strong and beautiful; and there is a neatness and perfection in most of their works, which shows that they are not deficient in ingenuity and perseverance. Long. 165. 0. W., lat. 53. 5. N.

Oostborch, a town and fort of the Netherlands, in the Isle of Cadsand, 4 m. N. E. of Sluys.

Oostenby, a town of Sweden, in the Isle of Oeland, 27 m. S. of Borkholm.

Ootatore, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, 22 m. N. N. W. of Tanjore and 80 S. W. of Pondicherry.

Opelousas, p.v. St. Landry Parish, Louisiana. 223 m. N. W. New Orleans.

Opheim, a town of Norway, in the province of Bergen, 45 m. N. N. E. of Bergen.

Oporto, or Porto, a city and sea-port of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, and a bishop's see. It is by nature almost impregnable; and is noted for its strong wines, of which large quantities are exported to England; whence all red wines from Spain and Portugal are called Port wines. The other chief exports are oranges, lemons, oil, sumach, and linen cloth. Its commerce greatly increased after the earthquake at Lisbon, in 1755; before that time the population was estimated at 20,000, and it is now said to be 70,000. It is seated on the side of a mountain, near the river Douro, which forms an excellent harbour, 172 m. N. by E. of Lisbon. Long. 8. 22. W., lat. 41 10. N.

Oppeln, a province of the Prussian states, comprising the greater part of Upper Silesia. It consists chiefly of hills and mountains abounding with extensive forests, and containing a large store of valuable minerals. The district called the principality of Oppeln, including more than half this province, was formerly governed by its own duke.

Oppeln, the capital of the above province, with a Catholic collegiate church. It has a great trade in wool, and stands on the Oder, 150 m. S. E. of Breslau. Long. 18. 0. E., lat. 50. 39. N.

Oppenheim, a town of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt. The vicinity produces excellent wine. It is seated on the side of a hill, near the Rhine, 12 m. S. S. E. of Mentz.

Oppenheim, a township of Montgomery Co. N. Y. on the Mohawk. Pop. 3,650.

Oppido, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, at the foot of the Apennines, 25 m. N. E. of Reggio.

Oppido, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, 5 m. S. S. E. of Acerenza.

Oppurg, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Meissen, with a castle, 4 m. W. S. W. of Neustadt.

Orach, a town of European Turkey, in Bosnia, near the river Drino, 60 m. S. W. of Belgrade.

Oran, a city and sea-port of Algiers, in the province of Tremecen, with an excellent harbour, almost opposite Carthage in Spain. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1509, and re-taken in 1708. In 1732 the Spaniards became masters of it again. In 1790 it was destroyed by an earthquake, little besides the exterior walls being left standing, when 2,000 persons perished. 225 m. W. N. W. of Algiers. Long. 0. 5. W., lat. 35. 58. N.

Oran, p.v. Onondaga Co. N. Y.

Orange, a city of France, in the department of Vancluse, and a bishop's see. It was an important place in the time of the Romans, but at present is remarkable only for its antiquities. A triumphal arch, 200 paces from the town, was formerly within its limits; and here are also the remains of a fine amphitheatre, some aqueducts, &c. The fortifications were demolished by Louis XIV. in 1682. The chief manufactures are linen, serge, and paper. The city is seated in a fine plain, on the river Aigues, 12 m. N. of Avignon and 57 S. of Valence.

Orange, a county of Vermont. Pop. 27,286. Chelsea is the capital. A county of New York. Pop. 45,372. Goshen is the capital. A county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 14,637. Orange is the capital. A county of N. Carolina. Pop. 23,875. Hillsborough is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 7,909. Paoli is the capital.

Oranienburg, a town of Prussia, in the Middle Mark of Brandenburg; situate on the Havel, 18 m. N. of Berlin.

Oratava, a town on the W. side of the island of Teneriffe, and the chief place of trade. It is seated at the bottom of an amphitheatre of mountains, out of which rises the Peake of Teneriffe. Its port is at 3 m. distance. Long. 16. 24. W., lat. 28. 23. N.

Orbassan, a town of Piedmont, with 1,700 inhabitants, 6 m. S. W. of Turin.

Orbe, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, 32 m. W. S. W. of Bern.

Orbe, a town of Germany, in the late electorate of Mentz, celebrated for its salt works, 26 m. E. of Frankfurt.

Orbitello, a sea-port of Tuscany, in the province of Sienna, with a good harbour, protected by several forts. It is seated on the Mediterranean, near the mouth of the Albegna, 63 m. S. by W. of Sienna. Long. 11. 6. E., lat. 42. 28. N.

Orbre, a river of France, which rises in the Cevennes, flows by Beziers, and enters the gulf of Lions at Serignan.

Orcades. See Orknecys.

Orcieus, a town of France, department of Nord, 12 m. S. S. E. of Lisle.

Orechilla, a cluster of small islands in the Caribbean Sea, N. of the coast of Terra Firma. Long. 65. 20. E., lat. 12. 0. N.

Orechimont, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Luxemburg, situate on the Semoy, 15 m. N. of Sedan.

Ordningen, a town of Germany, in the late electorate of Cologne; seated near the Rhine, 36 m. N. N. E. of Cologne.

Orduna, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated in a valley surrounded by high mountains, 20 m. S. W. of Bilbao.

Orrebro, a government of Sweden, comprising the old province of Nericia, part of Westmannland, and a small part of Warmeland. It contains 1,780 square miles, with 100,000 inhabitants.

Orrebro, the capital of the above mentioned government has a considerable trade with Stockholm, across the lakes Hiellnar and Maeler, by means of the river and canal of Arboga; sending iron, vitrol, and red paint, in particular, to that capital. In the middle of the town, on a small island formed by the Swart, stands the castle, formerly a royal residence. It is seated near the W. extremity of the lake Hiellnar, 100 m. W. by S. of Stockholm. Long. 15. 12. E., lat. 59. 30. N.

Oregon, or Columbia, a river of the United States flowing into the Pacific Ocean. It rises in the Rocky Mountains about lat. 55. N. and flows S. W. to the Sea in lat. 46. 15. N. Its length is 1,500 m., and it has several large tributaries as Clark's River, Lewis's River, and the Multnomah. Its head streams are near those of the Missouri, and its course is considerably obstructed by falls, but it admits a navigation 180 m. from its mouth. All its waters abound in fine salmon, and towards the sea, they contain great numbers of seals.

Oregon Territory, the popular name of all that part of the United States territory west of the Rocky Mountains, watered by the abovementioned river. It extends from 42. to 51. N. lat. along the coast of the Pacific Ocean. It is bounded N. by the Russian and British American possessions, E. by the Rocky Mountains, S. by the Mexican territories, and W. by the Pacific. Between the Rocky Mountains and the sea is another chain through which the Oregon river passes at the great falls, and still farther west another ridge runs parallel with the coast at about 150 m. distance. These ridges are lofty, and their peaks are covered with perpetual snow. Among these mountains, there are sheltered and fertile valleys. The timber in the mountains is pine, spruce, fir, &c. The plains generally have a fine soil; but are very deficient in timber. The prairies, like those on the eastern sides of these mountains, are covered with grass, and a profusion of most beautiful flowers. Among the prairie plants are two or three kinds of edible roots, which furnish vegetable food to the savages, as an aid to the great proportion of salmon, which they devour. Wild sage is also an abundant herb. It grows of a height equal to that of small tree; and on these extensive plains is one of the principal articles of fuel. The sea shore, for a considerable distance to the interior, is skirted with deep and thick forests of evergreens, such as pine and hemlock. Sheltered on the north by protecting ridges of mountains, and the breezes from the west being softened by coming over immense extents of sea, the climate is as mild as it is in the country east of these mountains four or five degrees south of that point. When Lewis and Clark left the country in March, and in the latitude of Montreal, the prairies were in blossom, and the forwardness of the season seems to have corresponded with that of North Carolina at the same time. The winters are rainy, and some parts of them severe.

The Spaniards first discovered this country. The river was discovered by Captain Gray, in the ship Columbia of Boston; and it was explored in 1805 by Lewis and Clark. A settlement of fur traders was made at its mouth by the Americans, but it was afterwards abandoned. The Indians in the territory are numbered at 140,000. On the northern part of the coast is Nootka Sound lying between a large island and the continent. The savages which inhabit these parts are better known than any other of the Northwestern tribes.

These savages call themselves Wakash. Their height is above the middle stature, and they are of a muscular frame. Their features are characterized by a prominence of the cheek-bones. Their face is often very much compressed above the cheeks, and appears to sink abruptly between the temples. Their nose, flat at the base, is marked by wide nostrils, and a round point. Their forehead is low, their eyes small and black, and their lips, broad, thick and round. In general, they are entirely destitute of beard, or, at most have only a small thin tuft at the point of their chin. This deficiency, however, is perhaps owing to an artificial cause; for, some of them, and, especially their old men, have bushy beards, and even mustachios. Their eye-brows are scantily supplied with hair, and are always straight; but they have a considerable quantity of very harsh, and very strong hair on their head, which, without a single exception, is black and straight, and floats on their shoulders. A coarse dress of linen, with a covering from the skin of the bear or seaotter, red, black, and white pigments, with which they besmear their body, the whole of their ordinary costume, in short, forms the image of wretchedness and ignorance. Their war-dress is extraordinary. They muffle up their head with pieces of wood, carved into the representation of eagles, wolves, and porpoises' heads. Several families live together in the same hut, the wooden half partitions of which, give it the appearance of a stable. Some of their woolen stuffs, although manufactured without a loom, are very good, and are ornamented with figures of a brilliant colour. They carve clumsy statues of wood.

Their light canoes, which are flat and broad, bound over the waves in the steepest manner, without the assistance of the outrigger, or balance board, an essential distinction between the canoes of the American tribes, and those of the southern parts of the East Indies, and the islands of Oceania.

Öregrund, a sea-port of Sweden, in Upland, on the gulf of Bothnia, opposite the small island of Ginson. The chief article exported is iron, from the long celebrated mine of Dannemora in its vicinity. It is 70 m. N. of Stockholm. Long. 18. 5. E., lat. 60. 21. N.

Orël, a government of Russia, once a province of the government of Bielgorod. Its capital of the same name, is seated on Oeca and Orel, 207 m. S. S. W. of Moscow. Long. 35. 20. E., lat. 53. 0. N.

Orellana, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, 23 m. E. of Marida.

Orenburg, a government of Asiatic Russia, bounded by European Russia and the government of Tobolsk.

Orenburg, a town and fortress of the above government. It is a place of considerable commerce, and is seated on the Ural, 260 m. S. S. E. of Ufa. Long. 55. 4. E., lat. 51. 46. N.

Orense, a city of Spain, in Galicia, and a bishop's see. Here are some celebrated tepid and hot springs. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Minho, 47 m. S. E. of Compostella. Long. 7. 50. W., lat. 42. 22. N.

Orfa, Ourfu, or Roauh, a city of Turkey, in Diarbeck, said to be the Ur of the Chaldees. The walls are 3 m. in circumference, defended by square towers; on a rocky hill to the S. is a stately castle. It has a good trade, particularly in carpets and leather, and has a canal to the Euphrates. The country round is fertile in corn and fruit. It is 83 m. N. E. of Aleppo and 100 S. W. of Diarbeckir. Long. 38. 20. E., lat. 36. 50. N.

Orford, a borough in Suffolk, Eng. Here are the remains of a castle, which, with the church, is a sea-mark. It is seated near the German Ocean, between two channels, 18 m. E. by N. of Ipswich and 88 N. E. of London.

Orford, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H. Pop. 1,829; townships in Kent and Suffolk Co. U. C.

Orford Ness, a cape of England, on the S. E. coast of Sussex, where a light-house is erected for the direction of ships. Long. 1. 34. E., lat. 52. 4. N.

Orgaz, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a castle, 15 m. S. of Toledo.

Orgelet, a town of France, department of Jura, seated at the source of the Valouse, 30 m. S. S. W. of Salins.

Orgiva, a town of Spain, in the province of Granada, 25 m. S. of Granada.

Orient. See L'Orient.

Orihuela, a town of Spain, in Murcia, and a bishop's see, with a university, and a citadel built on a rock. The inhabitants have manufactures of silk, brandy distilleries, and some salt-petre works; and here are made curious snuff-boxes, with the roots of the terebinthus, much esteemed for preserving Spanish snuff. It is seated in a very fertile country, on the Segura, 12 m. N. E. of Murcia.

Oriskany, p.v. Oneida Co. N. Y. 7 m. from Utica. Here are manufactures of cotton and woolen cloths.

Orissa, a province of Hindoostan, bounded on the N. by Bahar and Bengal, W. by Berar, S. by Golconda, and E. by the bay of Bengal. The greater part of the province now belongs to the British. It is divided into the districts of Cuttack, Mohurbunge, and Konjeur.

Oristagni, a fortified town of Sardinia, and an archbishop's see, with a good harbour. It is seated on the W. coast, on a bay of the same name, 42 m. N. W. of Cagliari. Long. 8. 51. E., lat. 39. 53. N.

Orkened, a town of Sweden, in Schonen, 24 m. N. of Christianstad.

Orkney Islands, the ancient Orcades, a cluster of islands to the N. of Scotland, from which they are separated by Pentland Frith. They lie between 57. and 35. and 49. 16. N. lat., and are about 30 in number, but several are small and uninhabited. The largest is sometimes dignified with the appellation of Mainland, but is more frequently called Pomona. Beyond this island, to the N. E., are seen, among others, Rowsa, Eglissha, and Westra Shappinsha and Edda; Stronsa, Sanda, and N. Ronalsha; and to the S. appear Hoy, and S. Ronalsha, with others of inferior note. The currents and tides which flow between these islands are rapid and dangerous, and near the small isle of Swinna are two whirlpools, very dangerous to mariners, especially in calms. The sea coast swarms with seals and otters, and is visited by whales, cod, ling, and haddocks, herrings and other fish; and on the shores are found large oysters, muscles, cockles, &c. The islands are visited by eagles, falcons, wild geese and ducks in great variety, herons, hawks, gulls, &c. Springs of pure water are found in all the mountainous parts, and there are numerous lakes and rivulets abounding in fish. The heath on the mountains shelter grouse, plovers, snipes, &c., but there are no partridges, hares, nor foxes. There are great numbers of small sheep and black cattle, swine, rabbits, and red deer. The products of the valleys and plains are chiefly big and oats. Except juniper, wild myrtle, heath, and a shrub called cyorhordon, there is scarcely a tree or plant to be seen; but this nakedness cannot have been their former state, as many trunks of large oaks are to be found in all the mosses. The climate in summer is moist and cold, but in winter there is very little snow, and that lies only a short time. Preceding the autumnal equinox, dreadful storms of wind rain, and thunder occur. For about three weeks in midsummer these islands enjoy the rays of the sun almost without intermission; but, for the same space in winter, that luminary hardly rises above the horizon, and is commonly obscured by clouds and mists. In this gloomy season the absence of day is supplied partly by moon-light and partly by the radiance of the Aurora Borealis, which here gives a light nearly equal to that of a full moon. The coasts afford numerous bays and harbours for the fisheries. The chief exports are hnen and woolen yarn, stockings, butter, dried fish, herrings, oil, feathers, and skins of various kinds, and kelp. The English language prevails in all these islands, although there are many words in the Norse, or Norwegian, still in use. The inhabitants have the general character of being frugal, sagacious, circumspect and hospitable; but the common people are superstitious. The Orkney and Shetland Isles unite in sending one member to the imperial parliament.

Orlamunda, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Gotha, seated on the Saale opposite the influx of the Orla, 40 m. W. S. W. of Altenburg.

Orland, p.t. Hancock Co. Me. Pop. 975.

Orlando, a cape on the N. coast of Sicily, 15 m. W. by N. of Patti. Long. 15. 4. E., lat. 35. 14. N.

Orlean, p.t. Fauquier Co. Va.

Orleans, a city of France, capital of the department of Loiret, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Loire, and has a canal thence to the Loing, near Montargis. Under the sons of Clovis, it was the capital of a kingdom. In 1423 it stood a memorable siege against the English, which was raised by the celebrated Joan of Arc, called the Maid of Orleans. It is now considered one of the largest and most pleasant cities in France. The principal public buildings are the cathedral, town house, court of justice, mint, and theatre.

The trade consists in stockings, sheepskins, wine, brandy, corn, grocery, and particularly sugar, which is brought raw from Nantes and Rochelle. The fauxbourg of Paris is of a prodigious length, and that of the Olivet, on the left side of the Loire, has a communication with the city by a bridge of nine arches. Near the city is a forest, containing 94,000 acres, planted with oak and other valuable trees. Orleans is 30 m. N. E. of Blois and 60 S. S. W. of Paris. Long. 1. 54. E., lat. 47. 54. N.

Orleans, a county of Vermont. Pop. 13,980. Irasburgh is the capital. A parish of Louisiana. Pop. 3,793.

Ormea, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated on the river Tanaro, 12 m. S. of Mondovi.

Ormskirk, a town in Lancashire, Eng. The chief branch of trade is cotton spinning; coarse thread is also made for sail-cloth. 3 m. N. by E. of Liverpool and 209 N. N. W. of London.

Ormus, a small island in a strait of the same name, at the entrance of the gulf of Persia, 9 m. S. of Gombron. In 1505 the Portuguese were permitted to form a settlement here, and it was afterwards frequented by a number of rich merchants. In 1622 the Persians, by the assistance of the English, expelled the Portuguese and demolished the buildings. Some time after the Persians rebuilt the fort, and, though they could never bring it to be a place of trade as before, it is still the key of the gulf of Persia, on account of the commodiousness of the harbour. It is almost deserted; for it produces nothing but salt, which sometimes is two inches deep upon the surface of the earth. Long. 56. 25. E., lat. 27. 20. N.

Ornans, a town of France, department of Doubs, seated on the Louvre, 10 m. S. E. of Besançon.

Orne, a department of France, including the old province of Perche and part of that of Normandy. It takes its name from a river which rises in the department, and runs into the English Channel 8 m. below Caen. The capital is Alençon.

Oronoco, or Orinoco, a river of S. America which issues from the small lake Ipava, in lat. 5. 5. N., flows E. and S. E. to the lake Parima, from which it runs toward the W.; but, after receiving the Guaviari, it bends N., then N. E. and E., till it enters the Atlantic by an extended delta of mouths opposite the isle of Trinidad; but the principal one is considerably to the S. E. of that island, in lat. 8. 30. N. In this singular winding course, estimated at 1,400 m. it receives many large rivers; and its chief estuary is so deep and impetuous as to stem the most powerful tides. See Parima.

Orons, a small fertile island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S. of Colonsa. Here are the ruins of an abbey, with many sepulchral statues, and some curious ancient sculpture.

Ossuna, a town of Spain, in Andalusia. It was formerly strong, but less by its ramparts than by a fountain in the middle of the town, which furnished the inhabitants with water, while the country for 8 m. round was totally deprived of that necessary article. 50 m. E. N. E. of Seville. Long. 5. 8. W., lat. 37. 22. N.

Ostalic, a town of Spain, in Catalonia. It had a strong castle, taken by the French and demolished in 1695. It is seated on the Tordera, 28 m. N. E. of Barcelona.

Ostend, a fortified sea-port of the Netherlands, in W. Flanders, seated among a number of canals, and almost surrounded by two of the largest of them, into which ships of great burden may enter with the tide. It is famous for the long siege it sustained from the Spaniards, from July 1601 to September 1604, when it capitulated on honorable terms. On the death of Charles II., of Spain, the French seized Ostend; but in 1706, after the battle of Ramillies, it was retaken by the allies. It was again taken by the French in 1745, but restored in 1748. In the war of 1756 the French garrisoned this town for the empress queen, Maria Theresa. In 1792 it was once more captured by the French; evacuated in 1793; and repossessed in 1794. In 1798 a body of British troops landed here, and destroyed the works of the Bruges Canal; but, the wind shifting before they could re-embark, they were compelled to surrender to the French. 10 m. W. of Bruges and 22 N. E. of Dunkirk. Long. 2. 56. E., lat. 51. 14. N.

Osterhofen, a town of Bavaria, seated on the Danube, 20 m. W. N. W. of Passau.

Oszuiana, a town of Russian Lithuania, in the government of Wilna, 32 m. S. E. of Wilna.

Otaha, one of the Society Islands, in the S. Pacific. It lies N. of Ulitea; and is divided from it by a strait, which, in the narrowest part, is not more than 2 m. broad. This island is smaller and more barren than Ulitea, but has two good harbours.

Otaheite, or Tahiti, an island in the S. Pacific, discovered in 1767 by captain Wallis, who called it George the Third's Island. Captain Cook, who came hither in 1768 to observe the transit of Venus, sailed round the whole island in a boat, and staid three months: it was visited twice afterwards by that celebrated navigator. It consists of two peninsulas, about 30 leagues in circumference. Great part of it is covered with woods, consisting partly of bread-fruit trees, palms, cocoa-nut trees, plantians, bananas, mulberries, sugar-canes, and others peculiar to the climate, particularly a kind of pineapple and the dragontree. The birds most common are two sorts of parroquets, one of a beautiful sapphirine blue, another of a greenish color, with a few red spots; a king-fisher, of a dark green, with a collar of the same hue round its white throat; a large cuckoo, several sorts of pigeons or doves; and a bluish heron. The only quadrupeds found on the island were hogs, dogs, and rats. The inhabitants have mild features, and a pleasing countenance. They are about the ordinary size of Europeans, of a pale mahogany brown, with fine black hair and eyes. Their provisions are chiefly fish, pork, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, and bananas; and they employ sea-water as a sauce both to fish and pork. Nothing can exceed their agility in swimming, diving, and climbing trees; and they are praised for their gentleness, good nature, and hospitality. Previously to the introduction of European habits, the men wore a piece of cloth round their middle, and another wrapped about the head, like a turban; the women had a piece of cloth, with a hole in the middle, through which they passed their heads, so that one part of the garment hung down behind and the other before to the knees, a fine white cloth, like muslin, passing over this in various elegant turns round the body. Tatooing was common among both sexes. Their houses had seldom any walls, but consisted only of a roof, thatched with the long prickly leaves of the palm tree, and supported by a few pillars made of the bread-fruit tree.—The native cloth is made of the fibrous bark of the mulberry tree, which is beaten with a kind of mallet, and a glue, made of the hibiscus esculentus is employed to make the bark cohere. Some of these pieces are two or three yards wide and 50 yards long. Omai, a native of this island, was carried to England by captain Cook, and carried back by him in his last voyage. In 1799 king Pomare ceded the district of Matavia, on the N. side of this island, to some of the missionaries belonging to the London Missionary Society, through whose labors all the inhabitants of Otaheite and many of the neighbouring islands have been led to renounce idolatry. The sovereign himself became a decided convert to Christianity. A general reformation of manners has been effected, a number of schools established, the useful arts introduced, and civilization is rapidly advancing. Point Venus is in long. 149. 36. W., lat. 17. 29. S.
